1. The Orange Hussars.—This company was organized in 1793. At that time it had its headquarters in the town of Montgomery, but subsequently removed them to Coldenham, in Newburgh. It was organized under the auspices of Joseph Barbour; was for many years under the command of William Wright; was on duty in 1812, and was again called to the field during the anti-rent troubles in 1846. It was detached from the Second Regiment of cavalry, Aug. 30, 1844, and attached to the Fourteenth (Nineteenth) Regiment, and disbanded in 1863, at which time it was under the command of William C. Brewster.

2. Capt. Acker's Company of Cavalry.—A company of cavalry was organized under the command of William Acker, about the year 1804, and continued in existence until 1837 or 1838. It was composed of members residing in the north part of the town and in the adjoining towns of Ulster, and was in service on Long Island in 1812-13. Capt. Acker was succeeded by Nathaniel DuBois, who served for several years. The last captain of the company was Robert D. Mapes, of Marlborough. The uniform of the company consisted of red coats with buff facings and buff pantaloons.

3. The Republican Blues.—This company was probably formed about the commencement of the present century. It appears to have been in a very flourishing condition in 1807 (when it stood on the roll of the regiment as Company No. 1), and to have continued so until 1814. It was composed almost entirely of natives of Ireland or their descendants, and hence was familiarly known as the Irish Blues. Very few companies in the State exhibited a more patriotic spirit than did the Blues. In 1807, during the discussions which eventuated in the second war with England, it tendered its services to the Governor to aid in the public defense, and from that time until 1812, when it was ordered to Staten Island, it stood ready to take the field. From the time of its organization until 1813 it was under the command of Alex. Denniston.† Its officers in 1809 were Alex. Denniston, captain; George Gordon, first sergeant; James Alexander, second sergeant; Paul Stewart, third sergeant; Thomas Kelso, fourth sergeant; William Camack, first corporal; John Kernochan, second corporal; James Coleman, third corporal; Isaiah Titus, fourth corporal. From 1813 to 1815 it was under the command of James Hamilton. Its uniform consisted of a blue dress, and caps made in the form of a Roman helmet. The organization of the company was so broken up during the war that its disbandment took place June 3, 1815, "in consequence of not having a complement of men agreeable to the statute."

4. Capt. Birdsall's Company.—The date of the organization of this company cannot now be ascertained. In 1809 it stood on the roll of the regiment as Company No. 2, and was then under the command of the following officers, viz.: Charles Birdsall, captain; Abel Belknap, first sergeant; John Polhamus, second sergeant; Jeremiah Albertson, third sergeant; Briggs Belknap, fourth sergeant; George Marvin, first corporal; William P. Hatch, second corporal; David Sands, third corporal; Joseph Albertson, fourth corporal. These officers served until 1814, when Robert Gardiner was elected lieutenant, and Sylvester Roe ensign. The uniform of the company was the same as that of the Republican Blues, with the exception of the facings of the coat; and, like its contemporary, it was in service on Staten Island in 1812. The same causes which led to the disbandment of the former struck the latter from the roll of the regiment June 3, 1815.

5. Capt. Butterworth's Artillery Company.—This company was organized Nov. 2, 1804, and had its headquarters at the McIntosh house on Liberty Street. It was first under the command of William Ross, who served as captain until 1810 or 1811, when he was succeeded by Henry Butterworth. Its headquarters were then removed to Balmville, where an artillery house was erected. In 1812, while under the command of Capt. Butterworth, the company was stationed on Staten Island. Positive facts in reference to its subsequent history cannot be obtained, but it is said that Charles Clinton was its captain in 1819 or 1820; in 1822, James Kelso, captain; Robert Lockwood, first lieutenant; Gilbert Holmes, ensign; 1829, John B. Cromwell, captain, and afterwards Thornton M. Niven. As the artillery was embraced in a separate regiment (of which T. D. Lander was colonel), the roster of the Nineteenth contains very little in reference to this company.

In addition to the uniformed companies there were three companies of militia, which in 1812 were known as follows, viz.: No. 4, or Capt. Daniel T. Smith's company,—Daniel T. Smith, captain; Daniel Tooker, first sergeant; Nathaniel Tooker, second sergeant; James Waring, third sergeant; Henry Cosman, drummer. No. 5, or Capt. Seth Belknap's company,—Seth Belknap, captain; Charles Humphrey, first sergeant; Sovereign B. Anderson, second sergeant; James Crawford, third sergeant; William Belknap, fourth sergeant; Hezekiah Fairchild, first corporal; James Wayland, second corporal; Robert Gourlay, third corporal; John Wood, Jr., fourth corporal. No. 7, or Capt. Falls' company,—William H. Falls, captain; Robert Lawson, lieutenant; James Belknap, first sergeant; James M. Gardiner, second sergeant; William W. Sackett, third sergeant; Stephen Belknap, fourth sergeant; Gilbert W. Crissey, first corporal; Samuel G. Sneden, second corporal; Gardiner Thompson, third corporal; Daniel Gidney, fourth corporal. These companies were in existence until 1846.

* Several changes have been made in the boundaries of the district, and the regiment has been numbered the 4th, the 14th, and the 19th.

† In 1812 (Nov. 30th), Capt. Denniston proposed the organization of a company of volunteers, to serve for one year or during the war, and succeeded in enlisting about fifty men, who elected Jonathan Gidney captain. The company went to New York, and there formed part of a detached regiment of riflemen. Denniston was appointed major in this regiment, and the vacancy thus created in the captaincy of the Blues was filled by James Hamilton.

In 1817, James Belknap, John W. Brown, and others effected the organization of a company of infantry, subsequently known as the Bell-Button Company. Its first officers were James Belknap, captain; William Smith, lieutenant; John W. Brown, ensign. In 1822, William Smith was captain; Samuel G. Sneden, lieutenant; and Fred. W. Farnam, ensign. In 1824, Charles Niven, captain; Thomas Smith, lieutenant; and E. Ward Farrington, ensign. The uniform of the company consisted of a blue short jacket ornamented with bell-buttons, blue pantaloons, and a cap with ornament and plume. It was disbanded in 1824, and its active members united with the other military associations of the town, viz.:

1. The Village Guard.—This company was organized in 1822 under the command of Henry B. Myers. Its uniform consisted of a blue cloth coat, white vest and pantaloons, a black stock or cravat, white webbing cross and waist belts, a leather cap trimmed with an armor or scale chain plate, with a black vulture plume and cockade. It preserved its organization until 1846, when it was disbanded under the militia law of that year. The following list of the officers of the company is from the roster of the regiment:

Its uniform was the same as that adopted by the Village Guard, with the exception of the plume, which was white. It was disbanded under the militia law of 1846, at which time it numbered about seventy muskets. The following list of its officers is from the books of the company:

The operation of the law of 1846 was disastrous to uniformed companies. This law provided for the organization of only one company in each company district; and by its rearrangement of the regimental districts confined the Nineteenth to the county of Orange, thereby cutting off such members of the Newburgh companies as resided in Ulster. The Orange Hussars alone survived the measure. The law of 1854, however, was more favorable, and led to the organization of five companies, viz.:

1. The Washington Continental Guard (Co. D).—The organization of this company was perfected by Mr. Robert D. Kemp and nineteen others, Nov. 22, 1855. It adopted the Continental uniform of 1780, which was procured at a cost of $3400; but was subsequently compelled to substitute, on general parade, the regular uniform of the militia. Its original roll embraced the names of forty-two men. Its officers were,—

Captains, R. D. Kemp, Isaac Wood, Jr., Michael Doyle, Thos. S. Marvel, Jr., Isaac Jenkinson, Isaac M. Martin, James T. Chase.

First Lieutenants, George M. Van Nort, Isaac Wood, Jr., Isaac Jenkinson, Wm. M. Hathaway, Wm. B. Marvin, Archibald Ferguson, Jas. T. Chase, Geo. W. Hawkins, John S. Terwilliger.

Second Lieutenants, Isaac Jenkinson, Michael Doyle, Wm. M. Hathaway, Wm. B. Marvin, John Bocock, George C. Marvin, George W. Hawkins, Nathaniel Jackson, John S. Terwilliger, Christian F. Dietzeroth, James F. Niel.

2. Powell Corps (Co. E).—The Powell Corps was organized Dec. 1, 1857. Its officers were,— Captains, J. N. Arnold (1857), Eli H. Evans (1859), John S. Watts (1860).

First Lieutenants, Wilson Bruyn, E. J. Roos, D. A. Mabie, W. H. Tice.

Second Lieutenants, E. G. Fowler, W. C. Oakley, W. H. Tice, J. P. Vought, E. D. Hayt.

3. The Newburgh Guard (Co. F).—This company was organized Dec. 23, 1858. One of the features in its history was the erection of the monument to Uzal Knapp, at Washington's headquarters, which was inaugurated with public ceremonies on Monday, June 18, 1860. The officers of the company were,—

Captains, John D. Kelly, James A. Raney, John H. Toohey, Timothy Donoghue, Francis Rose.

First Lieutenants, James O'Neil, John H. Toohey, Patrick Day, Patrick Brennan, Robt. H. Brown, Patrick J. McDonald.

Second Lieutenants, Joseph Wilson, Patrick Day, Robt. H. Brown, Patrick J. McDonald, Patrick McArdle.

4. The Parmenter Riflemen (Co. L, subsequently C).—This company was organized in December, 1858, and took its name in honor of the colonel of the regiment, Stephen C. Parmenter. Its officers were,— Captains, R. D. Kemp, Egbert Alsdorf, James Smiley, Robt. H. Kernochan.

First Lieutenants, E. A. Jones, James Smiley, Robt. H. Kernochan, E. J. F. Marsh.

Second Lieutenants, H. F. Adams, Alex. Mann, J. W. Stevenson, John H. Brooks.

5. Ellis Guard (Co. I).—This company was organized Sept. 12, 1865, and named in honor of Col. A. V. H. Ellis, of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth New York Volunteers. Its officers were,— Captains, James C. Taggart, Saml. McQuaid, David A. Mabie, Jr., Alex. McMeekin, B. B. Moore.

First Lieutenants, Sylvester Lawson, B. B. Moore.

Second Lieutenants, Saml. McQuaid, Wm. C. Carmichael, Geo. Wallace, T. J. Collins.

In 1873 Companies C and I were consolidated and the united company named C, under the following officers: B. B. Moore, captain; E. F. J. Marsh, first lieutenant; John H. Brooks, second lieutenant. This company alone survived the disintegration caused by the war, but its continuance was for only a short time.

Companies D, E, F, and L, and a company specially recruited called I, were in the service of the United States as part of the Nineteenth Regiment militia for three months from June 4, 1862. In the spring of 1861 (June 28th), Company I, Seventy-first Regiment militia, was recruited principally from the Parmenter Riflemen, Company L, for three months' service, and was in the first battle of Bull Run, where Saml. O. Bond, one of its members, was killed. It was again recruited for three months' service in the Seventy-first in the spring of 1862, and many of its members passed directly from the field into the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth New York Volunteers. Not less than ninety officers of the volunteer service, from colonel to second lieutenant, were drawn from the active and honorary members of the uniformed companies of Newburgh.

Under the law of 1877 the following companies were organized:

A Company (Washington Light-Guard).—James F. Neil, captain; James P. Barr, first lieutenant; William C. Kemper, second lieutenant.

B Company (Emmet Guard).—Thomas J. Bannon, captain; John C. Green, first lieutenant; Patrick J. Silk, second lieutenant.

C Company.—William Wilson, captain; John H. Wells, first lieutenant; ———, second lieutenant.

D Company (Newburgh Guard).—Patrick J. McDonald, captain; William Bartley, first lieutenant; ———, second lieutenant.

E Company.—Joseph M. Dickey, captain; William B. Brokaw, first lieutenant; William H. Smith, second lieutenant.

These companies compose the Seventeenth Battalion N.G.S.N.Y., now under command of Lieut.-Col. and Brevet Col. Edward D. Hayt.

XVIII.—REBELLION RECORD.

The totals of quotas and credits of the town of Newburgh (then including the city) during the war of the Rebellion were,—

Quotas under all calls prior to Dec. 19, 1864.....	1226
Quota under the call of Dec. 19, 1864.....	122
Credits under all calls prior to Dec. 19, 1864.....	1257
Credits under the call of Dec. 19, 1864.....	122

On settlement with the State authorities, under the bounty act of 1865, the town was allowed for an excess of 237 years, or for 78 three years' men over the quota required, amounting to $47,400, and in the same settlement received $49,800 for bounties. The official record of quotas and the response which was made to them, however, fails to accurately represent the number of men furnished under the several calls, nor are the enlistments prior to July, 1862, entered in the account. The quota under the call of July, 1862, was 470, the number furnished 501. The quota under the call of July, 1863 (draft of October 7th), was 443, which number, with an addition of 50 per cent. (total 552), was drawn, of whom 90 commuted, entered the service personally, or furnished substitutes. The total of quotas under the merged calls of July and October, 1863, and of February, March, and July, 1864, was 756; the number furnished (including 90 credited by draft of 1863), 827, of whom 71 were not credited. The volunteers in the two years' regiments, and in the militia for three months, prior to July, 1862, reached the aggregate of 1078 men. The enlistments, therefore, may be summarized as follows:

Enlistments prior to July, 1862.....	1078
“ under call of July, 1862.....	501
“ under calls of 1863-64.....	827
“ under call of December, 1864.....	122

showing a total of 2410, an excess of 1033 over the number credited and of 1062 over the quotas required; or, reducing the enlistments prior to July, 1862, to three years' men and adding the number (78) allowed under the settlement of 1865, an excess over quotas of 518.

The volunteers recruited in the town were for every branch of the service, but were mainly embraced in the Army of the Potomac. The following general enumeration is from official records:

Third Regiment, Co. B.....	96
Thirty-sixth Regiment, Co. B.....	82
Fifty-sixth Regiment, Co. A, B, etc.....	228
One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment, Co. A, H, etc.....	223

The following list of officers and privates is not submitted as accurate or complete, but as the best that can be prepared without free access to official records. Many names are embraced in it of persons who never had other connection with Newburgh than in filling its quotas for bounties paid. As such it is true they were representatives, but in a higher sense are the representative men to be found in those who were known residents of the town, many of whom counted not their lives dear to them in the terrible struggle. Earnest effort has been made to perfect the record of those who were killed or wounded in battle, or who died of wounds or disease, and if omissions there are in this respect, it is due to the absence of information. Responsibility in this direction has been very keenly appreciated. In many of its details the list is at least semi-official. The record of names is of those officially credited to the town, and the accompanying statements are from muster-out rolls. With this explanation the list is submitted.

NOTE.—Unless otherwise marked the numbers are of infantry regiments of volunteers. M indicates militia.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

THOMAS POWELL.

Thomas Powell was born at Hempstead, L. I., on Feb. 21, 1769, and was the grandson of Thomas Powell, who emigrated to this country with his family from Powelton, in Wales, where his ancestors held large landed possessions. He located on Long Island, where he became permanently identified with the growth and settlement of the locality, and where he passed the remainder of his days. His son, Henry Powell, born at Hempstead in 1741, inherited his estate, but choosing to espouse the cause of the colonies in their struggle for independence, his possessions were confiscated and he himself confined on board the "Jersey Prison-Ship," and later in the "Old Sugar-House." Surviving the horrors of this confinement for three years, he was finally released. Two of his sons, Jacob and Thomas, survived his death, which occurred in 1781 by drowning while attempting to save the life of his son Joseph, who likewise perished. Jacob and Thomas Powell, though but sixteen and twelve years of age respectively, set to work with determined energy to support their sister and widowed mother. After several business adventures they settled in New York in 1798 and engaged in mercantile pursuits, but were driven out by the presence of yellow fever in the city, and took up their residence temporarily at Newburgh. At this time a single dock and one or two stores sufficed for the business of the village, but the possibilities of the place were so apparent that the brothers decided to locate there permanently. They engaged in the mercantile and forwarding trade, and later added a banking business. Energy and fair dealing speedily secured for them a large measure of success and the respect of the community, and as the village grew their business and wealth increased correspondingly. They were selected from among numerous applicants to rebuild Fort Putnam, at West Point, a work which they executed promptly and to the satisfaction of the government. Jacob died in 1823, and the business was continued by Thomas. The successful experiments of Fulton in steam navigation gave a decided impetus to the carrying trade, which was an important part of Mr. Powell's business. About 1834 he built the "Highlander," one of the most substantial and rapid steamers of the day. In 1844, Homer Ramsdell became associated with him in business. In 1846 the "Thomas Powell," a steamer celebrated for remarkable speed, was built, and with the "Highlander," still traverses the waters of the Hudson. The business of freighting was, however, soon carried on almost entirely by barges, and of these the firm built several which are without superiors on the river. Although largely devoted to developing and perfecting the carrying trade upon the Hudson, Mr. Powell's energies were not confined to that field of operations. He was actively interested in every work of progress and development which took place in Newburgh in his day, and was the originator of many projects which have greatly increased the prosperity of the city. He was a large stockholder in various manufacturing enterprises, and in railroads, docks, store-houses, ferries, banks, steamers, and barges. He was respected for his honesty and integrity of character, and beloved for his large-hearted kindness and active philanthropy. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and quiet and unostentatious in his habits and tastes. He died on May 12, 1856.

At a public meeting held a few days after his demise, called to pay a tribute of respect to his memory, the late Judge John W. Brown remarked as follows: "In a public meeting of his neighbors and townsmen, it were idle to speak of his public spirit and the uses he made of his wealth during the last twenty-five years of his life. How he applied it and what he did with it is first in the recollection of us all. It is sufficient to say that whatever measure of activity pervades our public streets, our work-shops, our wharves and places of business, we owe to the prompt and intelligent interposition of Mr. Powell's wealth and credit between us and the legitimate results of great public improvements which threatened to dry up the sources of our prosperity and divert the streams of our business into other channels. He was not alone in his exertions to arrest the downward tendency of our prosperity. There were others, and especially one other, whose efforts were conspicuous in the same emergency, and to whom the citizens of Newburgh owe a debt of gratitude which it will be difficult to pay." Reference was here made to Mr. Powell's course, and that of his son-in-law, Homer Ramsdell, in connection with the construction of the Newburgh Branch Railroad, in which the firm became responsible, through indorsements, acceptances, and advances, for $202,219, and without which the construction of the road would have been indefinitely deferred. Mr. Powell's usefulness was not less manifest in the organization of the Powell Bank in 1838, and in the establishment of the Newburgh Steam-Mills in 1844.

He married Mary, daughter of Robert Ludlow, and had a family of five children, of whom the youngest, Frances E. L., is the wife of Homer Ramsdell.

HOMER RAMSDELL.

Homer Ramsdell was born in Warren, Worcester Co., Mass., on Aug. 12, 1810. His parents were Joseph and Ruth (Stockbridge) Ramsdell, natives of the old town of Hanover, Mass., both being representatives of pioneer families that, sharing in all the vicissitudes of New England life in the early period of her history, developed such independence of spirit, such powers of endurance, and such a tenacity of purpose, as was destined to fit their descendants for positions of honor and usefulness in the several communities in which they might subsequently reside.

Mr. Ramsdell was educated at the excellent academy at Monson, Hampden Co., Mass., and after the close of his educational course entered the dry-goods trade in New York, where he remained from 1832 to 1840. In 1844 he became one of the firm of Thomas Powell & Co., of Newburgh, and from that time until the present he has continued his connection with the mercantile and forwarding business of the city. "From the date of his association with the firm until Mr. Powell's death he was very largely the administrator of Mr. Powell's fortune, and to him, perhaps, the community owe most of the undertakings in which the firm engaged. No public enterprise has for many years been complete without his aid, while those of a private character to which he has been a party have not been limited in number or unproductive of general benefit. The history of Newburgh for over a quarter of a century has been his history,—its pathway is studded with mementos of his usefulness."*

Mr. Powell died in 1856. Since that time Mr. Ramsdell has, by purchase and consolidation, added other neighboring forwarding lines to his enterprises, embracing not only those of Newburgh, but also those of Poughkeepsie and Fishkill, in Dutchess County, and Highland, Ulster County, so that to-day, by a far-reaching capacity and extent of business, he stands at the head of the forwarding and transportation business on the Hudson. His undertakings are characterized throughout by a spirit of enterprise and accommodation to the public, of which his maintenance and management of the excellent ferry between Newburgh and Fishkill, and his spacious covered wharves and commodious warehouses, are an example. In every public enterprise his financial ability and talents have been the leading factors, while even those of his works of a more private character have been such as, necessitating the employment of labor on a large scale, and the consequent distribution of capital, have tended to promote business interests generally, and thus conduce to the welfare of the community. He is intimately identified with the various local institutions of Newburgh, and is a prompt contributor to the progressive and elevating movements of his day. He sees from afar results to be attained only by a long train of operations, and combining in an eminent degree the faculty of perceiving the practical relations of things with a skillful use of the means at his command, he has been instrumental in bringing certain public questions to a successful issue, and in converting what threatened disaster to the community into a means of renewed prosperity.

His resources and influence have been directed to the development of the business and growth of Newburgh as a means of promoting his own interests, so that it may be justly said of him that he regards the interests and advantage of his town as identical with those of his own.

In 1845, from a previously prosperous condition, the village of Newburgh was nearly depleted of its business and inhabitants by the opening of the New York and Erie Railroad two years earlier to Goshen. At this time that company had defaulted in the payment of interest to the State upon a $3,000,000 loan, and a sale under foreclosure appeared inevitable. The company appealed to the Legislature for relief. A bill for that purpose, with conditions, one of which was the construction of a branch railroad to Newburgh, was accordingly presented; but those adverse to the measure outnumbered the friends of the Erie Road, and for a time this now great trunk line seemed doomed to defeat.

At this juncture, with a view to regaining its lost importance and of aiding the completion of this crippled yet important outlet to southern New York, Newburgh came to the rescue and enlisted its best men in the interest of the Erie Railroad. Her representatives in the Legislature—the Hon. Robert Deniston, of Blooming-Grove, in the Senate, and the Hon. Thornton M. Niven, of Newburgh, in the Assembly—were appealed to, and, strongly backed by their constituents, barely saved the bill.

By reason of Mr. Ramsdell's commanding influence in this connection, his successful labors in procuring large subscriptions to its capital stock, and his efficiency in reorganizing the company, he was later in that year (1845) elected to fill a vacancy in the board of directors, and, excepting a brief interval, has been continued in the board, through all the various changes of administration, to the present time.

In 1847 the question of the change of gauge of the Erie Railroad from 6 feet to 4 feet 8½ inches was discussed, and Mr. Ramsdell advocated and voted for the narrow gauge. The road was then in operation only between Piermont and Otisville, a distance of sixty-one miles, and had a limited equipment of rolling stock. The change that could then have been made for a few thousands has since been done at the cost of many millions.

In June, 1853, he was elected president of the company. The Legislature of the State of New York, influenced by State pride,—a popular fallacy at that time throughout the country,—in granting the original charter of the New York and Erie Railroad Company limited its termini within the State,—Dunkirk at the west and Piermont at the east. It thus encountered at its origin every winter an embargo which threatened to defeat the object of its construction, and forced a direct connection with the city of York by a divergence at Suffern's, thence through the State of New Jersey.

On assuming the administration of the corporation by Mr. Ramsdell, this connection, then just made, was imperfect in all respects, and without terminal facilities. Thus hampered, upon his own motion and individual responsibility, he sought relief for his company by the purchase of the Long Dock property, substantially the property which is now owned by the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company,—viz., the lands pierced by the Bergen tunnel, the river-front at Pavonia, and the intermediate lands connecting them, a distance of more than two miles through Jersey City.

At the next sitting of the Legislature of New Jersey (1856) he procured the passage of an act incorporating the Long Dock Company, to which he conveyed the property, and also obtained another act authorizing the Erie Railroad Company to purchase and hold lands in New Jersey, and to finish and complete the Paterson and Hudson River Railroad.

In this way a legislative mistake was overcome, and this great national thoroughfare was extended into the business centre of the great metropolis, and the foundation was laid for terminal facilities equal to its then extended and rapidly increasing necessities.

Upon the resignation by Mr. Ramsdell of the presidency, in July, 1857, Messrs. Samuel Marsh, vice-president, and others, a committee in behalf of the board, by letter, after expressing for him their personal esteem and their appreciation of other valued services by him rendered to the company "during a long period of trying vicissitudes," say, "we desire particularly to tender the thanks of the board for that crowning service of your administration, your original conception and judicious purchase of the Long Dock property; which project, when fully completed and annexed to the Erie Railroad, will constitute an unbroken channel of communication between the immense granaries of the productive West and the markets of this great metropolis and Europe; so that while one end of our road terminates at the lakes and rivers of the West, the other end shall discharge and receive its freights and passengers at the wharf or shipping at the port of New York, an advantage of location, productiveness, and economy which is without precedent in the history of railroads; and as long as New York continues the great commercial centre and distributing point for the commerce of this country, the Erie Railroad must be the great channel of its western transportation.

"Your project has, therefore, not only rendered the Erie Railroad a permanent and valuable auxiliary to the commercial prosperity of our city, but it opens at the same time an unfailing resource of income to the company, which must yield a permanent profit to the stockholders."

The construction of the Hawley branch of the Erie Railroad was originated by Mr. Ramsdell more than twenty years ago. It is the connecting link between the roads of the Pennsylvania Coal Company and the Erie Road, and by this means the coal-beds of Pennsylvania—direct communication with which was the object in whose interest the construction of the Hudson and Delaware Railroad was contemplated by the citizens of Newburgh more than forty years ago—now pour their wealth into this popular entrepôt.

Mr. Ramsdell was also active and influential in promoting the construction of the Newburgh and New York (Short-Cut) Railroad between Vail's Gate on the Newburgh Branch and Greenwood on the main line of the Erie. This short road is a valuable contributor to the business and convenience of Newburgh. His agency, also, in bringing to a successful completion the Newburgh Branch Railroad is elsewhere referred to in this work.

Before the introduction of railroads into our system of internal communication, the migration from New England to the more productive lands of the West was largely through Newburgh. To restore this lost trade Mr. Ramsdell was among the first advocates of a railroad from New England, and forty years ago made the first reconnoissance of the country preparatory to such an undertaking. The New York and New England Railroad, now about to be opened to Fishkill, will fulfil his early anticipations.

Mr. Ramsdell was married on June 16, 1835, to Frances E. L., daughter of Thomas Powell, of Newburgh. The children have been Mary L. P., who died in childhood; Frances J., wife of Maj. George W. Rains; Thomas P., James A. P., Henry P., Homer S., and Leila R. Ramsdell. He has persistently declined to accept political office, although feeling a deep interest in the public events of his day, and exerting a wide influence in the counsels of his party. In early life he filled for many years a number of local offices, including those of trustee and village president of Newburgh.

BENJAMIN CARPENTER.

The Carpenter family of Newburgh, N. Y., are descended from Benjamin Carpenter, who was born in England in 1730. He emigrated to this country at an early age, and settled on Long Island, from whence he removed to Latintown, now in the town of Marlborough, Ulster Co. He resided at that place until his death. His wife was Jane, daughter of Rev. Mr. Leonard, of Goshen. Six children were the issue of this marriage, among whom were Jacob and Leonard Carpenter. These sons were closely identified with the early mercantile and commercial life of Newburgh, and were also owners of the ferry at that place. Leonard Carpenter married Bridget, daughter of Isaac Belknap, and had the following children, viz.: Benjamin, the subject of this sketch; Elizabeth, who married William Thayer; Isaac R., for many years a prominent and substantial citizen of Newburgh; Jane Belknap; Alexander L., who removed to Ohio; Sarah; Lydia; Stearns; and Cynthia Warren, who married Francis Crawford.

Benjamin Carpenter, son of Leonard Carpenter, was born on Feb. 14, 1793. For more than half a century he was engaged in business in the city of Newburgh. During the whole of that long period he bore an intimate relation to the growth and commercial development of the city, and was one of the foremost of the business men of the day. From memoranda left by himself we derive a correct account of his varied business enterprises and undertakings.

Mr. Carpenter commenced mercantile life in the year 1812, in Newburgh, and two years later formed a partnership with Messrs. John and William Thayer. Soon after the close of the war, 1812-15, this firm purchased the schooner "Ann," and engaged in the West India trade. In the spring of 1817 this partnership was dissolved by Mr. Carpenter, and he commenced the freighting and mercantile business on his own account, in the store afterwards occupied by Charles Halstead, on Water Street. Subsequently Mr. Carpenter removed to Front Street, where he pursued a general commission and forwarding business, grain constituting the chief commodity of commercial export at that period.

This was the principal business in which Mr. Carpenter engaged throughout the remainder of his life, although a large number of collateral undertakings in connection with it received his attention.

He was also interested in the encouragement of other local enterprises. About the year 1818 he erected the first hay-press in Newburgh. He also built a starch factory on DuBois Street for parties desirous of introducing that industry in Newburgh. He purchased a building on Ann Street, and aided George Fredorf in establishing a fancy soap business. After the death of the latter the establishment was sold to Ames & Spencer, and in course of time it formed the basis of the large enterprise of Jesse Oakley.

Mr. Carpenter was also a stockholder and director in the Newburgh Whaling Company* from 1831 to 1840. After that company discontinued business he purchased the sloop "Russell," in company with parties in New York, and sent that vessel to Havana, where a charter was received to go up the Baltic Sea. This enterprise proved successful.

In the year 1825, Mr. Carpenter established, in company with Henry B. Carpenter, the first foundry in Newburgh, in which, on March 18th of that year, iron was melted for the first time in the town.

In 1828 he built the steamboat "William Young," for conveying freight, as well as passengers, between Newburgh and New York, one of the first steamboats launched upon the Hudson for both the accommodation of passengers and the transportation of freight. In 1838, B. Carpenter & Co. built the steamboat "James Madison," to take the place of the "William Young." Subsequently the freighting business of this firm was carried on by barges, the barge "Superior" having been placed on that line in 1846, and afterwards the barge "Minisink." The entire business of this firm was subsequently sold to Homer Ramsdell & Co.

In 1836, Mr. Carpenter became one of the original stockholders and directors of the Hudson and Delaware Railroad Company, and on the first establishment of the Newburgh Steam-Mills Company he became also a stockholder and director in that enterprise. For several years, including the first year of its organization, Mr. Carpenter was a director in the Powell Bank (now discontinued), and he was one of the original trustees of the Newburgh Savings-Bank, founded in 1852.

He was greatly interested in the project of building the Branch Railroad to Newburgh, connecting with the Erie Railroad, and materially aided in the accomplishment of that end.

The firm of B. Carpenter & Co., of which he was the senior member, also became large stockholders in the South plank-road enterprise.

In various other ways Mr. Carpenter was actively interested in the establishment and conservation of the institutions of Newburgh, and to no man more than to him are due the prosperity and success of many of the leading enterprises of the city. In connection with his brother, Isaac R. Carpenter, he purchased all the water-front between First and Second Streets, laid out Front Street, built and filled up the necessary wharves, and with the aid of a small voluntary subscription, he purchased the land and opened Carpenter Street. He, together with Mr. Parmenter, also gave the land and opened Eager Street.

In these and in many other enterprises his public spirit and his interest in whatever pertained to the growth and prosperity of Newburgh were manifested.

In 1830, Mr. Carpenter was elected a trustee of the village of Newburgh, and was re-elected in 1831, '32, '33, '34, '37, '38, '40, and '41. He also filled many other positions of trust and honor in political and business circles.

He was also prominently associated with religious and benevolent work, being one of the founders of the Bethel Mission, to the support of which he liberally contributed, and he was one of the founders of the Newburgh Bible Society. He was a leading member and trustee of the First Presbyterian Church, which office he held at the time of his death, which occurred Jan. 31, 1871.

In all the relations of life, either as husband, father, or friend, he ever manifested an unselfish and devoted spirit; and in the community in which he passed a long and useful life his name was a synonym for integrity, uprightness, and honorable dealing.

The wife of Mr. Carpenter was Miss Caroline S. Carpenter, daughter of John Warren, of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., who died April 5, 1856.

The children were Mary F., widow of the late Lewis M. Strong, of Northampton, Mass.; John W., who died in infancy; Warren, who died just as he had entered the legal profession, and had given large promise of a successful and brilliant career; and Alida Josepha, now residing in Newburgh.

DAVID CRAWFORD.

No better or more appropriate sketch of the Crawford family can be given than the following from the "History of Newburgh":

"There are several branches of the Crawford family in this country, all of Irish origin, and all more or less remotely connected. The Newburgh family of that name are the descendants of John Crawford, who came to America in 1730. He settled at Little Britain, in this county, soon after the Clinton immigrants located there. His children were David, who succeeded to the homestead farm, and had Francis, for many years a resident of Newburgh; Mary, who married John Van Arsdale; Jane, who married James Denniston; and James, who settled in what is now the town of Crawford.

"Francis Crawford, only son of David, remained on the homestead at Little Britain until 1806, when he removed to Newburgh and entered into the mercantile and freighting business with John Harris. He retired from the trade in 1810, but re-entered it in 1817, and continued in it until his death (April 23, 1829), in the sixty-seventh year of his age. 'There were traits in his character well deserving notice and imitation. From the uniform tenor of his conduct through life it is believed that he lived and died without a single personal enemy. Blessed with a natural temper almost peculiar to himself,—an utter stranger to petulance, passion, and the inordinate love of gain,—he was the same man under all circumstances; no one was ever wounded by his tongue or made the victim of his avarice. He received the bounties of Providence as they were bestowed, and reaped the benefits of his prudence and industry, and thereby secured to himself and his associates in business the universal confidence of the public and the esteem and admiration of innumerable friends. In short, he lived as a man should live in relation to his fellow-man, and he died as a man should die in relation to his God and his Redeemer,— ‘Tis only noble to be good:

Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood.*

“Francis Crawford was thrice married,—first to Eunice Watkins, by whom he had: 1, Samuel; 2, Thomas; 3, David; 4, James. Mrs. Eunice Crawford died in 1791, in her twenty-eighth year. Second to Lydia, daughter of Jeduthan Belknap, Dec. 1, 1792. Third to Fanny Denniston (widow of Capt. Isaacs), born Jan. 20, 1780, died Feb. 26, 1829. His sons David and James came to Newburgh with him in 1806, and were his associates in his business until 1810. James afterwards opened the Mansion House, of which he was for several years the proprietor. He married Elizabeth Munson, who after his death married John Farnum. David continued with his father, and at his death received the principal portion of his estate.

“David Crawford was born at Little Britain about the year 1788. The precise date cannot now be ascertained, in consequence of the destruction of the family records by fire. He received such educational advantages as the country schools at that time afforded, and in 1806 entered the store of his father as clerk. In 1810 he was appointed deputy sheriff of Orange County, and discharged the duties of that office for about one year. When the war of 1812 broke out, he promptly responded to the call of Congress for volunteers, and raised a company of artillery of which he was elected captain, in which capacity he served for about one year, when he received a commission in the army of the United States, and remained in the service until the close of the war in 1815. He re-entered the mercantile and forwarding business with his father in 1817, and prosecuted it until 1851. He died July 23, 1856.

“As a citizen Mr. Crawford was highly esteemed, and for several years held positions of honor and trust. His integrity was undoubted, and throughout his long business career his reputation was unsullied. Always ready to lend a helping hand to others, there are those among our citizens who can look back with grateful remembrance to the kindly aid which he rendered to them when assistance was needed. In his business and social intercourse he was especially affable and agreeable,—the sunlight of a perpetually happy disposition appeared to be his. The Yorick of a thousand jests, his genial humor was irresistible, and would chase the clouds away from the gravest face. He was unusually well informed in dramatic literature. At one time in his life he had a decided passion for this kind of reading. With the plays of Shakespeare he was very familiar, and could recall their scenes, characters, and many of their choice passages at will. His love for children was another characteristic; he delighted in their presence, sympathized in their amusements, and always seemed to enter into the spirit of their frolic. In a word, he was a patriotic, honest, kind-hearted gentleman, and an excellent citizen.

“David Crawford married Fanny C., daughter of Isaac Belknap, May 15, 1822, and had: 1, Isaac B. (died young); 2, Mary Elizabeth, married Sands McCamly, Aug. 6, 1844, died July 8, 1845, leaving Mary E. C. McCamly; 3, James Thomas (died young); 4, Anna (now deceased), married Richard A. Southwick, Oct. 11, 1849, had Fanny C., Anna C., and Florence.”

THE WALSH FAMILY.

The Walsh family came from the north of Ireland, and were of Scotch descent. Thomas Walsh was born near Carlisle, Pa., in 1751. His father, also named Thomas, came to America and settled in the Cumberland Valley, which was rapidly peopled by hardy Scotch Presbyterians. About 1769, Thomas Walsh, his parents having died, joined his only sister, Mary, who was married to Maj. Hawks, of Sussex Co., N. J. In 1772 he removed to New Windsor, Orange Co., and settled on a farm near Washington Lake, where he resided for the remainder of his life. He was an intelligent Christian man, a great reader, and a successful farmer. He was enrolled in Capt. Nicoll's company of New Windsor. He turned out with his company at the attack on Fort Montgomery, and marched with it to repel the threatened Indian raid at Peenpack. Dr. Higby, of silver-bullet fame, was his intimate friend. It was found after his death that all he owed in the world was one dollar. His son William became the owner of the farm, on which the old dwelling-house, built a century ago, is still standing. He died March 19, 1819. Thomas Walsh married Margaret Brush, of Rockland County, who was of a New England family early settled in the eastern part of Long Island. Mrs. Walsh survived her husband many years, and died at the residence of her son Henry, April 18, 1837, in the eighty-fourth year of her age. She was of a cheerful disposition and possessed great activity and energy. The children of Thomas and Margaret Walsh were William, John, Thomas, Mary, Rachel, Henry, Elizabeth, Michael, Harriet, and Anna.

WILLIAM WALSH.

William Walsh was born in the town of New Windsor, near Washington Lake, Oct. 4, 1773. He passed his earlier years on the homestead of his father, availing himself meanwhile of the privilege of acquiring such an education as the ordinary schools of his day afforded. After leaving school he went to New Windsor village, where he worked at ship-building. In those days New Windsor was an active, thriving place. Many vessels were constructed there. Sloops sailed on regular dates to New York, carrying passengers and freight, and much business was transacted. A partnership was formed between Judge Morrell and William Walsh, and they carried on the freight and passenger business, owning sloops sailing at regular dates for New York. William Walsh was captain of a sloop, and sailed the same for several seasons. Appreciating the superior advantages of Newburgh, he removed to that place in 1812, and engaged in the general dry-goods business with his brother Henry, the firm being William and Henry Walsh. Subsequently the brothers dissolved and continued business, each on his own account. Mr. Walsh was president of the village of Newburgh for two years, and a trustee for six years. He was town clerk for three years, and supervisor of Newburgh for nine years. He had the honor to represent Newburgh at the celebration in New York in 1825 of the opening of the Erie Canal. He was a member and officer in Rev. Dr. Johnston's church for many years, and one of its most active and influential supporters. He was a man of fine presence, upright and honorable, a firm friend and a kind neighbor, social and friendly to all with whom he came in contact, and a successful business man. He took an active part in all public matters, and in the advancement of the interests of Newburgh.

In 1827, William Walsh became the president of the Bank of Newburgh, and continued in that position until his death. Under his judicious and conservative management the bank prospered, and had the entire and deserved confidence of the public.

Mr. Walsh erected the brick buildings at the southwest corner of Water and Third Streets, Newburgh. He lived there for several years, and subsequently purchased the Betts property on Montgomery Street, where he resided until his death, which occurred Nov. 2, 1839. During his last sickness he was visited by Henry Clay, and the interview between the two men is said to have been an affecting one.

William Walsh married Mary, daughter of Isaac Van Duzer, of Cornwall. Mrs. Walsh died Oct. 18, 1801, and their children—Isaac V. and Abram—died in infancy. Mr. Walsh's second wife was Mary, daughter of Judge Joseph Morrell, of New Windsor, who was an officer in the Revolutionary war. Mrs. Walsh died March 24, 1866. The children of William and Mary Walsh were Joseph M., Margaret, William H., Albert, Charles, Mary A., Norman A., John J., Edward L., and Sarah E.

HENRY WALSH.

Henry Walsh was born in the town of New Windsor, Dec. 24, 1785. After leaving school he sailed for a season on board his brother William's sloop, and in 1803 went to New York, and remained for several years in the office of the Republican Watch-Tower, a newspaper of which David Denniston, of Newburgh, was the publisher, and Mr. Cheatham the editor. While connected with this journal Mr. Walsh made the acquaintance of many of the leading public men of that period. In 1808, Mr. Walsh engaged in business with Isaac Schultz at Middletown, Orange Co., and subsequently with Mr. Schultz's nephew, James Thompson, at Pine Bush; they dissolved Feb. 21, 1810.

In the spring of 1810, Henry Walsh removed to Newburgh, and engaged in the general dry-goods business at the southwest corner of Water and Second Streets. He associated with him Samuel Williams, the firm being Walsh & Williams. They dissolved May 7, 1812, and the firm of William & Henry Walsh was formed. The brothers subsequently dissolved. Henry became the owner of the premises Nos. 39 and 41 Water Street, and carried on a large business there for many years. Through long years of close application to business his health had become somewhat impaired, and in 1828 he purchased the southern portion of the Smith farm on Liberty Street, and repaired and enlarged the old cottage for his residence after retiring from business. He subsequently disposed of a portion of his farm, and lived to see it cut up by streets and covered with houses, and the village of Newburgh grow to be a city. He experienced a paralytic stroke in 1861, and died July 30, 1868. Mr. Walsh was a successful merchant, and confined his attention to the legitimate lines of trade. He was a great lover of books, and sought his highest enjoyment in his own family and at his own fireside. He was vice-president of the Bank of Newburgh for a number of years, trustee of the village of Newburgh in 1816, trustee of the Newburgh Academy, and supervisor of Newburgh in 1854. He was a trustee of the Associate Reformed Church for more than fifty years, with which he early united, and with which he maintained steadfast relations until his death.

Henry Walsh was married Sept. 9, 1809, to Mehetabel, daughter of Capt. William Bull, of Walkkill, who was an officer in the Revolutionary war. Mrs. Walsh was possessed of a kind heart and loving, sunny nature, and was a devoted wife and earnest Christian mother.

The children of Henry and Mehetabel Walsh were William B., Julia A., James, Abram, Thomas, Mehetabel, Henry R., George H., Harriet, Augustus H., and Robert.

HON. DANIEL B. ST. JOHN.

Daniel B. St. John was born in Sharon, Litchfield Co., Conn., on Oct. 8, 1808. His ancestors originally settled at Norwalk, Conn., from which place Timothy St. John, his great-grandfather, removed in the year 1756, settling at Sharon, where he died in 1806. In 1818 his grandfather, Daniel St. John, and his father, Russell St. John, removed from their native town, Sharon, to the city of Hartford. Daniel St. John held various positions of importance in his lifetime, was for many years a magistrate, and represented the town of Sharon in the Legislature of the State. He also held the office of county surveyor of Hartford County for many years. He died at Hartford, in 1846, at the ripe age of eighty-five years. Russell St. John, father of our subject, was a prominent agriculturalist in his time, and in 1825 received from the Hartford County Agricultural Society a silver cup, as a premium for the best cultivated farm in Hartford County. This relic is still in the possession of Senator St. John, and is greatly prized by him.

Daniel B. St. John received a substantial education in the district and grammar schools of Hartford, and for the last two years of his educational course resided with his uncle, Milo L. Bennett, of Manchester, Vt., then a practicing attorney, and afterwards judge of the Supreme Court of that State for many years. In the year 1824, Mr. St. John removed to Monticello, Sullivan Co., N. Y., and entered the store of his maternal uncle, Hiram Bennett, at that place as a clerk. In 1831 he was admitted as a partner in the business, and soon after became the sole proprietor. He continued in active trade as a merchant and as a dealer in real estate until 1848, when he retired from mercantile pursuits.

The public career of Mr. St. John commenced in 1840, when he was elected to the State Legislature from Sullivan County. He was at first a Henry Clay Whig, and remained in the party until its dissolution. He was a member of the committee on the anti-rent difficulties between the manorial tenants along the Hudson and the patroon Van Rensselaer, a position of great importance because of the high feeling that existed at the time between the parties, it being one of the most prominent political questions in the State. He was also a member of the committee, then annually appointed by the Legislature, to examine the accounts of the treasurer, canal and bank departments, etc. He was elected supervisor of the town of Thompson, Sullivan Co., for the years 1843, 1844, 1845, and 1846, and in the latter year was elected a representative to the Thirtieth Congress, serving from 1847 to 1849. While a member of Congress he served on the committee on post-offices and post-roads with Abraham Lincoln, a warm personal friendship existing between the two. At the close of his Congressional term, in March, 1849, Mr. St. John was invited to take charge of the bank department at Albany, then under the supervision of the comptroller of the State. Hon. Washington Hunt, afterwards Governor, was then comptroller of New York, and at his solicitation Mr. St. John accepted the position of chief register, and occupied that place until 1851, when, by act of the Legislature, the bank department was made a separate and independent branch of the State machinery. Mr. St. John was immediately appointed superintendent, and organized the department as a separate and distinct service. He continued to hold the office until the year 1855.

In 1856, Mr. St. John concluded to retire from active business life, having by industry and economy accumulated an estate sufficient to enable him to do so; and having a long cherished desire to engage in rural pursuits and to enjoy country life, he purchased about twelve acres of land on the banks of the Hudson, in the town of Newburgh, which he improved by the erection of suitable and convenient buildings, cultivating the ground, planting fruit and ornamental trees, and where he still makes his home. In 1858 he was elected president of the Newburgh Savings-Bank, when the total deposits amounted to only $28,000. These have since increased to nearly $3,500,000. The institution, of which Mr. St. John is still president, is one of the strongest of its kind in the State, and it is speaking strictly within bounds to say that the great success which it has attained is largely due to the business experience, sound judgment, and strict integrity that was brought to the management of its affairs by the selection of Mr. St. John as president. In 1860, Mr. St. John was elected a delegate to the National Union Convention, at Baltimore, which nominated Bell and Everett for the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States. He was also nominated as a Presidential Elector on that ticket, and for representative in Congress the same year. In 1863 he received the Democratic nomination for Secretary of State. In 1875 he was elected to represent the Tenth Senatorial District of New York, consisting of the counties of Orange and Sullivan, in the State Senate, by a majority of 996 over Morgan Shuit; and was again, elected to the same office in 1877, defeating John A. Clements by a majority of 1442. In 1879 he declined a renomination to the Senate. In 1876 he was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention, held at St. Louis, which nominated Samuel J. Tilden for the Presidency, and in the counsels of the Democratic party throughout the State of New York he holds a prominent and honorable place. His domestic life is simple. In the community in which he resides he enjoys the respect and esteem of all classes of citizens, and is regarded as one of the most progressive and substantial residents of Orange County. His influence is always exerted for the good of his fellows, and he is in active sympathy with the philanthropic, benevolent, and educational movements of the day. His public and private duties have been performed with the greatest care, and through a long service in public life his personal honor and official integrity have never been questioned. He is of an affable and genial temperament, and justly one of the most popular men of his section.

JOHN FORSYTH.

John Forsyth was born near the city of Aberdeen, in Scotland, in 1786 or 1787. His parents were in comfortable circumstances, but the death of his father in the meridian of life, and the subsequent misconduct of some persons with whom he had been associated in business, left his widowed mother, with a family of young children, for a time in a straitened condition. Her son was sent to the grammar-school of Aberdeen, where he had for a school-mate the famous Lord Byron, but from the cause before mentioned he was deprived of these educational advantages sooner than he otherwise would have been.

Mr. Forsyth came to this country in 1805, intending to proceed to North Carolina or Georgia, in both of which States some branches of his father's family were settled. But by the advice of Prof. Kemp, of Columbia College, to whom he had a letter of introduction, and Mr. Robert Gosman, he was induced to remain in the North. He came to Newburgh in 1810, simply to visit the Rev. Mr. Scrimgeour, pastor of the Associate Reformed Church, and an old friend of his mother, but with no intention of remaining here. Here, however, he was induced to settle, and here he spent the largest portion of his life. He soon found employment, and until 1825 was largely engaged in business as a builder. In the latter year he became a partner in the firm of Law, Bevrige & Co.,—afterwards and more widely known as J. Bevrige & Co.,—in which he continued until his death, in 1854.

Mr. Forsyth was a man of singularly robust frame, and for many years his life was one of great activity. He was a man of presence,—one of those whose face and form would arrest the attention of a stranger, and his mental and moral qualities were accordant with the impression thus made. He was a wise counselor, and there were few men whose advice was more sought by persons of all classes; and none who knew him could doubt his unbending rectitude, his large heartedness, or his rare sagacity. He was for years a director in the Bank of Newburgh, and a trustee of the academy. He had a good deal to do with the establishment of the Newburgh Steam-Mills—of which company he was president—and of the Branch Railroad. Indeed, to every public improvement he was ready to lend a helping hand.

From early manhood Mr. Forsyth was an exemplary Christian, and was long a ruling elder in the Associate Reformed Church. Catholic in spirit, he was yet warmly attached to his own denomination, and was widely known in it as one of its most zealous and generous members. He was twice married, viz.: first, to Jane, eldest daughter of John Currie, who settled in Newburgh in 1802; second, to Anna Jane, youngest daughter of John Brown. His children (there were none by the second marriage) were John, Robert A., and James C. The former is Rev. John Forsyth, D.D., chaplain at West Point, and an influential and highly esteemed citizen of Newburgh.

the present residence of William W. Carson, on July 9, 1802. His father, Samuel Downing, was of English extraction, and was born in the year 1761. He removed from Cambridge, Mass., to Newburgh, and from thence to Montgomery, intending to pursue his avocation as a carriage-maker at that place. Owing to the bad state of his health at Montgomery, he returned to Newburgh, where he established, on the northeast corner of Broad and Liberty Streets, about the commencement of the present century, a shop for the manufacture of wagons and carriages. While yet in the early stages of this undertaking, failing health led him to engage in the more healthful business of market gardening and cultivating a nursery, which he planted on the property adjoining his shop. As early as 1810 he offered for sale trees ingrafted and inoculated, including apples, pears, peaches, apricots, and cherries. Although not the first to engage in this avocation in the present county of Orange, he was the first to conduct it so successfully as to secure its continuance. He led an industrious and sober life, and died Nov. 1, 1822. His wife, Eunice, died Oct. 29, 1838, leaving five children, namely, Emily, born Jan. 24, 1801, married Sylvester Ferry, died March 11, 1864; Charles, the subject of the sketch; George W., born Feb. 22, 1804, died April 5, 1846; Fanny, died in infancy; and Andrew J., born Oct. 31, 1815, whose useful life ended in the burning of the steamer "Henry Clay," near Yonkers, July 28, 1852.

The early life of Charles Downing was passed under the careful training of his father in the nursery business, and in attendance upon the common schools of his day. At the age of fifteen his educational career was completed at the Newburgh Academy, where he attended during the winter months. Before he had attained his majority his father died, and the responsibility of conducting his business and the support of the family, to a large extent, devolved upon Charles. These duties he performed successfully until his brother, Andrew J., reached adult years, when he united with his brother in the management and control of the business under the firm-name of C. & A. J. Downing. This business connection continued for a few years only. In 1837, Mr. Charles Downing removed to where Alfred Bridgman now resides; his brother remaining on the home place. The former continued in the nursery business for thirty years at that point, and by close and faithful application to his chosen avocation established for himself a place among the first pomologists of the United States.

Naturally of a penetrating and inquiring mind, he studied closely the forms, varieties, and qualities of the different fruits that came under his observation, and by careful graftings and the collection of choice seeds he was enabled to improve many varieties of fruits, and originate others that bear his name to this day. Among these latter may be mentioned Downing's ever-bearing mulberry, champagne and red-cheek cherries, and Downing's gooseberry. After retiring from the nursery business, Mr. Downing continued the investigation of fruits by obtaining trees and grafts of new varieties to prove their nomenclature, quality, and other characteristics, until a few years ago, when he sold his grounds and removed to his present residence in the city of Newburgh. He still keeps up his interest in pomology, however, and is studying with care the ever-changing forms and varieties of fruit-life. His brother, Andrew J., devoted himself more particularly to landscape gardening and rural architecture, and as an author and writer on such subjects, as well as the editor of the Horticulturist, secured a reputation which was not confined to the country of his nativity. Charles Downing was of a more practical turn of mind. He delighted more in the cultivation, study, and growth of those things of which his brother wrote, and it was often the case that the pen of Andrew J. Downing drew its inspiration from the practical knowledge of his brother Charles. The latter, however, has been a regular contributor to the current literature of the day on such topics as he best understood, and since the death of his brother has twice revised the latter's book on "Fruit and Fruit-Trees," first in 1867, and again in 1869. Since the last revision he has added two appendixes, containing new fruits, corrections, etc., making the whole work twice the original size.

While the days of Mr. Downing have been passed within the inner circles of society, free from the turmoil and strife of political life, and in the peaceful pursuits of husbandry, he has nevertheless sustained an important relation to the growth and development of his native place, and been faithful to all the duties of the citizen. Great changes have taken place in Newburgh since he made his débüt upon the stage of life, churches and schools have been established, to which he contributed with liberal hand, and in a quiet, modest way his influence has been exerted in every good work. Physically of weak and feeble constitution, he has, by careful self-discipline, regular habits, and an industrious out-of-door life, achieved a ripe old age, and his straightforward and honorable career have won him the esteem of every good citizen.

Mr. Downing was married on Sept. 20, 1830, to Mary, daughter of Samuel Wait, of Montgomery, N. Y., but no children were born of the union. Mrs. Downing died on Oct. 18, 1880.

HON. JOEL T. HEADLEY.

Joel T. Headley, of Newburgh, is descended from an English family of title, some of whom have been distinguished as literary men. He was born in Walton, Delaware County, on Dec. 30, 1813. His father was for a long time pastor of the only church in the village, which is picturesquely situated in a valley hemmed in by sparkling streams and surrounded by bold mountains. Amid such scenery his youthful imagination was kindled and strengthened, and his love for the mountains and forests was born. Having graduated at Union College, he studied theology in Auburn Seminary, with the intention of making the ministry his profession for life. Compelled to abandon it from ill health, he traveled abroad, where he remained a part of the years 1842 and 1843. His correspondence, published at the time in the New York Tribune, made him first known to the public, and on his return from Europe he became for a while assistant editor of that paper. His first published work was a translation of one of Sarsfield's works in German. This was published anonymously. Soon afterwards letters from Italy were published simultaneously in New York and London. This was followed by "Alps and the Rhine." "Napoleon and his Marshals" succeeded, which had an extensive sale and enjoyed a wide popularity. This popularity was increased by "The Sacred Mountains." The next year he gave to the press "Washington and his Generals."

These three books, by their unprecedented circulation, founded the well-known house of Scribner & Co. Mr. Headley was now fairly launched as an author, and the demand for the productions of his pen was unceasing. But in the mean time his health had driven him to the mountains and wild forests, where, with an Indian guide, he passed through the great northern wilderness, where guides were then unknown and tourists never came. The result was a book called "The Adirondacks, or Life in the Woods." It opened up this vast wilderness to the public, which is now called the "Switzerland of America." The pure air of the forest and the roughness of camp-life restored the balance of the brain, which for a while threatened serious consequences. "Sacred Names and Characters," "Life of Cromwell," "The Old Guard,"—the latter in part translated from a French work,—and the "Second War with England" succeeded each other at shorter or longer intervals. Mr. Headley's success as an author caused him some annoyances, and books that he never wrote were attributed to him, such as "Sacred Plains," by T. H. Headley. "Kossuth and his Generals" and a pirated edition of his "Sacred Mountains" were also published, while fugitive pieces written for magazines were gathered up and published as his miscellanies, which compelled him to issue in self-defense two volumes of miscellanies. A large house in Philadelphia published two volumes that were, as far as the outside went, fac-similes of "Washington and his Generals," evading the law against piratical works by calling it "Washington and the Generals of the Revolution." "Sacred Heroes and Martyrs" was a large octavo, and was so well received that an English clergyman published it in London, and had the audacity to affix his own name to it as "revised and corrected." Biographies of Gens. Scott and Jackson had a limited sale. A period of inactivity followed, during which Mr. Headley was elected to the Legislature of New York State. The following year, 1856, he was elected Secretary of State. At the end of two years he retired, disgusted, from political life. "A Life of Washington," a large octavo, had an immense sale, as did also, a few years after, his "History of the Great Rebellion." "Grant and Sherman, their Campaigns and Generals," also had an immense circulation. This was followed by "Fragat and our Naval Commanders." A history of the "Great Riots" of New York City possessed only a local interest, and had a limited sale. It was afterwards published in a new form, embracing the great railroad riots throughout the country. The "Life of Grant," however, preceded this. His next work was "The Recent Great Explorers of Central Africa," including Livingstone, Stanley, Baker, and Cameron. His last work was "Grant's Tour Around the World."

THOMAS SHAW.

The Shaw family of Newburgh and New Windsor are descended from Thomas and John Shaw, brothers, who emigrated from Ireland in the year 1790 and took up a settlement in New Windsor. Thomas Shaw had two sons,—Thomas, Jr., the subject of this memoir, and Robert, who was born in 1803.

Thomas Shaw, Jr., was born at Clinton Farm, Orange Co., N. Y., on June 12, 1799, and received his early education in New Windsor. He was subsequently apprenticed to learn the trade of a carpenter. He removed to Newburgh in 1832 and engaged in the carpentering and general building business.

Thomas Chan

A few of the older buildings that were erected by him, and that bore witness to his architectural, as well as his mechanical, skill, were the United States Hotel, the old Powell store-house, the store-house of Benjamin Carpenter, and the store-house of Mailler & Co., and of Skidmore, Bull & Co. In 1852 he established the firm of Thomas Shaw & Sons, erected the large building now occupied by his successors, Thomas Shaw's Sons, and engaged extensively in the manufacture of building materials, and in the business of carpenter and joiner. For many years he carried on a large and successful business, and did much in building up and beautifying the city of Newburgh. He was a man of modest parts, plain and unassuming, devoted to his profession, and of industrious and regular habits of life. Holding himself aloof from active participation in public affairs, he confined himself strictly to his own business, and by his straightforward and honorable dealing commanded the respect of the community in which he passed so many years of his life. He filled the office of street commissioner of Newburgh for two years. He was a member and trustee of the Union Presbyterian Church, and a prompt contributor to all worthy objects. He died Feb. 6, 1877. Mr. Shaw was three times married,—first to Miss Eleanor Burnett, of whom was born one son, Samuel Crawford; secondly to Harriet, daughter of John Walsh, and granddaughter of Samuel Logan, having issue who reached mature years,—George W., born July 31, 1824; Charles B., born July 29, 1827; and Elkanah K., born Dec. 27, 1834; and thirdly to Jane, daughter of John Walsh.

The successors of Mr. Shaw in business are George W. and Charles B. Shaw, who are associated together under the firm-name of Thomas Shaw's Sons. Connected with them is Elkanah K. Shaw, who has represented the Second Ward of Newburgh in the Common Council, has been a member of the board of water commissioners, and for eighteen years a trustee of the Union Presbyterian Church. He studied architectural drawing with John W. Priest, served three years in the machine business with Samuel Stanton, and is the architect of the establishment. Many public and private buildings in Newburgh attest his architectural skill, among which may be mentioned the Union Presbyterian Church edifice, the Grand Street public school building, the engine-houses of Nos. 2, 4, and 5, the city post-office, the Third Ward grammar school building, the Erie Railroad depot, and the bleachery of Chadwick Brothers, all of which, save the grammar school, were built by the firm. The firm is also doing a large business in the way of ship and steamboat joinery. The joiner-work on five of the ferry-boats of the New Jersey Central Railroad was done by them, and among the vessels that they finished were the "Edgar Stuart" and "Anna," afterwards known as Cuban privateers. In addition to their business as builders, they manufacture everything in the shape of house-builders' supplies.

HON. JAMES MACKIN.

James Mackin was born at Newburgh, Orange Co., N. Y., on Christmas Day in the year 1823. His parents were John and Eliza (Jenkins) Mackin, the former of whom was a general carter at Newburgh, and agent for the People's Line of steamers. He died about the year 1829, at the early age of twenty-eight, and his wife a few years later. Of a family of four children, James Mackin was the second. His brother Charles, the oldest of the family, commenced life as a clerk in the employ of John D. Phillips, of Newburgh, when eleven years of age. After a few years he clerked for Odell Gregory, in the shoe business, and finally entered the dry-goods store of George Cornwall. When only eighteen years of age he was made a partner in this house. About 1825 he married Miss Sarah J. Merritt, daughter of Isaac Merritt, of Hart's Village, Dutchess County, and a niece of Charles A. Macy, of the firm of Howes & Macy, bankers, of New York. Soon after his marriage Mr. Mackin removed to New York and established the wholesale dry-goods firm of Carpenter & Mackin, doing a successful business for several years. At the opening of the war he withdrew from the firm and, in connection with his brother Francis, engaged extensively in the manufacture of clothing for the army. The enterprise proved so remunerative that Mr. Mackin retired from business life in 1865. His first wife having died, Mr. Mackin married, several years after, Miss Lizzie Hart, whom he met in Europe while traveling abroad, the ceremony being performed in Paris at the house of the American minister. After an extensive tour, Mr. Mackin returned home with his bride in the fall of 1867, and died in February following. His death was greatly lamented. Mary, only sister of James Mackin, is the widow of James M. Kernochan, formerly captain of the "James Madison," running between Newburgh and New York, and who at the time of his death was assistant naval officer at New York. Francis, a younger brother, is a prominent banker and large real estate owner in Newark, N. J., and has been several times a member of the Legislature of New Jersey.

By the death of his parents Mr. Mackin was thrown upon his own resources at an early age, and his opportunities for obtaining an education were of the most limited kind. Through some mysterious agency he crossed the Hudson River to Fishkill at about the age of ten years, where he found employment and protection with John Peter DeWint, a wealthy and influential resident of that place, and the owner of large tracts of land and a large river frontage. He continued to remain with Mr. DeWint, and upon attaining the age of sixteen or seventeen years assumed charge of some of that gentleman's business matters. He gradually rose to the position of Mr. DeWint's general business agent and manager, and at his death in 1870 was appointed executor of his large estate.

In the discharge of the responsible duties of that place he is at present engaged.

While Mr. Mackin has displayed in the management of the large business interest that he represents a high order of executive and financial ability, it is in the more uncertain field of political life that he has become most widely known. He entered public life as a Whig, and was a delegate to the State Convention at Syracuse, at which the Whig party and Free-Soil Democrats united, and was secretary of that body. He was appointed postmaster at Fishkill by President Fillmore in 1849, and filled the position for four years. In 1857 he was elected supervisor of the town of Fishkill against the candidate of the Know-Nothing party, and was made the chairman of the board upon its organization. He was re-elected the following year, and in the fall of 1858 was chosen by the Republicans to represent Dutchess County in the State Legislature by a majority of 568. He has subsequently been supervisor of Fishkill for three years, acting as chairman of the board.

He was an active supporter of the war, and in warm sympathy with the Union cause and the preservation of the integrity of the nation. He assisted greatly in enrolling and fitting out the quota of troops called for by the national government from Fishkill, and in obtaining the commissions of the officers of the companies. He was the third United States assessor appointed by President Lincoln at the opening of his administration, and filled that office for Dutchess and Columbia Counties for two and a half years. At the close of the war Mr. Mackin transferred his political fealty to the Democratic party, and occupies a prominent place in its deliberations and counsels. As the candidate of that party, he represented Dutchess County in the State Legislature in 1873, 1874, and 1875. In 1877 he was elected to the responsible office of treasurer of the State of New York, and filled the position in an able and popular manner for two years. He was the candidate of his party for re-election in the fall of 1879, but was defeated, owing to the defection of Tammany Hall, by a majority of only two thousand out of over a million of votes cast.

In business life Mr. Mackin has been uniformly successful, and sustains in the community in which he dwells and in his native city of Newburgh a reputation for integrity and uprightness of character. Socially he is the most affable of men, of frank and generous nature, and is justly popular with a large circle of friends. He is a member of the Manhattan Club of New York City, and on intimate terms with many of the leading public men of the day. He is a warm personal friend and admirer of Governor Tilden, and a frequent visitor at his home. For a short time he was in the mercantile business at Fishkill, was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Fishkill Landing, and has been the president of that institution since 1867. He is of a progressive spirit, and lends the support of his means and influence to the various benevolent and social enterprises of the day. He has frequently served as a delegate to the State Conventions of his party, and was a delegate to the National Convention at St. Louis in 1876 that nominated Governor Tilden.

Mr. Mackin has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Sarah E. Wiltsie, daughter of Capt. James Wiltsie, of Fishkill, and died in 1862. To his present wife, née Miss Sarah S., daughter of ex-Mayor Col. James H. Britain, of St. Louis, he was united on Nov. 13, 1879.

HON. GEORGE CLARK.

George Clark was born in the city of Newburgh on Aug. 6, 1817. His parents were William and Mary Clark, the former of whom emigrated from the north of Ireland at an early day and took up his residence in Newburgh. The only survivor of the family of ten children is Mrs. Anna E. (Clark) Copeland, wife of ex-Mayor Judge Copeland, of Brooklyn.

The book education of Mr. Clark was obtained at the common schools of Newburgh, and at Goodsell's Academy of that city, where he was graduated. At the age of sixteen he was apprenticed to Daniel Farrington and Benjamin Lander, of Newburgh, to learn the trade of a painter. After two years he commenced business on his own account in partnership with James S. Young, and remained in that connection for two or three years. In 1840 he was married, and one year later he removed to New York City, where he carried on the wholesale and retail painting business for fifteen years. At the expiration of that time, having, by close attention to business and judicious and careful investments, accumulated a competency, he returned to his native city of Newburgh, in 1856, and thereafter engaged in no special business, but devoted his time and attention to public affairs, and to the support, direction, and management of various local institutions and enterprises. He died June 3, 1871, the flags on the buildings in Newburgh, and on the shipping at that place, being displayed at half-mast.

The special characteristics of Mr. Clark were the possession of great force of character, indomitable will-power and perseverance, strong individuality, and a laudable desire to succeed and excel in anything which he undertook. In his trade he was especially skillful, and as a grainer he had few equals in the State, having taken the prize for superiority in that department of his profession at several successive fairs at the American Institute, New York. He brought to the discharge of public affairs the same industrious and indefatigable spirit, and many of the institutions of Newburgh owe much of their success to his strong business ability and his devotion to their interests. Personally he was magnetic, of agreeable presence, and well calculated to lead and control others. A devoted adherent to the Republican party, he represented one of the districts of New York City in the State Legislature in 1851, and was also a member of the Common Council of that city. He was a warm supporter of the war, strongly devoted to Union principles, and during the war exerted himself actively in raising and equipping the necessary troops from his city, and gave them all God-speed as they wended their way southward to encounter the perils of the battle-field. As the Republican candidate for senator from the Tenth District of New York he was defeated by Hon. Wm. M. Graham.

Mr. Clark was identified in a prominent way with the administration of public affairs from the time of his return to Newburgh until his death. He was elected the first mayor of the city in 1866, when Newburgh was incorporated as a city, and, in the face of much opposition and an inadequate supply of funds, so successfully conducted the affairs of the new municipality as to secure his re-election in 1868. He retired in 1870, and was succeeded by his brother-in-law, Robert Sterling. In 1868 he was the delegate from his congressional district to the Chicago Republican Convention which nominated Gen. Grant to the Presidency, of whom he was always a warm friend and admirer. Upon the occasion of President Grant's visit to Newburgh, on Aug. 7, 1869, he was the special guest of Mayor Clark, at whose hospitable home he was entertained, and the address of welcome was delivered by Mr. Clark at "Washington's Headquarters," in that city.

On Jan. 5, 1857, Mr. Clark was elected a trustee of the Newburgh Savings-Bank, but resigned on January 4th of the following year. At the time of his death he was president of the Board of Water Commissioners of the city, president of the Newburgh Midland Railway Company, a member of the Board of Managers of the Hudson River State Hospital, and occupied various other positions of honor and trust. He was the virtual founder of Woodlawn Cemetery on the southerly borders of the city, selected the site for it, purchased the land, had it surveyed and laid out and adorned with trees, and at the time of his demise owned a large part of it. One of the most successful enterprises of its kind in the county, it must ever stand as a monument to his business judgment and tact.

The integrity of George Clark was never questioned. To the discharge of the various duties of life he brought a straightforward, honorable spirit that was actuated and controlled by deep-seated religious convictions. During his residence in New York City he was a member and trustee of the Presbyterian Church on Twenty-third Street, of which Rev. Dunlap Smith, D.D., was pastor, and after his removal to Newburgh he united with the First Presbyterian Church of that city, and remained a devoted and faithful member until his death. He was a member of the building committee of the church, and performed other valuable functions in connection with his membership thereof. At the time of his demise appropriate resolutions were passed by the various institutions with which Mr. Clark was connected, among which were the following by the Common Council of the city, on June 3, 1871:

"Resolved, As we have received intelligence of the death of our friend and citizen, Hon. George Clark, with the most profound sorrow, we deem it appropriate that this Council should make a record of the high esteem in which he was held by us, and of our grief at his unexpected decease.

"Resolved, That his faithful discharge of the duties of the various official positions he has filled, his unswerving integrity as a man, his enterprise and energy as a citizen, were the admiration of all who knew him. He was a devoted friend, a true gentleman, a kind and loving husband and father.

"Resolved, That with these convictions of the qualities of our deceased friend, we can but regard his death as a calamity to the public and a source of profound grief to his family.

"Resolved, That we willingly bear testimony to his being a most estimable and valuable citizen. So diligent was he in his duties, so sincere of purpose, and so moved by the spirit of public enterprise, we can but feel that our city has sustained an almost irreparable loss. Most sincerely do we deplore his death."

Mr. Clark was married on Jan. 27, 1840, to Miss Augusta, daughter of Jason W. and Martha (Griffith) Rogers, of the town of Montgomery, and granddaughter of Daniel Rogers, one of the first settlers on the Walkkill, in that town. Her father served as a captain in the war of 1812. Her maternal great-grandfather was Robert Griffith, a sea captain and a native of Wales, who married Miss Peck, daughter of the gentleman after whom "Peck's Slip" was named. Crissy, his daughter, married Cadwallader Colden, and lived at Coldenham. Robert, his son, grandfather of Mrs. Clark, settled in Orange County, two miles beyond Walden, about 1795, and was twice married. His first wife was Rebecca Barnes, of whom were born six children, among them Martha, wife of Jason W. Rogers.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Clark were Mary Augusta, wife of T. Powell Townsend, of Newburgh; George H., a graduate of the College of New Jersey, Princeton, in 1864, and a practicing lawyer at Newburgh; Martha Louisa, who married Jonas Williams, of Newburgh, Nov. 8, 1876, and died July 15, 1877; and Robert Sterling, who graduated at Princeton in 1874, and died Aug. 20, 1876.

WILLIAM WRIGHT.

William Wright was born near Newark, Wayne Co., N. Y., on the 17th day of May, 1818, and was the third of a family of four children who reached mature years. His parents were Jacob and Mary (Drake) Wright, and the other members of the family, Mary E., who married Watson Clark; Sarah, who married James D. Ford; and John D., who married Catharine Brower.

Born in humble circumstances in life, Mr. Wright enjoyed such educational advantages alone as the common schools of his locality afforded. But while still a mere youth the bent of his mind manifested itself in the direction of mechanical investigation and experiment, and gave evidence thus early in life of the possession by him of an original cast of mind and a genius for invention. Before he was eighteen years of age he built a small steam-engine out of crude materials, with a stove-pipe for a boiler, doing all the work alone in the cellar of his father's house, and when he had only seen one small engine before. This quite unusual feat by a lad of his age attracted the attention of many people in his native place, and among others of John Daggett, with whom he soon after associated himself, and commenced to learn the trade of a mechanic. He remained with Mr. Daggett for two and a half years, being foreman of his shop a portion of the time, and exercising a general oversight over his business. At the end of that time he removed to Niagara Falls, and worked in the repair-shops of the Buffalo and Niagara Falls Railroad, with the intention of becoming an engineer of that road, but ill-health prevented the consummation of this plan. He soon after engaged in the construction of steam-engines at Palmyra, N. Y., where he continued until 1842. In that year he removed to Rochester, N. Y., where he also engaged in engine-building, in connection with John Bush, until 1845. In that year he invented a rotary steam-engine, and soon after removed to Providence, R. I., where, in partnership with Mr. F. Church, he engaged in building the engine that he had invented. This business enterprise continued for one year, at the expiration of which time Mr. Wright worked for a short period in the employ of the Providence Tool Company, and finally engaged with Corliss, Nightingale & Co., of that city, manufacturers of steam-engines, as superintendent of their works, with whom he remained until 1850. At that time what is now known as the "Corliss engine" was deficient in several points necessary to make it a successful mechanical engine. The rotative valve which is now used by Corliss and others in the construction of their engines was designed at that time by Mr. Wright, and tended greatly to give the Corliss engine the success it afterwards attained. The original sketch drawn by him, verified by a fellow-workman, and adopted at that time by Corliss, is still in the possession of Mr. Wright. To those who are familiar with mechanics, and especially with the mechanical construction of steam-engines, the value of this discovery becomes apparent. By it Mr. Corliss was enabled to perfect his own engine, and he has ever since continued to use it. At a later period Mr. Corliss attempted to enjoin Mr. Wright and others, in the United States Circuit Court, from employing the principle of automatic cut-off, but failed to maintain a case.

In the year 1850, Mr. Wright withdrew from the employ of Corliss, Nightingale & Co., and built a large condensing engine for Brown Brothers, of Waterbury, Conn., which is still in use by that firm. Soon after he was employed as general superintendent by Messrs. Woodruff & Beach, of Hartford, Conn., and superintended the designing, building, and erection of several large engines similar to the one built for Brown Brothers, besides the large pumping-engines for the Brooklyn Water-Works, which he patented, together with another automatic cut-off engine, extensively built and used in all parts of the country. This cut-off engine was one of the first of that kind made. During the time that Mr. Wright was employed by Messrs. Woodruff & Beach he superintended the building and erection of the machinery of the "Kearsarge," and other gunboats used in the late war. In 1863 he resigned his position with the firm and became a member of the New York Steam-Engine Company, remaining as such until 1866, and building during that period many engines for government gunboats. In 1866 he became supervising engineer for the Washington Iron-Works, of Newburgh, N. Y., for the purpose of building his patented steam-engines, Mr. Wright receiving a salary and royalty on his patents. In 1870 he organized, in connection with several partners, the firm of William Wright & Co., doing business in the shop formerly occupied by the Washington Iron-Works. On the dissolution of the firm, in 1876, Mr. Wright continued the business, and is still engaged in manufacturing engines and general machinery. He is now extensively engaged in the manufacture of a new style of engine, under a patent issued in May, 1880, as well as under his original patents of 1866 and 1873. These engines are extensively used in all parts of the country, and enter into successful competition with the best engines in the market. Besides these, Mr. Wright has lately built several of his patented pumping-engines, greatly improved by applying the principle of compound engines, which perform a duty heretofore unprecedented and which are a credit to his mechanical genius.

Owing to his long experience and his natural mechanical talents, Mr. Wright stands at the head of his profession as a steam-engine builder, and has a wide reputation throughout the country in that regard. Although his life has not been free from difficulties and trials, and although he has had many obstacles to surmount, his mechanical genius, his patient assiduity in his profession, and his industrious habits, have advanced him to a prominent place among the inventors of the age. It has been well said that "he who creates anything is a benefactor to mankind," and among those who have proved themselves worthy of this encomium his name must ever be placed. Of simple habits, courteous and dignified in bearing, kind-hearted and benevolent, industrious and earnest, devoted to family and friends, abreast with the discoveries and inventions of the age, and in sympathy with every good work, he enjoys in the community in which he resides the reputation of an honorable and upright man, and of a substantial and worthy citizen. He was married, in 1841, to Miss Elizabeth G. Taft, and has one daughter living.

John Wright

Peter A B Fowler

PETER VAN BENSCHOTEN FOWLER.

The Fowler family is of English extraction, and has been identified with the pioneer history of several portions of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New York. Representatives of the family resided in the neighborhood of Islington, England, at as early a date as the year 1538. Sir Thomas Fowler, knight and baronet, dwelt at Islington in 1630. Philip Fowler was admitted a freeman of Massachusetts colony in 1634, and settled at Ipswich. William Fowler emigrated to America in 1637, and located at New Haven, Conn., becoming the first magistrate of that place. He is supposed to have been the ancestor of the Connecticut and New York Fowlers, but what relation he was to Philip Fowler is not known.

The Newburgh branch of the family trace their descent from Joseph Fowler, who is said to have been an early settler near Mespat Kills, L. I., in 1665, and the son of William, Jr., of New Haven. William, son of Joseph Fowler, had two sons, John and Jeremiah. John was born at Flushing, L. I., in 1686, and his sons were Samuel, Isaac, John, James, and Nehemiah. Samuel and John having purchased a portion of the Harrison Patent, he removed with his family to Newburgh, where he resided until his death in 1768. Jeremiah, his brother, settled at Rye, Westchester Co., and died in 1766.

Isaac Fowler, son of John, settled on the lands now occupied by Henry D. Fowler and M. W. DuBois in the town of Newburgh, his property extending to the Hudson River. He was an industrious and thrifty agriculturist, and the progenitor of the branch of the family to which the subject of this sketch belonged. His dwelling-house, a portion of which is now embraced in the residence of Henry D. Fowler, was built prior to the Revolutionary war. He married Margaret Theall, and had one son, who bore his name. Isaac, Jr., was born April 3, 1746, and married for his first wife, Martha, daughter of Charles Tooker, of Dans Kammer Point. She died in March, 1771, and was buried with her only child at Marlborough. In 1773, Isaac Fowler, Jr., married Gloriana, daughter of Caleb Merritt, of Marlborough, the children being Caleb, born Feb. 8, 1775, died March 8, 1826; Martha; Charles, a physician, who lived and died at Montgomery; Gilbert, who died in early life; Nehemiah, who passed his days in Plattekill, Ulster Co.; David, who resided in Genesee and Livingston counties; Francis, also a physician, who died in Ohio; and Isaac, who was also a practitioner of medicine, and who died in Ohio in early life. The third wife of Isaac Fowler, Jr., was a Mrs. Owen, of whom were born two children. Mr. Fowler died in 1823. During the trying scenes of the American Revolution he warmly espoused the cause of the colonies, and served as an officer in the patriot army.

Peter V. B. Fowler was born on the family homestead in Newburgh, on Feb. 20, 1800, and was the oldest of the children of Caleb Fowler, and his wife, Catharine Sebring, granddaughter of Catharine Sebring and Isaac Van Benschoten. The other children were Caroline, who married James E. Slater; Dr. Gilbert S., born April 11, 1804, died April 30, 1832; Ann Catharine, born 1806, died 1833; Amelia, married Wm. D. Weygant, died Dec. 30, 1834; Martha B., who died in infancy; Margaret, who died young; Matthew V. B.; Jacob V. B.; Elizabeth, born 1819, died 1836; and Isaac Sebring.

Peter V. B. Fowler passed his entire life on the home farm with the exception of a few years immediately following his marriage in 1826, during which he resided at Shawangunk, Ulster Co. He was a man of plain habits, retiring in disposition, and confined himself closely to his chosen avocation of a farmer. He participated in political matters only so far as it was necessary to secure a successful administration of public affairs at home, and ever manifested a deep interest in the prosperity of his native town, and in the maintenance of the institutions of his locality. He was an ardent supporter of the temperance cause, and contributed liberally to church and kindred institutions. For many years he was connected with the First Presbyterian Church of Marlborough, of which he was a trustee and elder. He subsequently united, with the First Presbyterian Church of Newburgh, where he filled the office of elder at the time of his death. In connection with Capt. N. T. Hawkins, he gave the land whereon the Presbyterian church of Middlehope stands, and near it laid out the Highland Cemetery, of which he remained president and treasurer until his death. He was the oldest director of the Highland National Bank of Newburgh, at the time of his demise, and appropriate resolutions were passed by that institution at the time, testifying that his "fidelity to the right, purity of character, kindness and generosity of heart, safe counsel and uniform courtesy have won for him during a long and eminently useful life the affection and esteem of all who knew him." He died on April 21, 1875.

Mr. Fowler was married on Oct. 4, 1826, to Eliza, daughter of Garrett DuBois and of his wife, Hannah Cooper, sister of Capt. Elias Cooper, of Sussex Co., N. J. She was born Aug. 21, 1801, and died April 12, 1866. The children were Henry D., born July 26, 1827; Abram D. B., born July 17, 1830, died Oct. 7, 1854; Caleb Gilbert, born Oct. 27, 1835, a prominent farmer in Newburgh for many years, died Jan. 29, 1879; and Peter D. B., born July 20, 1844, died Feb. 17, 1855. The second wife of Peter V. B. Fowler was Anna, widow of Peter H. Fowler, of Montgomery, to whom he was united on June 23, 1868.

Henry D. Fowler is the only living child of Peter V. B. Fowler. He was born in Shawangunk, but has resided on the old homestead of his ancestors since 1833, being the fifth generation of his family on the place. He is one of the leading farmers of his section, a director in the Highland National Bank of Newburgh, and a man of probity and moral worth. He was married on Oct. 20, 1853, to Anna, daughter of M. W. DuBois, of Newburgh, and has five children, viz.: Eliza D., Abram D., Wm. Jennings, Charles D., and Weygant D. Fowler.

DANIEL MERRITT.

The ancestor of the Merritt family of Newburgh was George Merritt, who was born in the year 1702, and died Feb. 2, 1750. He is presumed to have been the son of John Merritt, Sr., a native of England, who settled at Rye, Westchester County, as early as 1680, and who was one of its proprietors in 1715. He married Glorianna Purdy, and removed to Newburgh about the year 1747, in company with the Purdy and Fowler families, with whom he was connected by marriage. His wife died on Sept. 13, 1765, aged fifty-one years, five months, and thirteen days. Their children were George, Samuel, Caleb, Gabriel, David, Josiah, Humphrey, Elizabeth, who married Thomas Merritt; Jane, who married first, Morris Flewellling, and second, Elnathan Foster; and Glorianna, who married Joseph Morey.

Humphrey, born May 17, 1737, purchased in 1758 a part of the farm upon which his grandson, the subject of this sketch, resided at Middlehope. His children were Glorianna, Mary, Underhill, Caleb, Charlotte, and Moses. Underhill was born Feb. 7, 1769, and was suddenly killed by being run over by his wagon on Nov. 19, 1804. Both he and his father, Humphrey, were successful farmers at Middlehope, tilling the soil upon which Humphrey Merritt settled in 1758. The children of Underhill and Mary Merritt were Martha, born July 8, 1794, married Gilbert Holmes, settled in Newburgh, died Sept. 14, 1848; Josiah, born Aug. 21, 1796; Daniel, born March 10, 1799; Elizabeth, twin-sister of Daniel, born March 12, 1799, married John Goodsell, died Dec. 28, 1824; Charlotte, born Sept. 19, 1801, married Joseph Furman, settled in Plattekill, died Aug. 24, 1824; and Maria, born April 21, 1804, who married Robert Phillips, of Newburgh.

Daniel Merritt was born upon the old family homestead at Middlehope, at the date indicated above, and passed his entire life thereon. He enjoyed the benefits of a common-school education only. By the sudden death of his father the farm of his ancestors was left to his mother, and at an early age its care and management devolved upon Daniel. He subsequently became the owner of the place by purchase from the heirs. Throughout a long life he was one of the representative farmers of Newburgh, taking an active interest in events transpiring around him, and being closely identified with the progressive and evangelical enterprises of the day. He was formerly an Old-Line Whig, but subsequently an ardent Republican, and was one of the influential politicians of his locality. Although averse to the holding of public office, he was frequently honored by his fellow-townsmen by election to local offices of importance. For many years he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Middlehope, with which he was officially connected throughout his life, and of which he was one of the pillars. He was an earnest temperance man, and contributed liberally to worthy objects around him. His integrity, personal honor, kindness of heart, generosity and frank nature, and fine social qualities won for him the respect and esteem of his friends and neighbors. He died on May 7, 1867.

Daniel Merritt was married on Feb. 22, 1826, to Eliza Hait, of Latintown, Ulster County. She was born April 26, 1805. The children were Mary Jane, wife of Daniel T. MacFarlan, of Yonkers, N. Y.; Hiram, a real estate broker in New York City; Daniel H.; and Theodore, a leading druggist of Newburgh. Hiram and Daniel H. Merritt reside on the family homestead with their mother, the place being handsomely fitted up, and being one of the most picturesque and attractive in the town of Newburgh. They are the fourth generation of the family who have resided on the farm.

DR. JOHN L. FOSTER.

Dr. John L. Foster was born at Stamford, Fairfield Co., Conn., on March 7, 1804. His grandfather, Jesse Foster, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and resided at Danbury, Conn. David Foster, his father, was a cooper by trade, although he passed the greater part of his life as a farmer. He was born at Danbury, Conn. His wife was Sarah Weed. In the spring of 1810, David Foster removed with his wife and six children to the town of Warwick, Orange County, where he lived for eighteen years, engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1828 he removed to Newburgh and purchased the farm where the subject of this sketch resides, where he died on Aug. 8, 1854, aged eighty-one years and six days. His wife died in June, 1848, aged about seventy-eight years. David Foster was a quiet, unpretentious man, and a member of the Society of Friends at Canterbury. His children were William, Alvah, Henry, John L., George, Mary, James, and Elizabeth. All are dead save our subject. Mary married for her first husband Charles Cox, and for her second Isaac N. Lester.

Dr. John L. Foster passed the earlier years of his life on the farm in Warwick, and received his education in the common schools of the town. In 1826-29 he taught in one of the district schools of Warwick. He pursued the study of medicine under Dr. James P. Young, of Edenville, N. Y., and attended lectures under the Rutgers Medical Faculty in the city of New York, graduating with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in the spring of 1830. The year following he located in practice at Deckertown, N. J., where he remained until his removal to the town of Newburgh in 1836. Preferring the life of a farmer to that of a physician, he purchased the Washington Wood farm at West Coldenham, and engaged in tilling the soil for fourteen years. After the death of his father he purchased the family homestead near the city of Newburgh, whereon he has continued to reside since 1865. Dr. Foster has led a quiet and uneventful life, and confined himself closely to his chosen avocation of a farmer. Naturally of a retiring and modest temperament, he has avoided public life, and sought his highest enjoyment in the performance of home duties and in the bosom of his family. He takes an active interest in the benevolent and evangelical movements of the day, and is a member of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church of Newburgh. He enjoys the respect of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Dr. Foster was married on Dec. 17, 1834, to Harriet, daughter of the late John Scott and Abigail (Chichester) Scott, of Coldenham. The Scott family was originally from Long Island, but settled at the close of the Revolutionary war in Orange County. John Scott gave the land for the Reformed Presbyterian Church at Coldenham, and for the cemetery and school-house, and led an active, earnest Christian life, filling numerous positions of influence and prominence. He died July 21, 1840, and his wife on Feb. 14, 1826. Mrs. John L. Foster is the last survivor of a family of ten children.

To Dr. and Mrs. Foster have been born a family of seven children, six sons and a daughter, namely, Scott, John Gray, David N., William Wisner, Fanny S., Albert Zabriskie, and Samuel Monell. Fanny S. died Jan. 8, 1868, and John G. on Jan. 22, 1878. The remaining sons are nicely settled in life, and under the firm-name of Foster Brothers, Scott, David N., Albert Z., and Samuel M. are carrying on a successful mercantile business at different points in the West. Scott resides in New York, and does the purchasing for the business; David N. resides at Fort Wayne, Ind.; Albert Z. at Terre Haute, Ind.; and Samuel M. at Danville, Ill. William W. Foster is a commission agent in New York City.

David N. Foster, the third son of Dr. John L. and Harriet S. Foster, enjoys the honorable distinction of being the first person from Orange County to enter the Union army at the breaking out of the war of the rebellion. At the time he was attending school at the Montgomery Academy. The morning after the firing upon Fort Sumter the students of the academy made arrangements to raise a flag over the school-building, and young Foster was selected as speaker for the occasion. The burden of his speech was the duty of every loyal citizen to spring to the defense of his country. Not caring to hold the position of preaching what he did not practice, he closed his address by bidding his schoolmates good-by, and immediately started for home, and the next morning took the boat to New York, and was the same day enlisted as a private in the Ninth New York Militia, which remained in the service for the full term of three years.

He was engaged in most of the battles fought by the Army of the Potomac, and at the first battle of Fredericksburg was severely wounded in the assault made by Franklin on the enemy's right. While lying in the field-hospital he was commissioned lieutenant and appointed an aide to Gen. Robinson, afterwards to a position on the staff of Gen. Reynolds, killed at Gettysburg, and eventually came home captain of the company in which he entered the service as a private. He is at present a resident of Fort Wayne, Ind., a member of the firm of Foster Brothers.

BEVERLY K. JOHNSTON.

Beverly K. Johnston was born in Shawangunk, Ulster County, on June 21, 1818. The family was identified with the early settlement and pioneer life of that section of country, both his grandfather and father being residents of the locality. The latter, John Johnston, was a blacksmith by occupation, and died about the year 1822, in his sixtieth year.

Beverly K. Johnston

The early life of Beverly K. Johnston was passed in his native town, and his educational advantages were such only as the common schools of his day afforded. He engaged in various kinds of business during his minority, but on March 15, 1840, he came to the town of Newburgh and entered the employ of John E. Goetchius, in the hotel business at East Coldenham. He remained there four years, then accompanied Mr. Goetchius to Montgomery for one year; but, returning, leased the property at East Coldenham and commenced keeping hotel on his own account. In 1847 he became the owner of the place, and has since that time remained at the head of the establishment.

Mr. Johnston has applied himself to the profession of a hotel-keeper through a long series of years, and has done more to elevate the business than any man in Orange County. Actuated by an earnest desire to excel in anything which he undertook, he has placed himself at the head of his class, and his house is known for miles around as a well-appointed, well-regulated, and well-kept hostelry. While not a temperance house, it is run on temperate principles, and is free from the usual objections attaching to a rural hotel. It is patronized by leading men throughout the county, and is a popular place of resort in both the summer and winter season.

While Mr. Johnston has confined himself closely to his business, his affable manners, strict integrity, and generous hospitality have made him one of the most popular men of his section, and recommended him for appointment to several positions of responsibility and trust. He was formerly an Old-Line Whig, but now a staunch supporter of Democratic principles, and has been postmaster at East Coldenham, under all administrations and with brief exceptions, since 1845. He was one of the commissioners for appraising the damages caused by the putting through of the Short-Cut Railroad to New York, and for laying out the boulevard in the town of Cornwall. He was the candidate of the Democratic party for sheriff in 1870, but was defeated by a small majority. For the past twenty years he has been one of the directors of the Newburgh and Cocheton Turnpike Company. He is a member of Hudson River Lodge, No. 109, F. & A. M., of Newburgh.

Mr. Johnston was married in 1846 to Elvira S., daughter of Alexander W. and Elizabeth (Moore) Beatty, of New Windsor, and a representative of an old family of Orange County. William J., Anna F., John A., and Adaline L. Johnston, the children, are all living at home.

WILLIAM I. UNDERHILL.

William I. Underhill was a lineal descendant of Capt. John Underhill, who emigrated to New England from England and became notorious for his skill, daring, and heroic bravery in the Indian wars there about 1640, and in 1643 was employed by the Dutch of New Netherlands to fight the Indians, and commanded several expeditions against them on Long Island, Westchester County, and other points. His father, Samuel Underhill, was a well-to-do farmer in the town of Newburgh, owned real estate in Sullivan and Ulster counties besides, and by his wife, Alche, had twelve children, of whom the subject of this sketch was youngest.

William I. Underhill was born in the town of Newburgh in March, 1817. In early life he took an active interest in local matters, and soon after reaching his majority was elected collector of his native town. Prior to 1840 he took up his residence in Newburgh, where he was engaged in the grocery business until January, 1847, when he accepted the office of deputy sheriff under Sheriff Welling, who was then entering upon his second term of service. In the fall of 1849, Mr. Underhill was the Whig candidate for sheriff, but was defeated by John Van Etten, Jr., who represented the political party then in the majority. For six years following he was engaged in brick making in New Windsor, then sold out his business, and for a brief time afterwards was engaged in the hat business. In 1867, Mr. Underhill again accepted the nomination for sheriff, and was again defeated by Daniel Van Sickle, the majority candidate. In 1873, James W. Hoyt was elected sheriff of Orange County, and made Mr. Underhill his principal deputy, giving him in charge the eastern half of the county, which position he filled for the full term of three years, discharging the duties incumbent upon him with integrity and ability. Mr. Underhill was the Republican candidate for alderman of the Third Ward of the city in the spring election of 1878, was elected over Stephen King, and was filling this position at the time of his decease, Jan. 1, 1880.

Mr. Underhill was known as a man of strength of character in all the relations of life. He possessed a warm heart and generous impulses, decided convictions of duty, responsibility and justice in all the acts of his life, and met with a determined opposition any aggression or diversion of what he conceived honorable, frank, and manly. Naturally fearless and frank, it was always known where he could be found; ever ready to serve a friend, he was equally open and above board in his opposition to any one, and when once he had determined upon a course he did not hesitate or falter because of obstacles. Being free from any taint of hypocrisy he made strong friends, who only knew him to admire him for his sterling integrity and unsullied character. Although not a member of any church, he was ever sensible of duty and always ready to relieve, commensurate with his means, the needy and distressed.

Upon the occasion of his death the flags at the different engine-houses of the city were hung at half-mast, and Mayor Weygant called a special meeting of the Common Council to take appropriate action in honor and memory of one whose counsel was ever judicious, safe, and just.

Mr. Underhill was first united in marriage to Ann Eliza, daughter of Isaac Lockwood, of Gardnertown, who died leaving two sons, one of whom, William, survives. For his second wife he married, Jan. 4, 1871, Miss Selina Montrose, eldest daughter of Dr. James D. Johnston, a gentleman of English birth who settled in Middletown as a practicing physician in 1842.

Nathaniel Barns

Among the old citizens of the town of Newburgh who for many years occupied a prominent place in its social life, and who did much by his industry and modest efforts to advance the interests of the township, was the subject of this sketch. He was born in Litchfield, Conn., on Sept. 23, 1782. Shortly after that event his father, Isaac Barns, had the misfortune to lose all of his property through a defective title to real estate which he had purchased in Litchfield, and he moved to Cobleskill, Schoharie Co. After ten years' residence at that place the family removed to the wilds of Otsego County, and endured the hardships of pioneer life. Here, without opportunity for obtaining even the rudiments of an education, Nathaniel Barns grew to manhood. Shortly before he attained his majority one of his sisters, who had been educated by a relative living on Long Island, visited her father's family in Otsego. The contrast between her and the rest of her brothers and sisters determined Nathaniel to endeavor to better his condition by coming more in contact with the world. When twenty-one years of age he left home and commenced life for himself. Hiring out to work for ten dollars a month, and being obliged to pay fifty cents a yard for narrow unbleached muslin, gave him small opportunity to save money. Yet at this time he attended school long enough to acquire the rudiments of an education. Building turnpike roads was then in fashion. Before reaching his thirtieth year he had found his way to Ulster County, and was taking contracts to build parts of turnpike roads. Portions of the Farmers', the Huckleberry, the Snake Hill, and the Newburgh and Plattekill turnpikes were built by him.

The first real estate Nathaniel Barns ever owned was purchased in the year 1822, and is now part of the property owned by the Cedar Hill Cemetery Association. Careful and extensive observations had satisfied him that the town of Newburgh was a desirable place to establish a family-seat, and he shortly after married and settled where he subsequently resided at Middlehope. Here he passed his days engaged in farming pursuits, and through industry, economy, and the exercise of good judgment in business matters he accumulated a large estate, and took rank among the most successful and enterprising farmers of Orange County. When a little over seventy years of age he was deprived by an accident of his eyesight, and for the remainder of his life he was totally blind. Although feeling keenly the deprivation, no murmur ever escaped his lips, but he bowed in humble submission to this trying visitation of Providence. His life was characterized by strict integrity, a conscientious regard for the rights and privileges of others, and by a faithful discharge of the duties devolving upon him as a citizen, a husband, and a father. After a long life of usefulness he passed away on Sept. 17, 1879, in his ninety-seventh year.

Mr. Barns was married on Jan. 3, 1828, to Effie, daughter of Dr. Wm. Dusenberre, of the town of Plattekill, Ulster Co. She was born April 3, 1796. She proved a faithful helpmeet, a loving wife and mother, and through a long life performed her varied duties in a commendable manner. Her memory of dates, names, and events was remarkable, making her a sort of encyclopædia of such facts, and the faculty remained unimpaired until she was over eighty years of age. She was possessed of a kind heart, of quick perception, seeing by intuition what others must needs reason out, and, together with her husband, was in active sympathy with the temperance cause, and was one of its pioneers in her locality. She died Aug. 5, 1880. The children were William D., Nathaniel, Jr., Daniel D., and Mary E., residing in the city of Newburgh. The three sons were all settled by Mr. Barns on farms adjoining his own, and are still among the first farmers of the town, in sympathy with every good work, contributing as they can to the prosperity and development of their section of the county, and filling with success the various positions of trust and responsibility that have been conferred upon them.

The following testimonial referring to Nathaniel Barns was written to Mrs. Barns by an intimate acquaintance immediately after hearing of his death:

"None of those whom I have delighted to claim as relative and friend have ever reached the advanced age allotted to him.

"Venerable with years, respected by all, the counselor and guide of three generations, tired of life, he has stopped on his journey to rest, forever.

"Thus earth loses and heaven gains one more attraction.

"The life ended was one ornate with goodness, gentleness, patience, and parental love; and the memory of such a life must ever be a conscious and constant culture to those he has left behind him."

Gilbert Williams

GILBERT WILLIAMS was born in Westchester County, N. Y., on March 5, 1796. His parents were Benjamin and Sarah (Lewis) Williams, and the family were early located in Westchester County, being quite numerous at the breaking out of the Revolutionary war. The father of Benjamin Williams was Frederick, and his grandfather Stephen Williams, both of whom resided in Westchester County.

The early life of Gilbert Williams, until the age of twelve years, was passed upon the paternal farm in his native county. In 1808 his father removed to the town of Newburgh, Orange Co., where he engaged in farming. Gilbert Williams during his boyhood served an apprenticeship as a blacksmith with Samuel Corwin. His schooling advantages were meagre. Frederick Williams, his grandfather, had removed to Nova Scotia, where he owned a large landed estate. Here young Gilbert repaired, by invitation, when about sixteen years of age, taking charge of his grandfather's affairs, and inheriting at his death considerable property. With a portion of this he returned to Newburgh and purchased his father's farm, where he resided for twenty-one years. At the expiration of that time he bought his present farm, whereon he has since continued to reside.

Mr. Williams has led an active and industrious life, and confined himself strictly to the legitimate pursuits of husbandry. He has accumulated a good estate, is a man of good judgment, careful and circumspect in all of his affairs, a great talker, and devoted to family and friends. He has taken no interest in political affairs, and has voted only half a dozen times during his long residence in the town of Newburgh. He was formerly an officer in Capt. Daniel Tooker's company of militia, and delights in recalling the martial trainings and experiences of that body. Since 1832 he has been a member of the Methodist Church at Middlehope, and has filled most of the offices of the church and society with general acceptance. He has always been a staunch supporter of the temperance cause. He is now in his eighty-sixth year, mentally sound, possessed of considerable activity and ambition, and is one of the last living representatives of an old and fast-vanishing race of men to whose industry, toil, and self-denial so much of our present prosperity is due.

Gilbert Williams was married on April 11, 1832, to Jemima, daughter of Samuel Corwin, of the town of Newburgh. No children were born of the union.

Jacob Gillies

His father, Jacob Gillies, who was an early farmer of the town of Newburgh, was born on April 20, 1790. His mother, Martha, daughter of James Waring, of Newburgh, was born on Dec. 30, 1796. The children were John W., born June 13, 1816, lives in Haverstraw; Jacob, the subject of this memoir; Wright, born Dec. 10, 1820, head of the spice firm of Wright Gillies & Brothers, New York; Sarah W., born Feb. 2, 1824, married Clarkson Gerow, of Plattekill, Ulster Co.; Martha, born June 16, 1826, married David Marston; James, born April 7, 1829, in the spice business in New York; and Charles Wesley, born May 30, 1834, died in infancy.

Jacob Gillies was born on his father's farm, in the town of Newburgh, on June 1, 1818. His early education was obtained at the common schools of the neighborhood. His father died when he was fifteen years of age, and for a number of years thereafter he remained on the family farm with his mother.

On May 22, 1844, he married Phebe, daughter of Isaac and Sabina Griggs, of Newburgh, and a few years later he began the manufacture of brick, on the old Smith property, at Balmville. He subsequently purchased the Gardner brick-yard near by, where he also followed brickmaking. Still later he purchased the interest of his brothers and sisters in the homestead farm, where he passed the remainder of his life engaged in tilling the soil. He died Feb. 12, 1881.

Mr. Gillies belonged to that class of men who confine their lives to the inner circles of society, attending strictly to his legitimate private affairs, and avoiding publicity of every kind. His private life was free from reproach, and to the support and encouragement of church and kindred institutions he lent liberal assistance, often in excess of his means. He was a zealous member of the Fostertown Methodist Episcopal Church, and held at different times the offices of class-leader, steward, and trustee in that body. He was an earnest temperance man, a member of the Newburgh Bible Society, and one of those modest, substantial citizens upon whose industry, integrity, and personal worth the foundations of society rest. He bore in the community in which he dwelt the reputation of an upright and honorable man, and left behind him at his death recollections of a well-spent life.

Of a family of fourteen children, ten survive, namely,—James, Jacob, Milton, John, Wright, Homer, Anna, Frank, Frederick, and Martha. James and Homer are engaged in the mercantile business in Newburgh.

ROBERT WHITEHILL.

Robert Whitehill was born at Glasgow, Scotland, on June 1, 1845. His parents, Hugh and Jeannette (Murray) Whitehill, were also natives of Scotland, the former being born at Glasgow, and the latter at Ayrshire.

When Mr. Whitehill was two years of age he was brought to this country by his father, who emigrated in that year, settling first at Wappinger's Falls, Dutchess Co., where he worked in a cotton-mill, and subsequently at Newburgh. The early life of Robert Whitehill was passed until the age of ten years at Wappinger's Falls, where he attended the common schools of the neighborhood. Upon the removal of his father to Newburgh he enjoyed the benefits of academic instruction at the Newburgh Academy until he attained the age of thirteen. At that period of life he left school and went to New York City, where he filled the position of book-keeper and cashier in a millinery and fancy-goods store on Canal Street for three years. At the expiration of that time he returned to Newburgh and entered the foundry of Stanton, Mallory & Co., for the purpose of learning the trade of a machinist. He remained there until the suspension of business by the firm, and during that period, with his father's assistance, invented an improved machine for sizing and dressing cotton-yarn, and had put it in operation at the Newburgh Steam-Mills, then run by Garner & Co., at which place his father was employed.

After leaving the foundry of Stanton, Mallory & Co., Mr. Whitehill engaged as a journeyman in the employ of the Novelty Iron-Works, of New York, where he labored most of the time on ships. He remained in that position for one year, and then, being seized with a desire for a sea-faring life, he entered the United States navy as third assistant engineer on board the transport vessel "Kensington." He was soon after detailed and ordered to join the Gulf Squadron, where he filled the same place on the gunboat "New London" for six weeks, when she was ordered North. Upon arriving at Boston again Mr. Whitehill was ordered to report on board of the "Ticonderoga" for a foreign cruise. At this point he came to the conclusion that he must either decide to pass his life on the sea, a thing which he was little inclined to do, or to adopt another calling in life at once. He accordingly resigned his position in the navy in 1865, and returning to Newburgh, rented a room in the steam-engine works of Corwin, Stanton & Co., on Western Avenue, and engaged in the manufacture of his machinery for sizing and dressing cotton-yarn, his father being also interested in the enterprise. In 1870, in connection with his father, Mr. Whitehill purchased the steam-engine works of Wood, Frisbie & Co., retaining Amos R. Wood as a partner. The firm was known as Whitehill, Wood & Co., he himself holding a one-half interest in the business. Mr. Wood died a short time afterwards, and Mr. Whitehill took in as a partner Lewis M. Smith, the firm continuing as Whitehill, Smith & Co. until 1873, in which year Mr. Hugh Whitehill disposed of his interest to Whitehill & Smith, and a firm was organized as Whitehill, Smith & Hampson, in Newburgh, and Hampson, Whitehill & Co., in New York, for the purpose of manufacturing general machinery. In the winter of 1876-77, Mr. Hampson withdrew from the business, and Mr. Whitehill has since carried it on in the interest of Mr. Smith and himself. The enterprise is now a prosperous and successful one, and a large amount of work is turned out each year. Among other branches of machinery manufactured in the shop is the cotton-yarn dresser invented by Mr. Whitehill. A specialty is made at the present time of the manufacture of machinery for making artificial ice, and for cooling pork-packing establishments and breweries. Both Mr. Whitehill and Mr. Smith are also interested in the Chadborn & Coldwell manufactory of lawn-mowers on Western Avenue.

While Mr. Whitehill is young in years, he is entitled to a place among the successful and growing manufacturers of Newburgh, whose industry and inventive talent, intelligently directed, contributes much to the development and prosperity of the city. He takes an active interest in local affairs, and, as the candidate of the Republican party, represented the Second Ward in the board of aldermen in 1871 and 1872, being the president of the board in the latter year.

JAMES McCORD.

James McCord was born in the city of Philadelphia on July 1, 1826, and was the second of the five children of John and Rosella (Cargin) McCord. His parents emigrated to this country from the north of Ireland, being of hardy, Scotch-Irish descent. John McCord located in Newburgh about the year 1827, where he engaged in shoemaking. He died about 1845, in his forty-fourth year, and his wife, Rosella, on March 4, 1869, in her sixty-ninth year. Their daughter Jane was born in Ireland, and was brought to this country by her parents, becoming the wife of William Haxby, of Newburgh. James, William, Eliza (who married Stephen Vandewater), and Charles were born in this country.

The educational advantages of James McCord were such only as the common schools of his day afforded. He was early inured to a life of toil, and at eleven years of age worked in a tobacco-stripping factory for two years. He subsequently clerked for five years in the clothing store of William Sterling & Sons, of Newburgh, and with Moss Brothers, and Joseph Slee, for four years more, in the same business, in Poughkeepsie. During all of this time, although Mr. McCord had been in the receipt of modest wages, he managed through industry and economy to lay aside something for the future. About 1852 he entered the employ of the firm of S. H. Tift & Co., of Newburgh (consisting of S. H. Tift and his brother, Wm. McCord), who were engaged in the manufacture of brushes by hand in an upper story of the Oakley Building, corner of Fourth and Water Streets, and he also loaned money to the enterprise. In 1854 Mr. Tift withdrew from the concern, and the firm of J. & W. McCord was formed and still continues in the same business.

The enterprise at first was a small one. The work was all performed by hand, and the annual product of the factory aggregated about $6500. Through good management and close application to business the firm increased its trade, adding to the facilities for manufacture and improving upon the quality of the work produced; and in the winter and spring of 1879 and 1880, James McCord erected the present factory upon Broadway, which he owns individually, and where they removed from their factory in Lander Street. The building is one hundred and eighty feet long, with an average width of thirty-five feet, and is five stories high. The firm now employs about one hundred and fifty hands, and the annual production in brushes is about $60,000. The enterprise is next to the largest in the country of its kind, and occupies the largest brush factory in the United States. The firm manufacture all varieties of brushes, which are sold principally in the large cities.

Mr. James McCord is the head of the concern, and to his enterprise, business tact, and administrative ability much of its present prosperity is due. He confines himself closely to his business, leaving all outside enterprises alone, and avoids politics and public life. He is looked upon as one of the successful, self-made manufacturers of Newburgh, who has achieved success through the only sure road to attain it—by perseverance, honest toil, temperate and economical habits, and an intelligent attention to business matters.

Mr. McCord was married in July, 1848, to Hester M., daughter of Felix Shurter, of Dutchess County. She died on Nov. 8, 1873, leaving five children, viz., Alexander, James Luther, Mary Rosella, Hester Jane, and Nellie. In June, 1874, Mr. McCord married for a second wife, Sarah A. Shurter, a sister of his first wife, who died without issue Jan. 15, 1880.

MONTGOMERY.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

THIS is the central town of the three which border upon Ulster County. It is bounded north by that county, east by Newburgh and New Windsor, south by New Windsor, Hamptonburgh, and Walkill, and west by Crawford.

The area of Montgomery is 30,821½ acres. The total assessed valuation of the town (1879–80) was $2,017,710, and the total amount of taxes levied on that sum was $26,003.47.

This town is a part of the original John Evans Patent, which was set aside for indefiniteness and for other reasons.

The territory embraced in the present town was originally (1714) covered by the precinct of Shawangunk, in which relation it remained until 1743, when it was constituted a part of the precinct of Walkill, at which time it embraced the following patents:

Cadwallader Colden, April 9, 1719, 2000 acres.
John Johnson, Jr., Feb. 3, 1720, 1000 acres.
Thomas Brazier, March 17, 1720, 2000 acres.
Henry Wileman, June 30, 1712, 3000 acres.
David Gallatien, June 4, 1719, 1000 acres.
Edward Gatehouse, Jan. 22, 1719, 1000 acres.
James Alexander, April 9, 1719, 2000 acres.
Archibald Kennedy, April 9, 1719, 2000 acres.
James Smith, Dec. 15, 1722, 2000 acres.
Patrick McKnight, April 9, 1719, 2000 acres.
Thomas Noxon, May 28, 1720, 2000 acres.

Francis Harrison & Co., July 7, 1720, 5000 acres.
Jeremiah Schuyler & Co., Jan. 22, 1719, 10,000 acres.
Philip Schuyler and others, July 20, 1720, 8000 acres.
Jacobus Bruyn and Henry Wileman, April 25, 1722, 2500 acres.
Frederick Morris and Samuel Heath, Jan. 24, 1736.
Thomas Ellison and Lawrence Roome, Nov. 12, 1750.
Cadwallader Colden, Jr., and David Colden, June 20, 1761, 720 acres.

Upon a part of these patents Rev. Mr. Dickson, in his recent work on the Goodwill Church, makes the following remarks with reference to their location and settlement:

"Taking our stand at the point where the Goodwill church was afterwards built, we are within the limits of the patent to James Smith, Secretary of the province of New Jersey, dated Dec. 15, 1722. This tract was a somewhat irregular strip, extending from a point about half a mile east of the village of Montgomery to the Colden property (afterwards Coldenham).

"The northern boundary of our parsonage farm is on a line with the northern limit of Smith's Patent. To the south of this, extending through what is now termed Neelytown, Thomas Noxon owned, by letters patent dated May 28, 1720, 2000 acres. Immediately east of this, extending from the Smith tract in a southerly direction, was Patrick McKnight's 2000 acres, patent dated April 9, 1719. North of James Smith's Patent was that of Archibald Kennedy, dated April 9, 1719; and north of that again the patent of James Alexander, dated April 9, 1719; while to the west of Noxon's Patent was a 5000-acre tract, extending beyond the Walkill, granted by letters patent dated July 17, 1720, to Francis Harrison, Oliver Schuyler, and Allan Jarrat."

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

The distinguishing characteristic of this town is the valley of the Walkill, which extends from the southwest to the northeast, and for a part of the way in nearly a straight course. The Tinn Brook, with its long, sinuous course, is the most important tributary. This rises south of Coldenham, in New Windsor, flows in its general course north and then west, and enters the Walkill below Walden. In the southeast are the head-waters of the Beaver Dam, a stream which flows south into the town of Hamptonburgh. Its source is a spring of several yards in diameter, and of unknown depth.

The Muddy Kill is a small sluggish stream, which has its rise in the eastern slope of the Comfort Hills, north of the turnpike, runs south, draining the meadows, and enters the Walkill.

The surface of the country may be described as a hilly upland. The Comfort Hills, on the west border, rise to 600 or 800 feet above tide-water. The town, with its fertile alluvial flats and its valuable highlands, constitutes an agricultural section of great productiveness.

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

This can be introduced in no way more clearly and more satisfactorily to the people of Montgomery than in the following paragraphs from Rev. Mr. Dickson's "History of the Goodwill Church:—"

"The settlement by Henry Wileman north of the village of Walden was of very early date. It was made on his patent of 3000 acres soon after its purchase. (See Patents, and also additional account below.)

"With reference to the Harrison Patent we may state the following facts. The year after this patent was granted, or May 25, 1721, the name of Oliver Schuyler was dropped from the number of the patentees, and with Francis Harrison and Allan Jarrat were associated six others,—Adolphus Phillips, George Clark, Johannes Lansing, Henry Wileman, Jacobus Bruyn, and William Sharpas. The whole tract was surveyed, an extensive village was laid out, and arrangements were made to give deeds to several who were actual settlers on the land. The date of the indenture that recites this is Dec. 22, 1722. The parties named therein as actual settlers were Hans Newkirk, Hendrick Newkirk, Matthias Slimmer, Peter Kysler, — Kraus, — Brandos. These were Palatines, and as their community increased they erected a log church within the limits of their village, though neither the village nor the church attained to any size. The site of the church is indicated by the remains of the graveyard attached thereto on the east side of the Goshen road leading from Montgomery village, opposite the road which runs towards the Walkill, between the lands of Hasbrouck Decker and Peter Miller. It is marked on the old maps as the 'Harrison Meeting.'

"But leaving Wilemantown and the Palatine settlement (Germantown, as then the village was called), we return to the 'people of Walkill.' Their incoming we may date from about 1724-25, but as we attempt to trace it we are met with the difficulty that the early deeds of their lands were not recorded at the time they were executed, and but few of them were recorded afterwards. These few, however, are invaluable as guides. From them we learn that on the 4th of May, 1721, Thomas Neely, of Westchester County, purchased from Patrick McKnight 200 acres of land, and about the same time, or a little later, the exact date not ascertained, Samuel Neely purchased from Thomas Noxon 400 acres. Among the witnesses whose names appear on McKnight's deed to Thomas Neely we find that of John McNeal.

"The Neelys were still in Westchester County. When they came here we cannot definitely ascertain, but from the above, in connection with what follows, we can hardly fail to recognize in them and John McNeal, with the patentees, the men who were specially active in bringing in the colony.

"In 1727, according to family tradition, Archibald, James, and Robert Hunter came to the precinct. The former purchased 200 acres of land from James Alexander, including the farm now occupied by Henry Suydam. In 1728, Cadwallader Colden occupied land in the region still known as Coldenham.

"A manifestly defective list of the freeholders in the precincts of Highlands and Shawangunk, made in 1728, contains the names of Alexander Neely and John McKneal (McNeal, Jr.), with others not mentioned above, who no doubt belonged to the 'people of Walkill.'

"These are but hints at the incoming population. In the years immediately following other names appear. In 1731, James Munell purchased land from Thomas Noxon in the neighborhood of where Charles Miller, the senior elder of Goodwill Church, resides; and as witnesses to the deed we find the names of William and Robert Neely. . . ."

The above observations are based upon early documents, as there is no other source from which reliable information can be obtained with reference to the remote period under discussion.

The first settlement upon the patent of 5000 acres to Schuyler & Co. was by Jeronimus Weller & Co. in 1721, and on the patent of 10,000 acres by a company of whom Johannes Mingus and his son Jeronimus and Mattias Miltzbagh were a part; the agreement being, in the case of each patent, that any number of families, from ten to fifteen, might be located, to each of whom a tract of 100 acres should be given. Johannes Mingus built the mill, which was the nucleus of the old village of Ward's Bridge. The following original paper, furnished by Mr. Ruttenber, refers to this settlement:

"NEW YORK, May 25th, 1721.

"GENTLEMEN,—We hereby Desire, Authorize and Impower you or either of you to Contract and Agree with any Number of Persons and Families to settle upon and Improve part of a certain tract of Ten Thousand acres of Land lying in Ulster County upon the Paltz Creek (which was granted unto Jeremiah Schuyler and Company under the great seal of this Province the twenty-second day of January, 1719), upon such Terms and Conditions and under such acknowledgments, rents, covenants and restrictions as you or either of you shall think most for our advantage and for the speedy settling and improvement of the said lands:

"We shall be willing to grant One Thousand, Twelve hundred, or Fifteen hundred acres of said tract of land to you or twelve or fifteen families, that is to say one hundred acres to each family who will immediately settle and improve the same, to them their heirs and assigns forever, on the like conditions that Jeronimus Weller and Company are to be settled on the five thousand acres contiguous to the said ten thousand acres of land; and that upon such contract and agreement, to be by you or either of you made, we will execute conveyances accordingly.

"We desire you will be as expeditious herein as you possibly can and remit to us the contract and agreements you or either of you shall so make in order grants be executed without delay according to the purport and tenor thereof. We also desire (if such contract and agreement be made) that Capt. Jarrat do survey and lay out one thousand, twelve hundred or fifteen hundred acres of the said lands in one entire field or one hundred acres for each family that shall so settle and improve the same, from the Paltz creek aforesaid backwards to the hills or mountains to the westward thereof.

"What troubles and expense you are at we shall readily pay and satisfy with a handsome gratuity for your services. Your diligence herein will very much oblige,

"Gentlemen,

"Your Humble Servants,

"GEO. CLARKE,

"ADOLPH PHILIPSE,

"WILL. SHARPAS,

"J. V. CORTLANDT.

"TO JACOBUS BRUYN, Esq.,
and Capt. ALLANE JARRAT.

"A True Copy

"Per me J. BRUYN.

"Memorandum:—No meadows are to be granted but remaine in common."

INDORSED.

"Pursuant to the within Power, Jacobus Bruyn and Allane Jarrat did contract with and lay out for Johannes Mingus and his son Jeronimus

Mingus each of them one hundred acres, which they accordingly settled and improved and built a Mill thereon wherein the said Johannes Mingus unfortunately happened to be killed soon after, before they had grants for the land, whereon a dispute arising between the said Jeronimus Mingus (who being the oldest son claiming the whole as heir at law) and the widow of said Johannes Mingus, the proprietor refused giving grants until an agreement was made, the same not being done in time and the children being under age it was neglected until the decease of some of the Patentees, since which Mattis Miltzbagh, having married the widow, hath purchased some of the proprietors' rights, and also the one half of Jeronimus Mingus' right, who is removed from the place.

"Mattias Miltzbagh has also satisfied the children of Johannes Mingus, deceased, for their right in said land. The widow is lately dead."

As the result of this arrangement, Henry Crist, Stevanus Crist, Matthias Millsbaugh, and others made a settlement on the opposite side of the Wallkill from the present village of Montgomery. The lot known as the Crist mill-lot of 200 acres was a valuable piece of property. Indeed, these lands generally were the best in the town. The proprietors, soon after reaching here, immediately entered actively upon the work of clearing and cultivation. The names of these Germans generally appear in the account of the formation of the Reformed Church, given below. They were a vigorous and enterprising people. They soon made for their families comfortable homes, and secured ample farms, portions of which may doubtless still be found in the hands of their descendants. Gradually they ventured out from the Wallkill Valley, located farms upon the slopes of the Comfort Hills, and finally in the territory now constituting the town of Crawford beyond.

It must also be stated here that the Scotch-Irish element was very soon intermingled with the Germans through all this section. Together they laid the foundations of churches and schools, and opened up this fair country to all the advantages of civilization.

Of the Crist families a few notes should be added. The agreement to settle a number of families was made in 1721, as shown in the original paper, but that does not determine the precise date at which the various settlers entered upon their lands. It was, however, within a few years following that date.

The pioneer Henry Crist had one son, Jacob. He was the father of William, Jacob, and Henry, well-known citizens of former years. Of these, William died without issue; Jacob was drowned in the Hudson going to or returning from New York, where he had been to get his wedding clothes; and thus Henry heired all the property with one-half of the mill-lot. Turning to another of this family, we find that Stevanus Crist was the father of Christian, Jonathan, Simeon, and David. The lands owned by Stevanus Crist were afterwards the property of Dr. Joseph Whalen, and descended to his son, Joseph V. Whalen.

There was a third pioneer Crist, the father of Martinus and William Crist, of a later generation. His lands were subsequently owned by William P. Decker. Henry Crist, of the early emigrants, built at the foot of the hill east of the Dutch church and north of the turnpike, where there used to be an old orchard.

Town-meetings were held here in the early years. His son Jacob built on the hill opposite the village of Montgomery, at the mill where his son Henry resided during his life. The place was afterwards the residence of Daniel W. Waring, Esq.

Stevanus Crist built his first house about half-way from the end of the bridge to the residence in after-years of Joseph V. Whalen. Town-meetings were held at this place, and there the turnpike-gate upon the Cohecton road first stood, though it was afterwards removed west and became known as Hasbrouck's gate.

Among these settlers may be also mentioned Mr. David Bookstaver, who located a mile or two north of the Dutch church; Jacob Bookstaver, Frederick Sinsabaugh, and Johannes Youngblood, who also located in that vicinity. They bought a tract of 800 acres, and it has been said that they cleared the first land in that vicinity, but this is not correct, in view of the facts brought out in the original agreement given above. They were from Germany, and their names are conspicuous in the early annals of the Reformed Church.

To erect even a log cabin was out of the question: their neighbors, few and far between, and but little better off than themselves in facilities to accommodate them,—like the inhabitants of the regions of the north, and the earlier settler, Johannes Miller, on the hill at the Wallkill, hereinafter mentioned,—they concluded to excavate a resting-place for the winter in the side of a hill, and abide there till spring, with its genial influences, should dissolve the snow-drifts and permit them to go abroad and bestow some labor upon family comforts. This location was in the side of a gravelly hill, just east of the old brick church, and north of the Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike, and there, in that humble dwelling, the first-born of Mr. Bookstaver saw the light of heaven and heard the howlings of the winter's storm.

The Assembly of 1735 naturalized the following-named persons among others: Matys Milsbagh, Hendrick Christ, Stephanes Christ, Larens Christ, Philip Milsbagh, Jacob Sinsebagh, Jacob Booch Staber, and Johannis Jong Bloet.*

Johannes Miller settled on the Harrison Patent in 1727. He was a German, and came to this country about 1700. He resided for a time in Ulster County. His location was on the hill where in later years Mr. Elinor Miller, one of his descendants, lived. "The old square stone house stood on the crown of the hill like some fortified baronial castle of the olden time, with two doors in front to enter adjoining rooms, and windows like port-holes." This was in the ancient Harrison settlement, begun before Mr. Miller's arrival, interesting particulars of which are given in the General History and in the paragraphs from Rev. Mr. Dickson's work.

* Mr. George W. Millsbaugh, of Goshen, states that the tradition in the family indicates the settlement to have been earlier somewhat than the above date. The orthography of the names is from the original.

Among the settlers may also be mentioned Frederick Shafer. This old gentleman, before his death, manifested a laudable desire to protect and perpetuate the buried ashes of his German brethren, and enjoined it on his heirs, as a dying request in his will, to keep up and preserve this yard forever. His children religiously observed the dying injunctions of this pious patriarch.

Mr. Shafer was a tanner, and the first to set up a yard for that purpose in this part of the town. The place where he settled and conducted his trade was just south and east of where the turnpike crosses Comfort's Hill, on a fine durable stream that comes foaming and tumbling down through a gorge in the hill from the flats beyond, passing in its rapid and headlong descent the old residence of Mr. Jonathan Miller and of his son, Wickham Miller. Daniel Shafer, a son of Frederick, established a new yard nearer the kill and on the flat below. It was a fortunate circumstance for the early settlers that many of them were brought up to trades of the most useful and necessitous character, that they might exercise them in their new locations for their own benefit and that of others.

The name of some of the other settlers were Ooolis Shulp, Hanse Jerry Smith, Jacob Rickey, Jacob Pitts, Matthew Newkirk, Dederick Shafer, and Mr. Fillmore.

Of the Wileman settlement, already mentioned, the following particulars are added: The location was on the east bank of the Wallkill, a mile below the village of Walden, at the mouth of the Tinn Brock. The patent was divided into lots in 1712. In the history of St. Andrew's Church it appears that Mr. Wileman was a member of that congregation as early as 1733. This church is said to have been built on his land, of logs, and it was standing in 1775, as appears from the town record. There was a graveyard attached to it, and some of the gravestones remained in a field plowed over for half a century. This was the beginning of St. Andrew's Church, now at Walden. It was a missionary station, and their third minister, in 1744, was the Rev. Hezekiah Watkins. The farm on which the church stood afterwards belonged to Peter Hill, Esq., and Samuel Monell, deceased, and subsequently to Lucas E. Millspaugh. One of these gravestones had this inscription on it: "Hère lies the body of Mary, wife of John Green, who died June 17, 1752, aged 57."

Mr. Wileman was an Irishman, noble and open-hearted. He was a Freemason. Either to found a lodge or perpetuate one already formed, Wileman built a house on his farm for its accommodation, where they met during his life. After his death the institution, having lost its principal patron, went down.

During the Revolution, in 1782, a portion of the American army, consisting of a part of the Virginia line and some others, laid encamped on the farm owned in modern times by Mr. Peter Neaffie, about one mile north of the village of Walden, and on the north bank of the Tinn Brock, then known as the Wilemantown farm.* The forces—a portion of the army at New Windsor—wintered at the place to protect a number of baggage-wagons, cannon, and other munitions of war, sent for safety, and more abundant subsistence, in the country during winter. One cold night in the latter part of October, 1782, John McLean, afterwards commissary-general of this State for many years, was sent as a special messenger from this encampment to the commander-in-chief at Newburgh on some important business. While on his way, and where Stony Brook crosses the Shawangunk road, he was waylaid, seized, taken from his horse, gagged, tied to a tree, and the papers relating to his mission taken away from him. Here he was left to the mercy of accident, to be relieved by the first neighbor or traveler who should pass that way. As good luck would have it, he was fortunately relieved during the ensuing morning, although almost perished by the cold of the night. This incident, no doubt, together with a familiarity with the Clinton family soon after the war, contributed to aid the political preferment of this gentleman. The individuals who perpetrated this outrage on Mr. McLean at the time were suspected to be some of the gang of Claudius Smith. He had been executed, yet his band of marauders were still alive. The rascals were not content with inflicting this personal violence, but stole his horse, and Mr. McLean afterwards claimed and received compensation from the proper authority.†

At the time we speak of there was a large brick dwelling-house on the farm, which the troops used as an arsenal. Many years afterwards, in 1806, when taken possession of by another proprietor, several gun-barrels and an old wrought hand-grenade, with other warlike implements, were dug up in the cellar, where they had laid undisturbed for twenty years. The soldiers for some cause, perhaps to make musket-balls, tore off the lead which secured the pediment and roof of the building, which, being untenanted for many years after the war, and unobserved, caused it to leak, and brought the edifice to a premature decay. It was torn down about the year 1809. Among the soldiers were two Scotchmen, who were directed to cut down, for camp purposes, a large white-oak tree, which they effected by cutting it around on all sides. When the tree was about to fall the two men ran away from it,

"The account of John McLean for riding four days to Poughkeepsie—from thence to New Windsor and Little Britain and returning, to wit: 1st, 2nd and 3rd days of December to convey a letter to Maj. Gen. Gates, and two other letters to Brigadier Gen. George Clinton.

"Ordered, That the Treasurer pay John McLean £4 16s. in full of said account."

but having no idea, from the manner cut, which way it would fall, both ran along the same snow track and were killed. The stump, showing the manner in which the tree had been cut down, remained undecayed and visible for many years. The army, while here, cleared about twenty acres of woodland.

This Wileman farm was confiscated after the war as the property of Peter DuBois, who was a loyalist, and abandoned the place at the opening of the war. In consequence of some conveyance made by him before he left to evade a forfeiture, and a claim founded upon it by the Schuyler or Livingston family, who were good Whigs, the confiscation was revoked or never carried into effect.

The Committee of Safety appointed and employed several persons as riders to convey despatches, letters, etc., from place to place. John McLean, Abraham De Lamater, and John Van Duzer were three of them. These were very useful and important officers, as they were trustworthy and always at the direction of the committee.

Neelytown was settled at an early date. Wm. Eager, some time about 1728-29, purchased a tract and located upon it, a part of which remained in the hands of his descendants of the fourth generation.

The Neelys, Booths, and others were in the neighborhood either then or soon after, as shown above and in the church records below. Neelytown is a fine body of land and well adapted to grass and grain. Through the central portion of the settlement runs the Beaverdam Creek. Along this are the natural meadows, extending in one unbroken glade from just south of the Goodwill meeting-house at the north down to Campbell Hall on the south, and from the Walkkill on the west to the line of New Windsor on the east.

A general statement of early settlers on this territory would include Little John Neely, Grandy John Neely, Charles Booth (his sons Charles and George), Wm. Eager (his sons William and Thomas), James Houston, Patrick Barber, John Blake, Alexander Tremble, James McCobb, Robert Monell, Teunis Van Orsdell, Gideon Pelton, Robert Sutter, Rev. Robert Annan, James McBride, William Jackson, James Jackson, Dr. Chas. Clinton, Col. John Nicholson, James Barkley.

It was this community which, in 1765, established the Neelytown Church. A former writer describes this church and relates various anecdotes, as follows, together with items concerning some of the settlers:

"In old times, when churches were few and the population sparse, a congregation covered a large extent of territory. Within the recollection of the writer, Messrs. Shaw, McWilliams, Mrs. Wilson, and others, from Scotchtown; Messrs. Wood and Younge, from Little Britain; Moses Bull, William Bull, James Bull, Robert Hall and his sister Miss Miriam, Youmans, John Wilkin, Robert Wilkin, and others, from Walkkill, were in regular attendance at this church, besides a large number of those who formed the congregation of Graham's Church in the now town of Crawford. We shall never forget the Sabbath-day appearance of Robert Hall, his sister Miriam, and colored servant-woman. They usually came in a cart, driven by Miriam. A certain form and order indicating notions of rank and superiority were clearly observed in the manner of these people. In the cart, drawn by a horse which spent the day in going to and returning from kirk, first sat Miriam, holding the lines in one hand and driving with the other, cutting and hurrying on, but making little progress by the hour. Next, and straight behind her, sat Robert, dull and stupid as a piece of carved wood, and in greater dread of Miriam's tongue than the horse was of her gad. Third, and last in the row, sat the African servant, clean and respectful, the very image of submission and obedience, who would not speak unless bidden by her mistress, if her poor life depended upon the act. When they arrived, cart unloaded and horse secured, the same order of precedence in the line of march to the church-door was systematically taken up and rigidly enforced. We have seen this a hundred times and never saw it otherwise. The return from church was conducted in the same invariable order. The whole affair was novel and truly ridiculous in the eyes of young republicans, and between the three, the neat and obedient African shared the largest respect of the people. Peace to the memory of Miriam! for, though hard and cruel in all her exactions, self-willed, dictatorial, and bigoted, but rigid in the discharge of Christian duties, by her last will, she established and founded the Ed scholarship in the theological seminary at Princeton.

"This old Scotch lady that would be, in despite of public opinion, was always in trouble with Mr. William Wilson, a neighbor and countryman of hers. They used to fight, quarrel, and come to blows, in which Miriam frequently had the best of it. Mr. Wilson, perhaps in respect to her sex and frailty, had forborne to use his powers to the extent he was capable of, but at last concluded there was no virtue in longer forbearance. One day they met on the highway, and after the exchange of a few sharp long shot, by way of preparation, came to blows. Mr. Wilson threw her down and intentionally broke her arm, and there the battle ended. Miriam sued him at the law, which frightened him lest it might take his farm to pay the damages. He proposed to leave it to men; the proposition was accepted, and early one morning Mr. Wilson called on the writer's father to get him to act as one of the men. He stated his case, and ended by saying 'that he and Mrs. Hall had agreed to leave the decision of the matter to Capt. Trimble and Squire Eager, and trouble no honest people with it, and he would be much obliged if he would serve him.' This compliment insured a compliance."

When the Eager family came they found Mr. Neely on the farm afterwards owned and occupied by Mrs. Mary Trimble and Mr. Charles Booth, at the north end of the Tamarack Swamp, beside a beautiful spring of clear water. The Booths were English, the Neelys and Eagers, Irish.

The first stock the Eager family owned in their new residence was two heifer calves, to support which through the winter they went over to the Tamarack Swamp, some two miles off, in the vicinity of Mr. Booth, at the proper season, and cut the long grass which grew there for fodder, which, in the winter, they drew home on a hand-sled with the aid of snow-shoes. Their first house was a log one, and situated in the orchard west of the tanyard owned in modern times by Mr. James Peck. The second was of stone. This was built before the Revolution. The land was cultivated for a year or two with the hoe and spade, as they had no horses or oxen; a plow could not have been used if they had one. Wheat was the first, and, for many years the principal, crop. Rye was not raised by the family till after 1800. The land, till then, would produce as much wheat as rye, and one was twice the value of the other. The quantity of grain raised exceeded home consumption, and was carried to market. The market-places were either at the village of New Windsor or John Ellison's mill, afterwards Major Morton's. When grain was first taken to either of those places, the usual mode was to load three horses with bags, ride one and lead two. Returning home, the two were turned loose to follow the rider. The usual price of wheat was fifty cents.

James McBride, the grandfather of Gen. John McBride, of Hamptonburgh, and Mr. White, the grandfather of Maj. John White, of Walkill, well-known citizens of later times, were passengers on board the same vessel with William Eager. Capt. James McBride, of the Revolution, married the daughter of William Eager, son of the first settler. These families arrived in 1728.

We have mentioned that Charles Booth was an early settler at Neelytown. He had two sons, Charles and George, each of whom married a daughter of William and Sarah Bull, early settlers in the town of Goshen. Mr. Booth purchased 1000 acres and located it. The spot occupied by his first house, at the north end of the Tamarack Swamp, was in later years occupied by Mr. William Conning, of Scotch descent, who married in the family.

Charles continued to reside during his life on the spot selected by his father. Capt. William Jackson, of the Revolution, father of Capt. William Jackson, of Neelytown, and Dr. Samuel Jackson, of the navy, married a daughter of Charles Booth. George, the other son, made a new location on the original purchase, and built a house on the farm owned by William Booth, of a former generation, just east of the thread of woods separating the lands subsequently owned by Mrs. George Conning from the Booth estate, and about the fourth of a mile southwest from the former residence of William Booth. The largest part of this 1000 acres was held by the Booth family for a long series of years. At an early period in the history of the town Mr. George Booth was an active member of the community, and we find his name on the records as early as 1770, discharging the office of a justice of the peace. The Booth family emigrated first to Long Island, and from there to this town.

The enrollment of the freeholders of Shawangunk of 1728, already given in the General History, has considerable value in determining early settlement, though it relates partly to territory beyond the limits of the present town of Montgomery, and may not be a full list of settlers, as there may have been a number living here who were not "freeholders," and, as shown in the General History, the list was prepared for the special purpose of obtaining a jury. The names of persons upon that list who are known to have been in Montgomery were Abraham Schutt, Hendrick Newkirk, Hendrick Krans, Edward Gatehouse, David Galatian, Henry Wileman, John McNeal, Jeronimus Mingus, Christoffel Moul, Samuel Neely, Israel Rogers, John Neely, Alexander Neely, Col. Cortlandt.

The roll of a military company in Wall-a-kill, 1738, given in the General History, is a valuable record of the population at that time. There was then no precinct of Walkill. "Wall-a-kill" was simply the early settlements in the present town of Montgomery.

An examination of the names will show that the great majority were certainly on that territory and probably all were. It is the arms-bearing population from sixteen to sixty.

The story of early settlement thus traced for various parts of the town might be enlarged upon to an indefinite extent. It must, however, be kept within reasonable limits in a single volume devoted to the entire county.

From this historical review, it appears that the eastern portion, extending from the west line of New Windsor to the Wallkill, was originally settled almost entirely by Scotch-Irish; that the valley of the Wallkill was settled by emigrants from Holland and Germany; and that the western portion, extending from Comfort's Hills, west of the Wallkill, to the Shawangunk Kill, embracing the town of Crawford, was jointly settled by Irishmen and Dutchmen. Though, at the original settlement of the town, large districts were in possession of the Dutch and Germans, yet those languages were never taught in the public or private schools, except in two instances. There was one at the foot of the hill east of the brick church, and another at Hans Youngblood's for some years. The consequence was those languages soon ran out, and though kept up by use in the family circle, in the pulpit, and conversations of aged persons, they literally expired, without an effort to preserve them, in the second and third generations. Among the Germans and their first descendants it was very common to send to Philadelphia for almanacs printed in their language. They were a little prejudiced on the point, and credited a statement found in them about all the matters and things usually contained in such books, even down to the wind and weather, with an easier faith than if the same were found elsewhere.

In the following special family notes we are indebted to the works of Eager and Dickson.

Johannes Miller emigrated to this country from Germany as early perhaps as 1720. He remained at New York for a time, then removed to Esopus, Ulster Co. From there he came to the precinct of Shawangunk, in the neighborhood of the Schoonmakers and the Bruyns. He engaged in weaving, and finally married Jemima Schoonmaker, a daughter of Cornelius Schoonmaker. He whiled his lonely way on horseback along the valleys and hills which skirted the Wallkill, and entered the town of Montgomery. Here, from inspection, he was satisfied he had found lands upon which he could live by honest industry. He returned, laden with good fortune and high hopes, with a saddle of fat venison behind him, to relate the adventures of a week and the rich discoveries he had made.

When the time came to be ready and off, some of the friends and neighbors in Ulster, who were opposed to their removal, refused to assist in conveying them to their new location, but said they would be ready at all times to move them back. The removal, however, proceeded, and was conducted on horseback, as they had neither sideboard nor piano-forte to transport. Without accident they arrived at the land of promise, and deposited their rude and scanty articles of housekeeping in a shanty constructed of two crotches, a pole thereon, and other timbers reaching from that and resting upon the ground. In this open hut they resided a whole year. The situation was airy and cool in summer and winter, upon the crown of the hill upon the bank of the Wallkill, on the road from Montgomery to Goshen, and afterwards occupied by the old square stone house taken down a few years since by his grandson, Mr. William Miller. At the foot of the hill is one of the most glorious springs that ever gushed from the earth.

In settling on this spot they planted their shanty directly in the vicinity of the natives, and side by side the Indian wigwams, which were on the flat immediately below, with whom they lived on terms of friendship.

Their first summer crops—corn, potatoes, pumpkins, and watermelons—were raised on a spot cleared by the Indians, which, being low on the margin of the stream and annually overflowed by it, was made rich with the sediment deposited by the water and needed little cultivation. The crops came fully up to Miller's most sanguine expectations. The fruits of the season ingathered, the new settlers could not do less than pay a filial visit to their friends and kin in Ulster, and not only tell of their success and joyful prospects, but exhibit the fruits their own hands had produced from the earth.

To satisfy the discontented in Ulster, and prove to his friends his judicious selection of lands, Miller placed two watermelons in a bag and loaded them upon his horse, determined to have it in his power to say, "Judge of my lands by their produce." On their way they stopped at old Mr. Bruyn's, in Shawangunk, to refresh themselves and rest their horses. Bruyn was fond of a joke. While at his house he substituted two pumpkins for the melons, which he carefully laid by to be restored when the exchange should be discovered. The guests departed and made their way to Mr. Elting's, near the Paltz. This individual had been very friendly to the parties, and assisted them to move to their new location in the spring. On arriving at his house the horses were unladen for the night, the travelers received and entertained. When the subjects of land, quality, products, etc., were being mentioned and discussed, Miller had his bags and melons brought in for exhibition. On untying the string and turning them out, lo! the melons had most mysteriously changed into two beautiful yellow pumpkins of about the same size. Miller stood confounded for a moment, but Elting, knowing that they had stopped at Bruyn's, instantly exclaimed that "old Bruyn or the devil had been the enchanter!"

The issue of this marriage was one child, whose name was John. After the death of his wife he married Sarah Bull, the widow of William Bull, of Hamptonburgh, remarkable for her great age and the number of her descendants. Johannes Miller, the first settler, died in 1782, aged about ninety years. His son, John Miller, was twice married. His first wife was Miss Esther Bull, the oldest daughter of William and Sarah Bull, of the old stone house in Hamptonburgh, the daughter of his father's second wife by a former marriage, as above stated. The issue of this marriage was Peggy, Jemima, Johannes, and William. His second wife was Miss Anne Weller, daughter of Henry Weller.* His death was caused by an accident in 1774. He was found dead in the Wallkill, in the vicinity of his father's residence. The supposition of the family was that he was drowned in an attempt to swim his horse across the Wallkill, though himself an expert swimmer. It is not known whether he or his father built the old stone house. He was town clerk of Wallkill in 1768, and held the office for several years.

The consequence of this unexpected death was that it deprived the family of its natural head and protector at a time when, from the age of the children, the disturbed condition of the country, verging daily to an outbreak with the mother-country, his protection and presence could be ill dispensed with; and the care of the mother and children instantly devolved principally upon Johannes, the eldest son, then a mere lad. He was born in 1760, and the duties of the father were performed by his son in a becoming and filial manner. The family were Lutheran, and so remained till after the Revolution, and until all the families of that denomination of Christians in the settlement at the place were swallowed up by or merged into other denominations.

Mr. Johannes Miller was not liberally educated, but instructed only in the elementary department of a slight English education. Indeed, when he ought to have been at school he was industriously laboring to support his mother and sisters, or on duty as a militiaman guarding the frontiers against the incursions of the Indians. The war continued from the time he was sixteen till he was past the age of twenty-one, and he had little opportunity to leave home for educational purposes. This deficiency of an early education he endeavored to supply by after-reading and observation.

For a short period after he was fifteen years of age he was boarded out at the old stone house of William Bull, in Hamptonburgh, where he attended a school taught by an Irishman, and learned reading, writing, arithmetic, surveying, etc. Soon after the commencement of the war, and when about sixteen or seventeen years of age, his brother-in-law, Hendrick Van Keuren, of Montgomery, commanded a company of militia, in which he was orderly sergeant, and when it was called out into service went with it. Notwithstanding the troubled and hostile condition of the country, he had the moral courage to enter a service for life, and made Miss Eve Mould Mrs. Johannes Miller on the 17th of March, 1779, and moved into the old stone house on the hill at the Wallkill. Here he had the satisfaction of entertaining a troop of horse at his expense a part of one winter for the benefit of the country, and of paying a Continental tax of three hundred and fifty bushels of corn.

Soon after the war closed his neighbor, Johannes Smith, proposed to sell his farm of 125 acres, which adjoined him on the north, at ten dollars per acre. Miller contracted to purchase, but was unable to meet his contract. Smith refused to take paper money, and specie could not then be had in the county. He proceeded to New York to borrow the amount, but they asked a premium of five per cent. besides the legal interest. This he concluded not to pay, and returned without the money. Determined to have the land, he issued twenty notes of £25 each, payable at different periods, without interest till due, which Smith received, finding he could pay for a farm in Shawangunk with them, and which he had agreed to purchase. These notes were all paid at maturity when presented, except four which had found their way into the pocket of some friend at Hackensack, in New Jersey, and were not presented for several years after due. This would be thought a small specimen of raising the wind at this day of financial improvement and kite-flying, yet the reader must remember that Mr. Miller was just of age, of no financial experience, an uneducated and illiterate young countryman, with no father to guide, no friend to counsel.

He was an extensive reader on the subjects of theoretic and practical agriculture, and no farmer in the county had a more extensive library. Ambitious in this, he was no less so in becoming a politician, and his reading extended to that and kindred objects, and he settled down firmly in the school of Washington. He was early known as a Federalist, and so continued till his party was dissolved, when he became a Whig, and so continued till he died. He was a hearty opposer of Mr. Jefferson, his gunboat system and ultra democracy. From 1798 to 1806 politics raged in this county, as indeed they did everywhere else in the country, and Mr. Miller was actively engaged to sustain his party and accomplish its objects.

One dark night, returning from Goshen, where he had been attending a political county meeting, he was waylaid, attacked, and knocked from his horse, though not dangerously injured. From some old hostile feeling still subsisting between himself and one of his neighbors, and from something which had transpired that day in Goshen, he judged who his assailant was, and without due reflection called him to the field of honor. Capt. William Trimble, of Neelytown, accepted the invitation, but on a meeting of the parties, procured by mutual friends, the matter was adjusted to their satisfaction. Capt. Trimble was not unlike Mr. Miller, proud, high-minded, and honorable, but more impulsive, headstrong, and passionate.

Mr. Miller was very friendly to the manufacturing interest of the country and internal improvement by roads and canals, and we believe his friendship and the hostility of government cost him many thousands of dollars. He was mainly instrumental in getting up the cotton-factory at Montgomery. In 1801 he was very active in procuring the charter for the Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike, and afterwards in procuring the stock to be taken and the road built. For years he was the soul and body of the company.

Though himself not an educated man, Mr. Miller was a patron of learning as far as a liberal appropriation of means could accomplish it. His own wants and deficiencies may have induced and stimulated him to this course. Just notions upon the subject doubtless impelled him to supply others with that denied to himself. In 1791, with many others, he was instrumental in founding the Montgomery Academy, then but five in the State. Farmers' Hall, in Goshen, was one of them, and chartered in 1790. It was no mean commendation to the citizens of the county that out of five academies in the State, Orange should have founded and nourished two of them. Mr. Miller was the leading and efficient man in this enterprise, so valuable and honorable to his native town.

Mr. Miller was not a man of impulses in anything, and did not encourage and give aid to a measure today, and when the fit was off, permit it by neglect to go down to-morrow, to be finished at a future period. What he did was executed with all his might, sparing neither time nor money till his object was satisfactorily accomplished, then he adopted it as his own, called it his, and took care of it as if it were his own child. Something of this kind seemed essential to his well being.

The old academy in process of time became worn out and unfit for the purposes intended, and the trustees judged it prudential to replace it by a new one. The great question was, How could it be done? Where could the funds be procured? At this time (1817) the State was commuting the quit-rents when the inhabitants of the patents asked for it. Mr. Miller, knowing they remained uncommuted on two or three patents in the county, and ever-fruitful in expedients, suggested the propriety of asking the Legislature to grant them for the erection of a new academy.

The application was made, and a law was passed in their favor which canceled the last patents in this county from all future payment of quit-rents, and was the means of building the Montgomery Academy. This grant amounted to $2000, and the trustees undertook to raise $1500 by subscription, which they accomplished. The building of the academy and raising the $1500 became hobbies with Mr. Miller, and he rode them night and day. The subscription papers were prepared by Mr. Miller, and made in the form of a little book convenient to carry in the pocket, and put into the hands of several of the trustees. Some short time after they had been in circulation he met Mr. H., a gentleman of wealth and a bachelor, who resided about six miles from the village of Montgomery, in the town of New Windsor. Mr. Miller leisurely took out of his pocket a large pocket-book, put on his glasses deliberately, untied the string, and produced his subscription list. He addressed himself to Mr. H., saying that the old academy was worn out, that it had done good service in the infancy of the country, that the interests of education required that it should be replaced by a new and larger one, which would confer honor on the town and county, that the funds for the purpose being small, the trustees threw themselves and the cause of education upon the patriotism and liberality of their fellow-citizens to raise about $1500, which they expected to do in a few months, that every gentleman who had been asked had willingly subscribed according to his means, and that he was happy in having the opportunity to present him with the subscription list thus early as they wished all the large subscribers to sign first, etc., and at the same time handed him the little book to see what others had signed and what he would. Mr. H., rather slowly and with apparent reluctance, received it, and after a moment's examination handed it back, saying that such matters were out of his line of business, that he had no children to educate, and if he had the academy was too remote from his residence to avail himself of its benefits, and asked to be excused. Mr. Miller received his little book with much courtesy, and expressed himself under many obligations to Mr. H. for his politeness in looking over it, deliberately put it back in the pocket-book, which he tied up and replaced in his pocket.

Some two or three weeks afterwards, Mr. Miller accidentally met Mr. H. in the same office, and after the usual compliments of the day were passed, Mr. Miller deliberately put on his "specs," drew from his pocket a large pocket-book, untied it, and produced his subscription list, and addressing himself to Mr. H. recited the same identical speech previously delivered, word for word, sentence for sentence, as if stereotyped for the occasion, with this addition,—that he was very sorry he had not had the pleasure of presenting to him the subscription at an earlier day, as he wished certain friends of influence to head the list. A spectator would never have suspected that Mr. Miller had ever seen Mr. H. before on the subject, and Mr. H., being a modest man of few words, said nothing to contradict such an impression. The book was returned accompanied with about the same reply as before made. The scene was rich. Not long after this second interview business again caused these gentlemen to meet for the third time, and Mr. Miller, with all the gravity and politeness conceivable, produced his big and little book as before, and went over the same speech, word for word, with the least possible variation. When through he handed the subscription list over to Mr. H., who received it, rose from his chair, and said to a friend, "Lend me ten dollars: I might as well pay first as last."

Mr. Miller was a practical farmer, and did all that he could to advance that interest. His lands were among the most beautiful in the county, and laid on both sides of the road leading to Goshen, between the village of Montgomery and the Walkill. In the old act, passed 1793, "for the promotion of agriculture, arts, and manufactures," Mr. Miller's name appears as one of the petitioners asking for the act of incorporation. Some of these gentlemen were Robert R. Livingston, Samuel L. Mitchell, Ezra L'Homme-dieu, James G. Graham, Matthew Clarkson, George Clinton, Egbert Benson, Richard Varick, with several others from various parts of the State, and John Nicholson, Andrew King, John Barber, Joseph Barber, Johannes Miller, and William Thompson, from Orange County. This was the earliest attempt made in this State by individuals to promote these objects.

Mr. Miller was president of the Agricultural Society of Orange County, and addressed Gen. Lafayette in Newburgh in 1825, in a short and pertinent speech. This was appropriate, as the general was known, both at home and abroad, as a practical farmer.

Mr. Miller, by the request of friends and neighbors, was appointed to lay the corner-stone of the First Presbyterian Church in the village of Montgomery. He was entitled to this honor not only by virtue of his age and respectable standing, but by exertions and liberal donations towards its erection. He died Dec. 17, 1834, aged seventy-four. He had but two children who grew up to age, John and Maria.

John married Miss Oliver, daughter of Judge Oliver, of Marbletown, Ulster Co.; and Maria, David Hunter, Esq., of Bloomingburgh.

Another prominent citizen of the olden times was John Blake (properly John Blake, Jr.), whose father, John Blake, purchased (May 1, 1761) 477 acres of the Patrick McKnight Patent. He was of English descent, the genealogy of the family being traced back to Robert de Blakeland, of Wiltshire, 1286. His mother, Mary Morris, of Coldenham, however, was from Ireland. Mr. Blake was not an educated man, but received only such elementary instruction as the common schools of the country offered after the war and before 1790. At the time of the division of Ulster County and the formation of Orange, Mr. Blake was deputy sheriff of Ulster and resided at Kingston. After this, and when his official period of service expired, he returned to Neelytown. In 1800 he was appointed sheriff of the new county of Orange, served its term, and executed the office to the general satisfaction of his fellow-citizens. In 1806 he was elected by the Republican party—the class of politicians to which he had ever been attached since entering into public life—to represent the county in the General Congress of the United States. Some years subsequently he was again elected to the same office, and on both those occasions his votes were cast agreeably to the wishes of his constituents. Mr. Blake was very modest and diffident, and therefore never trusted himself to speak in public while a member. Montgomery, his native town, had unlimited confidence in his judgment and discretion as a town officer, and so well were they satisfied with the care he took of their interest in the county board of supervisors that he held the office for fifteen years in succession, and until he requested to be excused as a personal favor. While a member of the board they were engaged in settling the ratio of valuation of the respective towns in the county, and those members who knew the quality of land on the public highway from Montgomery to Goshen and the valley of the Walkill were of the opinion that Montgomery was being rated altogether too low. They inferred the whole town, then including Crawford and reaching west to the Shawangunk Kill, was of the same equally good grade of land, notwithstanding the assurances of Mr. Blake to the contrary. On the adjournment of the board, before completing their annual business, Mr. Blake invited one of the board to ride home with him who had been among the most clamorous in favor of the high standard of Montgomery farms. At this time the hills beyond the village of Montgomery were but slightly cleared up and badly cultivated, and a large district of the town for several miles in an unenviable agricultural condition. On leaving Goshen, Mr. Blake, without disclosing his object, saw proper to leave the ordinary good highway leading homeward, and conveyed his unsuspecting guest through and over the district of town above referred to. Before they arrived at the end of their ride the supervisor candidly remarked that he did not before believe there was so much rough and worthless land in the town, and that he was now satisfied Montgomery was rated full high at the value proposed by Mr. Blake. Under this valuation the town remained a number of years, no one attempting to change it, under the belief it was reasonably high.

In addition to the offices named, we further state that he was several times returned a member to serve in the Assembly of the State, for many years a judge of the Common Pleas of the county, and justice of the peace.

Mr. Blake married Elsie, daughter of William Eager, of Neelytown. He died January, 1826, in his sixty-fourth year.

Among the noted characters of early times was Christian Coon. He was a soldier, tinker, and trumpeter. He had been in the war, and could produce the loudest blasts from his wonderful brazen horn. He is said to have been one of the Hessian troops hired by England and sent out here to fight her battles. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Trenton, Dec. 26, 1776, where many of his fellows shared the same fate, and subsequently entered the American service, and remained in the army until the war ended. In some engagement he received a sabre-cut on the arm, for which he drew a pension during life, without which he could not have supported himself.

At one time there was an association of young men, some residing in Crawford and others in Shawangunk, Ulster Co., who had banded themselves together to commit all kinds of devilry. The longer the association continued their operations the bolder and more pestilent they became, till finally they did deeds worthy of indictment and prison.

Among other subjects for fun and devilry, two members of the club selected Coon; in which, however, as things turned out, they waked up the wrong customer. It roused the dormant energies and lion courage of the old soldier, which had slumbered within him for a quarter of a century, and he seized his musket, captured his assailants, and at the point of the bayonet drove them like craven dogs before him on the public highway for several miles till he came to the first justice, to whom he delivered them up. The officer received them, penned up like so many cattle in the corner of a horse-shed. This heroic act of trumpeter Coon, while it gained him much credit and applause, derided and deeply mortified the prisoners, and fairly turned the tables of fun and trick upon themselves. The cream of the joke was the musket was not loaded, nor had it been in twenty years. The young men were asked why they did not run off and escape. They answered, "We did not know what the old devil would do."

Another prominent citizen was Arthur Parks, who died Aug. 11, 1806, in the seventieth year of his age. He was a member of the Provincial Congress, a member of the convention that formed the State constitution, and during eleven years he represented the middle district in the Senate.

Among the old Revolutionary soldiers may be mentioned Teunis Van Arsdell. This gentleman lived near the Goodwill church, and was at Fort Montgomery when taken in 1777. The English entered the fort after dark, and all the American troops escaped that could find egress from the place. As they entered the fort they continued the slaughter by bayoneting our troops. At the time when Van Arsdell attempted to escape the entrance was pretty well blocked up; but in a few minutes, as an English soldier held a militiaman bayoneted against the wall, he let himself down, and slyly passed through between the legs of the British soldier and escaped. He then took off his clothes and tied them with the gun upon his back, swam the river, and afterwards returned home in safety.

A sad incident of the war period was the death of Col. Francis Barber:

"Fishkill, February 7, 1783.—It is with pain and regret that we mention the death of Lieut.-Col. Barber, who was unfortunately killed at camp on the 11th of January. The circumstances which led to the unhappy catastrophe, we are told, are as follows: Two soldiers were cutting down a tree; at the instant he came riding by it was falling, which he did not observe till they desired him to take care; but the surprise was so sudden and embarrassed his ideas so much that he reined his horse to the unfortunate spot where the tree fell, which tore his body in a shocking manner, and put an immediate period to his existence."

In Barber's "Historical Collections" this is told under the head of Dutchess County, as if it happened there, whereas it took place in New Windsor, in Orange, while the camp was there. He was led into the error by finding it in a paper of that county. Col. Francis Barber was one of the most elegant young men that wore the Continental uniform, and the son of old Patrick Barber, of Neelytown. The whole county, from far and near, attended his funeral, especially from the towns of New Windsor and Montgomery, and deeply lamented the death of their friend and neighbor, as well as of the gallant soldier. His remains were interred in Goodwill Cemetery, and their resting-place marked by a substantial monument.

We add the following notice of the Eager family: William Eager, the progenitor of the family, came from Monaghan, Ireland, about the year 1728; went into Westchester County, where he stayed thirteen years, and then removed to Neelytown. At this day very little is known of him. He married Elsa McGrada in Ireland, and had two children before emigration, and one (William) born on the passage. The McGrada family were originally Scotch, but had lived perhaps one hundred years in Ireland. He lived and died on the farm where his son William and grandson, Thomas Eager, lived and died. His children were Mary, who married William Monell; Thomas, who married Martha McNeal; William, who married Miriam Butler and Ann Bull; Elizabeth, who married James McMunn; Ann, who married John Davis; Jane, who married John Harlow.

William Eager (the second), son of the first settler of that name, was thirteen years old when the family came to Neelytown. He went to school but one quarter. He married, quite early in life, Miriam Butler, by whom he had one child, and both died early. Afterwards he married Ann, the daughter of William and Sarah Bull, of Hamptonburgh, then in the town of Goshen. Nine children were the fruits of this marriage, all of whom grew up and were married except Anthony, who died young. The descendants of the first settler are now very numerous and widely dispersed. William married Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel Watkins, Esq., of Wallkill; Thomas married Margaret, daughter of John Blake, Esq., of Neelytown; Sarah married Capt. James McBride, of Neelytown; Elsie married John Blake, Esq., of Neelytown; Mary married Charles Bodine, of Montgomery; Esther married Samuel Dunning, of Wallkill; Elinor married Mr. Philip Mowbray, of Wallkill; Ann married Elijah McMunn, of Montgomery; Anthony died young.

Alexander Kidd settled probably about 1736, on land adjoining that of Archibald Hunter on the north. His wife was Jane Calderwood. His children were Robert, Alexander, James, Mrs. Samuel Crawford, and Mrs. Alexander Wilson.

Patrick Barber settled in Montgomery about 1764, three miles south of Goodwill church. His children were Margaret (Mrs. John Davison), Francis, John, William, and Joseph. Three others died in childhood,—Archable, Jane, Samuel.

Matthew Rhea (the younger) was born Aug. 6, 1719. His wife was Catharine Hunter. His children were Mrs. John Barber, Frances, Stephen, James, Matthew, John, Martha, Robert, William, and David.

David Jagger was an early settler, date not ascertained. His children were John, Stephen, David, Mary.

Abraham Dickerson settled here just before the Revolution. His wife was Annie Mould. His children were Mrs. Jacob Alsdorf, Mrs. Jacob Millspaugh, Mrs. Wm. Soper, and Adam Dickerson.

Nathaniel Hill was an early settler of Crawford, near the Dwaars Kill. He had three sons—James, William, and Peter—and six daughters,—Mary, Catharine, Martha, Margaret, Susanna, and Eleanor.

The entire population is very accurately shown about the time of the war of 1812–16 by the following catalogue of road districts, with the names comprised in each:

The other districts are given in the chapter upon the town of Crawford. As the town was not divided until some years later, we have been obliged to separate the districts according to the opinion of old citizens to whom they have been submitted. It may be found that some of the districts are joint, considered with reference to the present town line.

Of the early physicians some notes appear in the story of early settlement, and other names are in the chapter upon the medical profession of the county.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR CADWALLADER COLDEN.

Under the head of early settlement some notice of this distinguished man should be given, though the more important points in his career are already sketched in the General History.

He settled at the place named Coldenham, which still bears this honorable designation. In the most exciting times that preceded the Revolution, the known honesty of the Lieutenant-Governor as a man and his integrity of character as a public officer saved him from all personal violence, though his property in New York City was sacrificed at the hands of a mob.

The buildings erected by the Coldens may be summarily stated as follows: the old stone academy house; the Coldenham stone house on the turnpike; the long, low house east of the stone house at the foot of the hill; the house known as the Thomas Colden mansion north of the turnpike; the two dwellings east of the last one named, owned in later years by David Colden; and the dwelling on the hill south of the turnpike, occupied in later years by Mr. John Scott. The homestead was subsequently deeded by Governor Colden to his son, Cadwallader, Jr. Both are noticed elsewhere in this work. (See History of New Windsor; also General History—Physicians.)

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

This town was organized under the name of Hanover Precinct in the year 1772. Its territory, including Crawford, was set off from the old precinct of Wallkill. The records of Wallkill from 1743 to 1767 had been already lost, or were left at Montgomery, and subsequently disappeared.

Mr. Eager, writing in 1846, quotes as the first town-meeting the records of 1768. But these were the records of Wallkill, and should have remained in the office of that town. The book was, however, destroyed by fire some years ago. We cannot obtain the first meeting of Montgomery, but, what is exceedingly rare, we give (as Mr. Eager did) a meeting five years earlier than the first. Some of the names mentioned therein belonged to the present territory of Montgomery, including that of Crawford, and we therefore catch at least a faint glimpse of that far-off period, one hundred and thirteen years ago.

The loss of valuable records is occurring every year, and few are aware, until called upon to notice the fact, what important historical materials are lying in the town clerks' offices of the State of New York exposed to the accidents of fire. Stowed away in old chests or dry-goods boxes, without order or system, often purposely destroyed to get them out of the way, the materials that would have shown the name and very nearly the location of every citizen have been yearly diminishing.

Early assessment-rolls and early road-lists, exceedingly valuable, are in many cases absolutely unattainable. Towns can be found in this State where a committee has been appointed to officially burn these supposed useless papers, forgetting that the older these papers are the more valuable they become for historical purposes. Great care is now given in this State to county records, but town records are in a fearful condition of danger, and wasting steadily away. On the town record there was this entry:

"HANOVER, April 7, 1772.

"At a town meeting of the inhabitants of Hanover Precinct, held at the house of Stephen Crist, the act for dividing the Wallkill Precinct into two precincts was publicly read, and the inhabitants proceeded to elect their several officers agreeably to said act."

As stated above, from 1767 to 1772 the record contains the history of the town of Wallkill, together with a part of the present town of Hamptonburgh, as far east as where Samuel Watkins and James Faulkener lived, and of the west portion of New Windsor as far east as where Stephen King lived.

The name of Hanover Precinct continued till 1782, when it was changed to "Montgomery Precinct." This name continued till 1789, when it was changed to the "Town of Montgomery," by which it continues to be called. The name was in honor of Gen. Montgomery, who was killed in the assault on Quebec in 1775.

V.—VILLAGES.

MONTGOMERY VILLAGE

is situated on the Wallkill, in the southern part of the town. It was settled at an early date. As already shown, Henry Crist, Stevanus Crist, and Matthias Millsbaugh had settled upon the west side of the Wallkill. Johannes Mingus had built a grist-mill. James Ward afterwards bought this property, and also 200 acres on which this village now stands. His mill was on the site owned in later years by the Messrs. Luquer. The bank there was high and steep, and the mill being at the water's edge was difficult of approach. The grain-bags were either thrown down from the bank and up from the mill-door or let down and up by a rude swing or tackle. Mr. Ward, to enable settlers on the other side to come to his mill, built a rude bridge over this stream, and this was the first bridge in all this vicinity. The place became known as Ward's Bridge, and under that name the first post-office was established.

The village stands mainly on the Archibald Kennedy Patent, in which James Clinton and William Cross obtained an interest, and on which they laid out, in the language of a deed before us, "a small town called Montgomery town." The village took the name of Montgomery from this plat, although the name of the town was in honor of Gen. Montgomery. Other early settlers of this village were John McFaight, David Crist, John McKinstry, Matthew Hunter, Samuel Smith, Arthur Parks, and Oolis Shulp. Parks & McGarrow constituted a mercantile firm, and kept store on the corner where subsequently old Mr. Smedes lived, and in later years the Messrs. Luquer. James Ward, the early settler, lived in a log cabin near the end of the bridge, on the site of the residence in more modern times of Abraham Colwell. Samuel Smith's house was on the lot occupied in later years by Abner Bookstaver. Arthur Park's residence was where John L'Hommedieu afterwards lived. Oolis Shulp lived in the hollow on the turnpike east of Mr. Parks. He had first located at the Harrison settlement, mentioned elsewhere, but soon removed to this village. He was the father of Hans Shulp, a well-known Revolutionary soldier, who lived to a great age in this town.

The village was incorporated by a special act passed Feb. 17, 1810. The first meeting was held March 6, 1810. The trustees chosen were Hugh Lindsey, Benjamin Sears, Reuben Neely, John Misser, Thomas McNear; the assessors were James Smith, Charles Parks, Francis Boyd; the treasurer, William H. Wesser; Daniel McNear, collector; Joseph Conklin, Joseph Nicholson, Walter Mead, fire-wardens. The following is a list of the village officers from 1810 to 1880:

The first village tax raised was $60, soon after the incorporation. It was voted to have a market-house 20 by 12, and March 11, 1812, it was voted to raise $100 for that purpose. April 20, 1814, $200 were appropriated to purchase a fire-engine. Oct. 24, 1816, a committee reported that there were eleven ladders on hand. March 20, 1821, four firemen were appointed,—Ebenezer Clark, James Newton, Henry Conger, John C. Millsbaugh. At that time an engine-house is mentioned.

The amount of the tax for this current year (1880) is $849.82 regular appropriations, and $375 for fire purposes. The village has one fire-engine company, known as Walkkill, No. 2, of which the foreman is James Eagan, and the assistant foreman James Hanlon. There are about 40 members. There is also a hose company, of which William Titus is foreman, and Ferris Hulse assistant. It has about 14 members.

The village has several hotels, a number of stores apparently doing a good business, the mill enterprises mentioned elsewhere, schools, churches, and many pleasant private residences. If it has been somewhat overshadowed in late years by its younger sister on the north with its stronger manufactories, it is nevertheless one of the old historic villages of the county, and sustains well its former standing. The principal business places as shown in the advertising columns of the enterprising village paper, published by Lester Winfield, are the following:

George Peck, lamps, chandeliers, French china, plated ware, etc.; W. H. Senior & Co., dry-goods, ready-made clothing; John A. Powell, manufacturer of organs; A. B. Leggett, physician and surgeon; F. Bodine, attorney and counselor; J. N. Bothie, running a market express to Newburgh; Charles Sears, "champion meat dealer;" John J. Sears, undertaking and cabinet making; C. F. Luquer, watch-maker, jeweler, and dealer in gold and silver-plated ware; T. H. Ward, merchant tailor; Stratton & Titus, grist-mill and saw-mill; William S. Hanlon, harness-shop and horse goods generally; F. Kimbark, fashionable tailor; Samuel Giles, blacksmith-shop; Vanderoof & Son, coal and lumber; Mrs. M. B. Tuttle, millinery; Harrison Smith, painter; F. Kimbark, barber; Jacob Tears, toys and holiday goods; J. C. Mould, groceries and provisions.

The present postmaster is George Eager, who has held the office from 1861 to 1881. Before him was Francis E. Caldwell for about eight years. C. S. Coleman held the office during the Taylor-Fillmore administration, 1849 to 1853. From 1840 to 1848, James W. Sears was the incumbent of the office. John P. Sears had preceded him for many years, probably nearly from 1800. (See General History, "Trade and Commerce.") is the most thriving and important village in town. It is situated on the Walkkill, at the High Falls, and was known for many years by that name. Settlements began at Walden many years before the Revolution. James Kidd is said to have built a grist-mill at the very foot of the falls, on the east side, the date of which is uncertain. In 1768 it appears from certain town records to have been owned by or in the possession of Johannes Decker. In 1789 it was owned by Cadwallader Colden, Jr., son of Maj. Cadwallader Colden, and grandson of the Lieutenant-Governor. This property was afterwards occupied for a cotton-factory. Stephen Gilbert erected another mill, not far from the same time, lower down. This was probably on the site of the grist-mill recently burned.

Other early settlers on the site of Walden or in its immediate vicinity were Francy Cane, Hugh Milligan, Jacob Bodine and his sons, Charles and Lewis, Jonathan Low, Peter Bodine, Conrad Moore, William Bodine, Robert Kidd, Thomas Clineman, and William Erwin.

The place is named in honor of Jacob T. Walden, who formerly resided there and was the president of a company which purchased the water-power and a large tract of land which had previously been owned by William Erwin, and earlier still by Mr. Gatehouse. His energy and untiring perseverance did much to build up the place, introduce manufactures, and establish its prosperity on an enduring basis.

The principal manufacturing establishments are given under the head of "Industrial Enterprises."

The village has had a rapid modern growth. All of the brick houses—and there are now a large number—have been built within about twelve years. There are many handsome villa residences on some of the beautiful heights on both sides of the Walkkill River. The latter is spanned by two handsome iron bridges. The village was incorporated by a special act passed April 9, 1855. The first village meeting under the act was called by George W. Millspaugh, justice of the peace, and was held April 14, 1855, at the house of Jacob D. Millspaugh. The officers chosen at that time were the following: Augustus F. Scofield, Marcus C. Hill, Milton Millspaugh, Giles Andrews, Levi L. Gowdy, trustees; Seth M. Capron, John G. Woolsey, George M. Embler, assessors; Nicholas T. Clearwater, treasurer; Mordecai Homan, collector; John S. Gray, James Holbrow, John B. Tears, fire-wardens.

At the first meeting of the board of trustees, April 20th, Augustus F. Scofield was chosen president, and George W. Millspaugh clerk. A. F. Scofield and M. R. Hill were appointed a committee to draft by-laws. Regular meetings of the board were voted to be held on the first Tuesday of each month. May 11, 1855, a full set of by-laws was passed, and the organization of the village government was duly completed.

The principal officers from 1855 to 1880 have been:

	President.	Clerk.	Treasurer.
1855.	Augustus F. Scofield.	Geo. W. Millspaugh.	Nich. T. Clearwater.
1856.	"	Henry Gowdy.	"

Police justices were first chosen under the amended act of 1839, and have been as follows:

1869, A. H. Saxe; 1871, A. H. Saxe; 1872, N. K. Wade; 1873, C. D. Wooley; 1874-76, J. C. Holbrow; 1877-78, A. S. Tears; 1879-80, J. L. Hart.

The list of officers for current year (1880-81) is as follows: John C. Scofield, N. J. Fowler, J. W. Wilkinson, George Bingley, M. Littell, trustees; J. R. McCullough, clerk; J. L. Hart, police justice; J. Best, C. Birch, O. Moffatt, assessors; Andrew Bradley, collector; G. W. Stoddard, treasurer; S. Bardsley, T. B. Jordan, W. S. Parks, inspectors of election; M. Littell, street commissioner; Daniel Torbush, police constable and pound-keeper.

Before the incorporation of the village a fire company had been in existence under an organization known as "Walden Fire Incorporation." The books, papers, and property were transferred to the village trustees, and the latter voted a tax of $250 to pay up the debts of the existing Fire Department and $40 for ladders and carts. Money was subsequently raised for the purchase of an engine-house for the company.

Under date of March 4, 1865, the following officers of the fire company were reported: Chief Engineer, Daniel Torbush; Assistant Engineer, W. H. Tears; Foreman, Jacob Bradwell; Assistant Foreman, M. B. Tears; Secretary, Theron L. Millspaugh; Treasurer, Harvey Trickett.

At present (December, 1880) there is one fire company existing, known as "Enterprise, No. 1," in charge of a steam fire-engine, the best made. The company is uniformed, all their apparatus is in excellent order, and they are ready for efficient action either at parades or actual service at fires.

The Fire Department is organized as follows: Granville Crist, chief engineer; John R. Hayes, first assistant engineer; James L. Crawford, second assistant engineer. Company officers: J. R. McCullough, foreman; Caleb Birch, first assistant foreman; John Luckley, second assistant foreman; George H. Roat, secretary; P. Van Buren, treasurer. In charge of the engine: John W. Weller, first engineer; Charles Smalls, second engineer; Joseph Oldham, third engineer; William Hatch, fireman; Thomas Storms, assistant fireman; John H. Vandemack, steward; John W. Weller, chairman.

For a time the village was lighted by gas, but the enterprise was not pecuniarily successful, and the company was disbanded.

The Taylor & Bateman coal and lumber yard is conveniently situated near the railroad. They are also proprietors of the Walden Steam-Mill, and dealers in flour, feed, grain, grass-seed, lime, cement, and building supplies generally.

The post-office was established many years ago. Mr. E. W. Knapp is the present postmaster, and has held the office nearly twenty years. He was preceded by Marcus K. Hill. Earlier still was James Kidd.

Embler's grist-mill was burned a few years ago, and has not been rebuilt. He has a saw-mill, which was not destroyed and is still running.

The Eagle Hotel, C. Johnson, proprietor, was built in 1823 by Jesse Scofield. It is a well-known house, and a favorite stopping-place for travelers. The St. Nicholas is a later-built house, and is a large and commodious hotel.

The principal stores and other business places of Walden, as shown by the advertising columns of the village paper, are T. E. Newkirk, drugs, medicines, toilet articles, lamps, cigars, etc.; H. B. Wooster, grocery-store; Caleb Birch, boots, shoes, hats, and caps; W. H. Wood, general furnishing undertaker; Sears Brothers, dry-goods, provisions, groceries, crockery, and glassware; Walker & Eaton (West Walden), dry-goods, groceries, grass-seed, woodenware, etc.; T. Cockroft, confectionery, domestic nuts, cigars, toys, etc.; the palace photographic car; John R. Hays, hats, caps, gents' furnishing goods, and ready-made clothing; E. W. Knapp, postmaster, stationery, school-books, newspapers, and periodicals; T. D. Barker, harness, blankets, and robes; McCullough & Tate, groceries and provisions; G. V. Tears, boots and shoes; Stoddard & Rutherford, general insurance agents; H. E. Stoutenburgh, watchmaker and jeweler; William Alcock, watches and jewelry; Frank Pultz, stationery, sheet music; Irving H. Loughran, attorney and counselor-at-law; Dawson & Rowland, millinery and fancy goods; T. L. Mills-paugh, carpets, oil-cloths, furniture; Fowler's hardware-store and agricultural implements.

The Walden Herald is a neat village paper, and is now in its eleventh volume, Mr. Chauncey A. Reed editor and proprietor. It is conducted with vigor, and has evidently come to stay.

is a hamlet situated in the northeast part of the town, not far from the line of New Windsor. It derives its name and most of its historical importance from the fact that it was the seat of an early Episcopal church known as St. Andrew's, which is now located at Walden. The early development of the water-power led to the growth of a large village at Walden, and changed the current of trade and other business from St. Andrew's. A post-office is still maintained there, and James A. Coe is postmaster. There is also a hotel there, kept by John McKinney.

COLDENHAM

is in the southeast part of the town, near the New Windsor line. Its name is derived from the Colden family, among whom there were several members of much prominence, of whom a full account has already been given. This little hamlet in late years has of course had nothing of the importance of former times, when it was the home of the Lieutenant-Governor and acting chief magistrate of the colony of New York. A hotel, a small number of shops, stores, and private dwellings constitute the village of to-day.

ALLARD'S CORNERS

is a hamlet in the northwest part of the town, where a post-office was established some years ago for the convenience of quite a section in this town and in Ulster County.

SCOTT TOWN

was recognized in former years as a neighborhood with a special name, though scarcely so at the present time. It was described as situated "on the Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike, four miles east of the village of Montgomery, where there used to be a turnpike-gate." Samuel Monell was gate-keeper, and Mr. John Scott resided there, kept a store, and from him the name is derived.

SCOTT'S CORNERS

must not be mistaken for the above. The Corners are about one and a half miles east of Montgomery village. It was named from John F. Scott, who kept store at this place, as his father, John Scott, did at the other mentioned above.

was the name formerly attached to a settlement, and at the present time to a school district, in the southwest part of this town, on the Wallkill, three miles from Montgomery. It was a Dutch settlement. To this simple rural hamlet Mr. Eager, in his history of this county, devotes the following amusing paragraph:

"Though on the banks of the Wallkill, in this republican county, we find ourselves unexpectedly in royal company, in the very presence of the Casars. The name of Keiser is of blood royal descent, direct from Cesar. An example: Keiserluter, in the Lower Palatinate, is Casariopolis in Latin.

"The Grand Emperor of Russia is a Keiser, and claims it by calling himself the Czar of all the Russias, which is nothing less than calling himself Casar, King, Keiser in his own native Russ, the language of his country. The name, therefore, is good Dutch, and the emigrants imported it when they came. Keisertown consequently is an Imperial City, the town of a King, the city of Cesar."

VI.—SCHOOLS.

The modern system of public schools having been inaugurated in the State by the law of 1812, this town, at the annual meeting of 1813, complied with the conditions of the statute and elected as school commissioners Wm. Crist, Joseph I. Houston, and Abraham A. Thompson. Others who served one or more years each during the period from 1812 to 1844 were the following: Frederick Millspaugh, Nathaniel P. Hill, Wm. W. Crawford, Jonathan Mould, Alexander Thompson, Jr., Adam Dickerson, George Eager, William Jackson, Henry Dubois, Daniel Lawson, Henry Dubois, David Lawrence, Charles Borland, Jr., Abraham Crist, Isaac Jennings, William Graham, James Jessup, George Welles, John J. Scott, Thomas Cline-man, Robert Mead, Cornelius Neafie, Moses Smith, Joseph V. Whalen, John Kelly, Gideon Pelton. During the same period the following persons served one or more years each as inspectors of schools: Andrew King, Moses Froeligh, William Powell, Isaac Van Doren, Arthur I. Stansbury, David Mason, Charles Borland, Jr., Samuel W. Eager, Henry I. Hardenbrook, Wm. H. Weller, Charles Winfield, Daniel W. Frye, Absalom Bull, James C. Cook, Isaac Jennings, John L. Lyon, David Ruggles, Joseph V. Whalen, Fred. J. Betts, George Eager, Archibald Smith, John Sears, Philip Millspaugh, Martin Lewis, Hiram E. Conger, Jacob C. Tooker.

Under the system of supervision by town superintendents, from 1844 to 1856 the following were the incumbents of the office in Montgomery:

1844-46, Peter T. Clearwater; 1847-48, George W. Millspaugh; 1849, Peter T. Clearwater; 1851, James T. Kane; 1853-55, Alexander Beattie.

In 1856 all control of the schools by town authority ceased, supervision being transferred to the Assembly District Commissioners.

The report for the year ending June 15, 1816, showed 996 children between the ages of five and fifteen.

MONTGOMERY ACADEMY.

The subscription to found this academy is dated in 1787, and contains 277 names, subscribing from 4s. to £6, and covered a population of fifteen miles square. The sum subscribed amounted to £319, and the subscribers appointed the following persons trustees: Arthur Parks, Benjamin Sears, Adam Crans, Jacob Newkirk, Henrick Smith, Johannes Miller, Hendrick Van Keuren, William Jackson, James Jackson, Philip Millspaugh, Martinas Crist, Matthew Hunter, and Gideon Pelton.

The trustees purchased a frame already put up several miles distant, as they could get it for some small sum, made a frolic, and carted it down to the village. This was but the work of a day in those patriotic and free-will times. The building was entirely put up and finished. The teacher they wished to employ (the Rev. Alexander Miller, of New Jersey) was married, had a family and horse, and could not come unless they could be accommodated as well as himself. The trustees doubled their exertions, built a kitchen adjoining the academy, put up a stable, and permitted Mr. Miller to live in the ground-floor, tendered him £80 for the first year, and after that all he could make, which was accepted. The school opened with fair prospects, and has been in as flourishing condition ever since as any country academy in the State. Among its early teachers we name Nathaniel Howell, Nathan H. White, Reuben Neely, and William H. Weller. Tuition was from £5 to £2 per year, according to what the pupil studied.

This building, never very substantial, was removed in 1818, and the present brick edifice put up in its place at an expense of over $5000. The institution had some funds on hand, a rare fact at this day, which, with $1500 raised by subscription and $2000 of quit-rents on three patents in this county then uncanceled, enabled the trustees to complete this noble educational structure. The building is 60 by 40 feet, two stories high, with a small cellar for coal and wood. Each story is divided into two rooms, a large and small one. The institution was incorporated April 13, 1792. There are but three academies in the State older than this.

This academy is still an important institution of the town, as it was in earlier years.

Like all similar institutions, there have been times when it was not as prosperous as at others, but a school of excellent character has been maintained. The large and convenient building erected so many years ago has been kept in good repair. It was thoroughly refitted a few years since at an expense of about $600. Its academic character is maintained. It has never yielded to the modern custom of confiscating academies for the benefit of a school district. The present board of trustees consists of Dr. L. M.

Crawford, president; J. M. Wilkin, secretary; T. L. Jackson, treasurer; Rev. F. S. Schenck, J. O. Miller, C. J. Mould, Rev. H. C. Earl, Henry Bergen, W. H. Senior, Rev. J. M. Dickson, Rev. J. C. Forsythe, D. M. Wade, F. Bodine, Rev. P. H. Milliken. The present principal is Prof. David L. Rouse.

MONTGOMERY PUBLIC SCHOOL.

This is under the charge of three trustees. A convenient building was erected a few years since, with rooms for three teachers. The teachers now employed, winter term of 1880-81, are Daniel C. Carvey, principal; Miss Adelia Sears, Miss Josephine Haviland, assistants.

THE WALDEN UNION FREE SCHOOL has a good building, erected in 1859, adapted to three departments. The present teachers are William Abell, principal; Miss Emily W. Kidd, Miss Fanny Stewart, and Miss Mary A. Hart, assistant teachers.

The present Board of Education are Dr. T. Millspaugh, president; Dr. William A. Loughran, C. D. Wooley, James S. Eaton, T. W. Bradley, George T. Wooster; A. S. Tears, clerk.

Among those active in effecting the free-school organization and members of the first board were J. B. Tears, Ebenezer Knapp, Dr. Thomas Millspaugh, and others. J. B. Tears has been president of the board most of the time since the organization.

VII.—CHURCHES.

This town is the seat of several churches of ancient date. Their records combined show how strong were the Christian elements which entered into the character of the early settlers. To found a church was the next thing after building the rude pioneer houses for their families.

In the general chapter on churches some of the earlier religious organizations have been referred to at some length, and we shall therefore be pardoned if we indulge in some repetitions.

THE GOODWILL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

This church, an elaborate and valuable history of which has lately been given to the public by the present pastor, the Rev. J. M. Dickson, is the oldest in the town. It was planted by the Scotch-Irish settlers, who for years made their influence so widely felt, not merely in their own and neighboring communities, but also in the affairs of the nation. Their incoming dates from about 1724-25, though some of the pioneers of the colony purchased land here as early as 1721. Their early history is to a great extent involved in obscurity, their influence rather than their records having been handed down to posterity. The early records of the church are all lost. From the records of the Synod of Philadelphia, however, it appears that in September, 1729, they had a commissioner, in the person of John McNeal, in said Synod in Philadelphia to secure supplies of preaching among them, and that they were referred by the Synod to the Presbytery of Philadelphia. Whether they had at this time any formal organization as a church cannot be ascertained, as the early records of the Presbytery of Philadelphia are also lost.

1729 has therefore been taken as the year from which to reckon the age of the church, and in September, 1879, its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary was celebrated by the Presbytery of Hudson, the ultimate successor in this field of the Presbytery which took it under its care a century and a half before. The one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the settlement, from which, considering the religious character and habits of the people, some would date the commencement of the church, might have been celebrated some four or five years sooner.

This community early took to itself the name "The People of Wallkill," or "Wallakill," as the name appears in some of the older documents, no doubt from their contiguity to the Wallkill River, and the name afterwards extended to their precinct, and is still preserved as a territorial designation in the town of Wallkill. The church very naturally went for long years by the name of the Wallkill Church, though Goodwill is the name incorporated in the deed of the ground on which the church stands, dated Nov. 9, 1741, and was probably its corporate name from the first. The territory which contributed to its membership came to be very extensive as the settlement enlarged, and hence it is not strange to find this a mother of churches, as many as seven or eight having more or less directly sprung from it, some through bitter controversy and some in the natural order of growth.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP.—In the deed of a highway from the town of Shawangunk to the Goshen line occurs the following in describing the route, "by or neare the Meeting House now erecting neare the settlement of Adam Graham." The date of this is Sept. 1, 1735. This is the first church building of which there is any record, and the above is the only mention of it that has been preserved. Mr. Dickson, the historian of the church, reasons, from "the character of the people and the customs of the early settlers," that there must have been some rude structure in use previous to this, which the congregation had already outgrown.

The next building was erected in 1765, which Mr. Dickson claims is still standing and constitutes the main frame-work of the present structure. To this there was an addition made some years later, with an elevated steeple, in connection with the building of which there was probably a general remodeling of the house, the date of which is not known. In 1830 this building was again remodeled, the aforementioned addition, with its steeple, taken away, with the galleries that had extended around three sides of the audience-room, and the pulpit taken down from its exalted position on one side and placed at the end of the room opposite the entrance, which from this time was only from the south. The cost of these repairs is recorded as "$1230.99."

In 1871 this structure was again remodeled, and this time enlarged by an addition in front which constitutes a commodious vestibule and choir gallery, and from which rises, as in olden times, a spire. The main building was also made entirely new internally, stained-glass windows put in, and a heater placed in a basement. The cost of this work was not far from $8000. It is now one of the neatest structures to be found anywhere in the county.

PASTORS.—This church has had eight installed pastors. The first was the Rev. Joseph Houston. He was a native of Ireland, and was educated in Scotland. He served the Elk River Church in Maryland as pastor from 1724 till 1739. He was installed pastor of this church in 1740, probably in January, and was removed by death October 29th of the same year. Very little is known of the parties who occasionally ministered here previous to this time. History connects the name of the Rev. Samuel Gelston with this church, but with a good deal of indefiniteness. "His labors here," says Mr. Dickson, "whatever their extent, could not have been earlier than 1732 or '33, and not later than 1734." According to the records of the Synod of Philadelphia, of Sept. 23, 1735, this church, in connection with the church at Bethlehem, had called the Rev. Isaac Chalker, but this church had afterwards refused to receive him, and the case had come up from the Presbytery to the Synod for final adjustment.

The second pastor was the Rev. John Moffatt, a native of Ireland, and a graduate of Nassau Hall in 1749, who was here ordained and installed in 1751. Previous to this, or May 26, 1743, the church had called the Rev. Samuel Cavin, but for some reason he was not installed. Mr. Moffatt's ministry ended somewhere between 1765 and 1769. During its continuance a parsonage was built (in 1756), and in 1765 a meeting-house was erected. The year following (1766) the trustees purchased a farm of one hundred acres, which is still owned by the congregation. During his ministry the missionaries of the Reformed Presbytery and the Associate Presbyterian Church were active in the colonies. The former organized one of their "praying societies" out of this church about 1753, and, in connection with the labors of the latter, the church divided in calling a successor to Mr. Moffatt, and the Associate Church of Neelytown was the result. A secession from this church about the same time or a little before seems to have entered into the organization of the Little Britain Associate Church.

The Rev. John Blair was the third pastor. He was installed May 19, 1769, and was removed by death Dec. 8, 1771. He was a man of great ability. His early ministry had been spent in Pennsylvania. He had also served as Professor of Theology in Nassau Hall, and as vice-president of the College of New Jersey.

The Rev. Andrew King was the fourth pastor. His labors here began in 1776, though he was not installed till June 11, 1777, and he remained in the pastorate of the church till his death, Nov. 16, 1815, a period of nearly forty years. During his ministry three churches were organized in the territory that contributed to the membership of this church, viz.: Hope-well, Scotchtown, and Graham's Church (Associate), lessening the field of his labors. During his ministry, too, the Orange County Bible Society was organized in this church, and he was chosen its first president.

The fifth pastor was the Rev. Robert W. Condit (afterwards D.D.). But after the death of Mr. King, previous to the calling of Mr. Condit, the church passed through a severe trial, a diversity of sentiment in reference to the fitness of a Rev. William Gray for the pastoral office being allowed to ripen into a division of the church. The division, however, did not actually occur till Mr. Condit was called, after which the disaffected portion withdrew and formed the Berea (Reformed) Church.

Mr. Condit was ordained and installed Dec. 13, 1820, and continued pastor till April 22, 1830, when he resigned to accept a call from the First Presbyterian Church of Oswego, which he served till his death, Feb. 13, 1871. He was a graduate of Princeton College and Theological Seminary.

The sixth pastor was the Rev. William Blain, who was installed July 27, 1830. He was a graduate of Union College, and of Princeton Theological Seminary, and had served in the ministry some fourteen years before commencing his labors here. Like his predecessor, he too found here an irreconcilable faction, which soon withdrew from the church, but on very different grounds. The time had come when the growing village of Montgomery needed a Presbyterian Church, and some of the most influential members of this church cherished the thought of removing the old church to the new site. In this they were simply outvoted and peace was restored, though, says the historian, "for a time this church severely felt this last exodus." Mr. Blain's pastorate ceased with his death, June 9, 1857, though for some little time he had been incapacitated, through bodily infirmity, for the performance of pastoral duties.

The seventh pastor was the Rev. David M. MacLise, D.D., a native of Ireland, educated at Belfast Royal College. He was installed as colleague of and successor to Mr. Blain; June 17, 1856. Previous to this he for some time served the church of Norwood and Hastings in Canada West. In the spring of 1869 he resigned this church to take charge of the Alexander Presbyterian Church, New York City. He is now pastor of the Calvin Presbyterian Church, St. John, N. B.

The eighth (the present) pastor is the Rev. James

Milligan Dickson. He is a native of Vermont, a graduate of Dartmouth College, and of the Union Theological Seminary, New York City. Previous to coming here he had acted as pastor for four and one-half years in the city of Brooklyn, and for seven years in Newark, N. J. He began his labors here on the first Sabbath in November, 1869, and was regularly installed on the 15th of the February following.

Under his pastorate the membership of the church has been greatly increased, and the church building enlarged and remodeled. He has also performed an invaluable service in searching out and putting in order the history of the church, in the form of "The Goodwill Memorial," to which we would refer any who may wish to trace further this interesting history.

Those in italics constitute the present Session of the church.

Treasurer and clerk of congregation, John H. Graham.

The printed history of the church shows that it has, in addition to the usual Sabbath services in the sanctuary, which are held morning and evening, and prayer-meetings during the week, an active Sabbath-school, a Temperance Union, a Woman's Aid Association, a Woman's Foreign and Home Missionary Association, and a Library Association.

* Not definitely known. All previous to 1770.

REFORMED CHURCH OF MONTGOMERY.

This was composed originally of German immigrants, and organized in 1732. From its organization till about 1772 it was served by supplies, who came two or three times during the year, preached, baptized, and administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

In 1772 the Rev. John Michael Kearn was settled, who remained till 1778, when he was obliged to resign his charge, on account of difficulties growing out of his political opinions.

From 1778 to 1784 the Rev. Rynier Van Nest, the minister of the Reformed Dutch Church of Shawangunk, officiated a part of the time in this church.

In 1788 the Rev. Moses Froeligh was settled over the Associate congregation of Shawangunk and Montgomery, in which he continued till 1811, when he resigned the charge of the former, but continued pastor of the latter till his death in 1817. In that year the Rev. Jesse Fonda was settled, and remained till his death in 1827.

In the year 1829 the Rev. Robert P. Lee, Jr., was settled.

The first edifice was a log church, and erected, probably, about the time the church was organized. It was situated just east of the present graveyard, and north of the turnpike. Our informant was told by Mr. Henry Crist, deceased, that the building was entered from the outside by a ladder.

The first baptisms were in 1734, and were as follows: Stephanus, son of Philippus Crist and Annayte Mengessin; Jacob, son of Phillipus Millspach and Maria Hemmer; Johannes, son of Christian Eboltz and Maria Elizabeth Crist; Annatje, daughter of Christoffel Maul and Anna Juliana Seving.

Some of the names found on the early records are Dekker, Terwiliger, Wilson, Velde, Robertson, Krantz, Haywood, Endro, Patterson, Weller, Windviel, Weber, Rockafellow, and Clearwater.

The records of the church were kept in Dutch till the time of Mr. Froeligh, after which but two or three entries are found of that kind.

The four acres occupied by the church and graveyard north of the turnpike were a gift from Mr. Beckford, the brother-in-law of Mary Ballard Beckford. She owned large tracts of land in this and the town of Crawford, and Beckford was her agent in New York to sell them. The congregation were to pay for the deed, and the subscription list for the purpose is on the record of the church, dated in 1759. There are fifty-eight names on it, each signing sixpence.

The church having been formed and kept up by the Germans and their descendants, the services were in that language probably for the first fifty years. Then they were half the time in German or Dutch, and the other half in English. From our best information, this continued till the time of Mr. Froeligh, when they were all performed in English. Perhaps he may have preached occasionally in German or Dutch. We have heard two sermons since that time in German in this church, when the whole countryside were present, down to the oldest man; some of whom might not have been out for years, but still retained a knowledge of the language.

We cannot forego the obligation to remark here, as connected with this ancient church and early settlement, that those who came from the hills and valleys of Germany with the Bible in their hands and erected this primitive and humble temple, have by their own descendants sent some of their own children back to the Old World to teach the word of life to heathen nations. In the year 1836, Rev. William Youngblood and Josephine Millspaugh, his wife, members of this church and natives of this town, one a descendant of Johannes Jong Bloet, the other the descendant of Matthias Millspach, two original settlers, left home and friends on a mission to foreign lands.

This account is so far compiled from previous works, but the present pastor adds the following excellent paper, giving the names of the founders, with other details of the early organization and the events of the last thirty-five years. The records of the church throw so much light upon the early history of the town that they are exceedingly valuable.

The Reformed Church of Montgomery was organized in 1732. The following were members at its organization: Michael Krans, Margriet Maul, Catharina Maul, Johannes Krans, Jacob Senseboch, Magdalena Senseboch, Benayna Newkerk, Aibje Menyes (wife of Stephanus Christ), Elizabeth Menyes (wife of Lawrence Christ), Gertrout Yongbloet, Frederick Weller, Anna Margretha Kochin, Maria Gertrout Steiner (wife of Philippus Melsboch), Maria Catharina Steiner, Elizabeth Steiner, Gertje Klooswater (wife of Johannes Newkerk).

The following were officers of the church during the first ten years of its existence. At the organization, in 1732, Johannes Yongbloet was ordained elder and Jacob Buchstaber, deacon:

1734.—Elder, Hieronymus Menyes; deacon, Johannes Newkerk.

1736.—Elder, Christoffel Maul; deacon, Stephanus Christ.

1739.—Elder, Matheis Melsboch; deacon, Lawrence Christ.

1741.—Elder, Jacob Buchstaber; deacon, Johannes Kraus.

The Rev. G. W. Mancius, pastor of the Reformed Church of Kingston, officiated at the organization of the church, and acted as stated supply of the pulpit until his death in 1762.

During the years 1753-54, Rev. Barent Vrooman, pastor of the Reformed Churches of New Paltz and Shawangunk, in Ulster County, was also pastor of this church. During the years 1751-68, Rev. John Moffatt, of Goodwill Presbyterian Church, preached and administered baptism frequently. In 1764, Rev.

Frederick Mutzelins supplied the pulpit. The following is the list of pastors from 1771: 1771-78, John Michael Kern; 1778-85, Ryneir Van Nest; 1788-1817, Moses Froeligh; 1817-27, Jesse Fonda; 1829-58, Robert P. Lee; 1859-72, A. B. Van Zandt, late Professor of Theology in the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church at New Brunswick, N. J.; 1873-76, Cornelius Brett; 1877, Ferdinand S. Schenck. The church is beautifully situated on the brow of a hill, across the Wallkill from the village of Montgomery. Four church edifices have occupied this site. The first was a log house, erected shortly after the organization of the church; the second was a frame building, erected about 1760; the third was of brick, built in 1803, and repaired and enlarged in 1834. The present is a stately building of brick, and surmounted by a lofty spire. It was erected in 1858, but the spire was not added until 1880. The audience-room is beautiful and large; it will comfortably seat between 700 and 800 people.

The following is the present organization: Pastor, Ferdinand S. Schenck; Elders, Lewis Crist, Jesse Fonda Mould, Ebenezer Van Alst, Robert Ashby; Deacons, John Bookstaver, John D. Mould, Abner Shafer, William Bookstaver.

The report presented by the church to the General Synod of 1880 gives the following items of interest:

Number of families.....	185
" communicants.....	413
" Sunday-school scholars.....	260
Amount contributed for benevolent purposes during the year.....	$1288.62
Amount contributed for congregational purposes during the year.....	2814.35

The church is generally known in the community as the Brick Church of Montgomery.

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH, WALDEN.

St. Andrew's was one of the churches of the parish of New Windsor and Newburgh. Its early history, as well as that of its associate organizations, will be found in Chapter X. of the General History, prior to 1775.

In 1775 its vestry consisted of Cadwallader Colden, Jr., and Andrew Graham, wardens; and Peter Bodine, J. J. Galatian, Ambrose Jones, Justus Banks, John Blake, and Edward Burne,—Justus Banks having been chosen in place of George Graham, deceased. In this year the Rev. Mr. Sayre, foreseeing the troubles that were about to ensue on the breaking out of the Revolutionary war, suddenly relinquished his charge and left the congregation in a very unsettled state. Up to this period the congregation of St. Andrew's had been eminently prosperous, and the church was filled to overflowing. But amidst the collision of parties, the prejudices excited against the church as being the offspring of the Church of England, and other causes unhappily existing, the congregation of St. Andrew's began from this time to decline.

On the departure of the Rev. Mr. Sayre, application was made from time to time to the rector of Trinity Church, New York, with a view to obtain another minister, but without success. The parish remained vacant until the year 1790, when the Rev. George H. Spierin was engaged for two years at a salary of £100 per annum. The vestry at this period consisted of Cadwallader Colden, Jr., and James G. Graham, wardens; and Justus Banks, Andrew Graham, Thomas Colden, Peter Galatian, Matthew DuBois, and Edward Burn, vestrymen. Mr. Spierin residing at Newburgh, an inconvenient distance from the church, an effort was now made to procure a parsonage for the accommodation of the minister. Accordingly, Cadwallader Colden, Jr., generously presented the congregation with an acre of ground adjoining the church lot, on which a handsome parsonage was soon built.

In 1793, Mr. Spierin received and accepted a call from the congregation of Poughkeepsie; whereupon application was again made to the clergy of New York to supply the vacancy. The Rev. Dr. Moore recommended Mr. Frederick Van Horne a candidate for the ministry, who accordingly received and accepted a call, and on the receipt of holy orders entered upon the duties of rector, December 10th.

Several attempts had been made to liquidate the church debt by the sale of pews and private subscriptions, but with very little success until the year 1796. During this year an investigation was made into the financial affairs of the church, when it was found that there remained due to Cadwallader Colden, Esq., a balance on the original debt, together with interest, more than £500. A considerable sum was also due to Andrew Graham, Esq., for moneys advanced in building the church. As this debt operated as a heavy load upon the church, which possessed no means of reimbursement, those gentlemen most generously relinquished their claims, and thus freed the church and congregation from all further embarrassment, for which they received the thanks of the vestry and congregation.

The vestry at this time consisted of Justus Banks and Michael Beliger, wardens; and Alexander Dorcas, James Kain, Peter Galatian, William Erwin, Francis Lyon, and Thomas Gee.

Mr. Van Horne continued rector of the parish until the year 1809, when he removed to Ballston, and in the following year the Rev. Mr. Mackin was called to the rectorship, the vestry being composed of Andrew Graham and Peter Galatian, wardens; and William Erwin, Alexander Colden, Benjamin Thorn, Nicholas Bogert, Jacob Smith, and John Galatian. Mr. Mackin continued rector for three years, and in 1810 was succeeded by the Rev. William Powell. Mr. Powell resigned his charge in the year 1818, and was succeeded by the Rev. Samuel Phinney. In 1821 the vestry, being unable to continue the salary of the rector at £400, reduced it to £300, in consequence of which Mr. Phinney resigned. He was succeeded by the Rev. James P. Cotter in 1822, but he soon after left the parish. In 1826 the Rev. Joshua L. Harrison was called, but resigned in the course of the same year on account of ill health. In this year it was determined to erect an Episcopal church in the village of Walden on a site given by Jesse Scofield, Esq., and a subscription was immediately opened for that purpose. The building was forthwith commenced, and finished in the course of the following year. Previous to its consecration, however, it was further determined to relinquish the old church of St. Andrew's as a place of public worship, and to give to the new church in Walden the name of St. Andrew's Church. This church was accordingly consecrated by Bishop Hobart, Sept. 3, 1827.

In April of this year the Rev. William H. Lewis accepted a call to the parish, but resigned his charge in November of the same year, and was immediately succeeded by the Rev. Albert Hoyt. The vestry at this time consisted of Nicholas J. Bogert and John Fell, wardens; and John Galatian, Jacob T. Walden, John J. Galatian, Dr. Geo. G. Graham, Dr. Peter P. Galatian, and Dr. Thomas Colden.

In 1829 the vestry erected a handsome parsonage on a lot of four acres purchased of Mr. Cyrus Lyon. The cost of the whole, amounting to $4000, was defrayed chiefly by the sale of all the church property at old St. Andrew's, with the exception of the burying-ground. On January 22d in this year the congregation was called to mourn the loss by death of its pastor, the Rev. Mr. Hoyt, who had become greatly endeared to the people during the short period of his ministrations. He was succeeded in March following by the Rev. Nathan Kingsberry, who held the rectorship for one year, and was succeeded in 1830 by the Rev. William H. Hart. Mr. Hart continued rector till the year 1836, when he removed to Richmond, Va., and was succeeded by the Rev. Robert Shaw. Mr. Shaw removed to Marlborough in 1838, and was succeeded by the Rev. Henry W. Swetzer. In 1842, Mr. Swetzer resigned, and was succeeded by the Rev. Horace Hills, Jr., who retained the rectorship but one year, and resigned his charge in November, 1843. The parish was then vacant until October, 1844, when the Rev. William H. Hart, then residing at Fishkill, Dutchess Co., was again called to the rectorship of this parish.

The members of the vestry at that time were George Weller and Dr. George G. Graham, wardens; and William Buchanan, James R. Cooper, James Bogert, David E. Bogert, William Ruggles, Samuel Wait, Jr., Joseph P. Cooke, and George W. Oakley, vestrymen; Peter Bogert, secretary.

In June, 1842, the Rev. Horace Hill was called as rector. At that time N. J. Bogert and George Weller were wardens, and John Galatian, Thomas Colden, George G. Graham, William Buchanan, E. P. Wheeler, and James R. Cooper constituted the vestry.

Nov. 27, 1843, Rev. H. Hill resigned as rector, and Oct. 25, 1844, the Rev. William H. Hart, a former rector, was called to the parish, with the following wardens: George Weller, George G. Graham; and vestrymen, William Buchanan, James R. Cooper, D. H. Ellis, James Bogert, William Ruggles, Samuel Wait, Jr.; John S. Grigg, collector; Peter Bogert, secretary and treasurer.

April 13, 1846, the following wardens and vestry were elected: Wardens, George Weller, George G. Graham; Vestry, Wm. Buchanan, James R. Cooper, James Bogert, David G. Bogert, William Ruggles, Samuel Wait, Jr., Joseph P. Cook, Geo. W. Oakley.

Easter Monday, 1854, the following wardens and vestry were elected: George Weller, George G. Graham, wardens; William Buchanan, James R. Cooper, L. L. Gowdy, John S. Gregg, David Stewart, James Bogert, James G. Graham, Peter W. Welling, vestrymen.

In the year 1851 the rector, W. H. Hart, died, and the Rev. James W. Stewart was called. He officiated as rector until Aug. 25, 1855, when his resignation was accepted. April 16, 1856, a call was extended to the Rev. Samuel C. Davis, which was accepted. About 1859 the Rev. I. G. Jaycox was called as assistant on account of the health of the rector. Aug. 17, 1859, the rector, Samuel C. Davis, tendered his resignation, to take effect Oct. 1, 1859, which was accepted. April 23, 1860, a call was extended to the Rev. I. G. Jaycox, which he accepted. He resigned Sept. 14, 1861.

October, 1861, a call was extended to the Rev. Jas. W. Stewart, which was accepted. He tendered his resignation Nov. 17, 1868, which was accepted.

The Rev. Wm. Walsh, by request of the vestry, officiated until a permanent pastor could be called.

Jan. 20, 1869, a call was extended to the Rev. Levi Johnston, which was accepted.

Nov. 30, 1870, the congregation resolved to build a new church for St. Andrew's. The following committee was appointed to raise funds: Mrs. L. L. Gowdy, Mrs. Hannah Hart, Jas. Gowdy, Wm. C. Weller, John C. Holborn, and Jas. C. Crist. Jas. G. Terbell, David Stewart, and Geo. Weller were appointed a building committee. The sum of $3070 was subscribed at this meeting. Dec. 9, 1870, the committee reported $1000 additional subscriptions. December 16th it was resolved to authorize the purchase of a lot for the new church from the estate of Jesse Scofield, and that James Bogert and James Gowdy be a committee to make said purchase.

About this time the following wardens and vestrymen were elected: Geo. Weller, Jas. Bogert, wardens; David Stewart, David Galatian, John C. Holburn, Saml. H. Wait, Jas. Gowdy, Geo. C. Wooster, Wm. Buchanan, Wm. C. Weller, vestrymen.

Dec. 23, 1871, the vestry authorized a committee to sell the parsonage and land belonging to St. Andrew's Church. Geo. Weller and James Gowdy were appointed such a committee.

April 30, 1872, a contract was given to James

Gowdy to build a new parsonage for the sum of $3000. Nov. 19, 1873, the resignation of Levi Johnston was accepted.

June 13, 1874, a call was extended to the Rev. Wm. E. Snowden, which was accepted. He tendered his resignation about April 1, 1877. The Rev. Geo. W. Douglas officiated during the summer. Aug. 19, 1877, a call was made to the Rev. N. F. Robinson, assistant at Trinity Church, New York, which he accepted. July 27th, James Bogert, Jr., warden, died, and David Stuart was elected warden in his place. John Waterhouse was elected vestryman.

June 5, 1877, the vestry sold the old church property to Henry Matthews and Wm. Totty, and the proceeds to apply on the church debt. The third Sunday in August the rector, N. F. Robinson, resigned.

Aug. 23, 1879, a call was extended to the Rev. Francis Washburn.

May 15, 1880, the church debt was paid, and the church was consecrated on June 11, 1880, by the Right Rev. Horatio Potter, D.D., LL.D., etc. The new church and parsonage were erected at a cost of $18,000.

COLDENHAM CHURCH.

The Reformed Presbyterian Congregation of Coldenham was organized by the Rev. James McKinney in the year 1795. Forty-two years before this time, however, a praying society had been formed by Rev. John Culbertson, who came to this county in 1752. This society received supplies of gospel ordinances occasionally until the union between the Reformed Presbytery and the Associate Synod in 1782, which was attended with results so disastrous to this small community that it was unknown to the church until visited by Mr. McKinney; but from the time he began to labor in its bounds it increased so rapidly that at the time of its organization there were about twenty-five communicants, two of whom were elders. Robert Johnston, who had been ordained to the office of ruling elder some time previous to his removal from Ireland, and Robert Beattie, who had been an elder in the Associate Reformed Church at Little Britain, from which he had withdrawn, were the ruling elders of this new congregation. Commencing as it did under favorable auspices, the new organization received liberal supplies of gospel ordinances from those eminent men, who became the fathers of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in America. These supplies were joyfully and profitably received and attended, although they were in the dwelling-houses and barns of the neighborhood until 1799, when a house of worship was erected.

In the year 1800 a call was made by the congregation, in company with one previously organized in the city of New York, upon Alexander McLeod, who, together with Messrs. Donnelly, Black, and Wylie, had been licensed to preach the gospel by the Reformed Presbytery which met at Coldenham in June, 1799. The call having been accepted, Mr. McLeod was ordained and installed accordingly. For three years he labored so successfully in his united charge that at the end of the time each of the congregations wished to obtain all their pastor's labors. His labors were in the country in summer and in the city in winter. Mr. McLeod chose to occupy New York as his future field. Coldenham, of course, was left vacant, and remained so until the settlement of Mr. James Milligan in 1812. Mr. Milligan remained in it until 1817, at which time he removed to Ryegate Street, and in August of the same year Mr. James R. Wilson, having received and accepted a call, became its pastor. During the pastorate of Mr. Wilson a certificate of incorporation was filed under date of April 28, 1829. The elders named at that time were Robert Beattie, David McBurney, William C. Beattie, Robert Hadden, Samuel Arnot, William Elder; the deacons were James Beattie, James McKinney, John Brown, Abraham Gillespie. Dr. Wilson went to Albany, N. Y., in 1830, and in consequence of his removal the congregation remained vacant until his return, in November, 1833.

After his return, the house of worship having become through age uncomfortable, the erection of a new edifice began to be talked of, and in 1838 a new and commodious house was built. In the fall of 1840, Dr. Wilson went to Alleghany, Pa., and the congregation was supplied by Presbyterial assistants until the settlement of James W. Shaw, in May, 1844.

During his pastorate the church for some reason deemed it best to file a new certificate of incorporation. It was executed April 28, 1859, and was signed by Rev. James W. Shaw, pastor. The elders named were William Fleming and Wm. B. Shesor, and the deacons were Matthew Darby and Arthur Fleming.

THE REFORMED DUTCH CHURCH OF BEREÄ.

This church is distant ten miles from the village of Newburgh, and three miles from the villages of Montgomery and Walden. The church was organized under the statute of the State by the name of Bereä, which was suggested by Elder Thomas McKissock, and adopted by the congregation. The church was a secession from the Presbyterian Church of Goodwill, caused by difficulties which originated in the settlement of a minister. Rev. James Ten Eyck was sent for to preach four Sabbaths in November, 1821. The church then made application to the Classis of New Brunswick, to which Mr. Ten Eyck belonged as a licentiate, for his services as an ordained missionary for one year. The Classis of New Brunswick examined Mr. Ten Eyck, and ordained him as a missionary, with direction to labor a year in the church. In April, 1823, Peter Lowe and Robert Crowell were appointed commissioners to present to the Classis of Ulster certain proposals, having in view a connection with the Reformed Dutch Church.

The following is an extract from the minutes of the Classis of Ulster:

"The Classis received the following communication and proposals from the congregation at Berea, for connecting themselves with this Classis :

"1st. That the temporalities of the congregation be managed by trustees agreeably to the statute.

"2d. All persons that are stated hearers at this church, and shall have contributed to the support of the same for one year immediately preceding an election, shall have a voice in fixing the amount of salary, and in making choice of a pastor, etc.

"3d. That the Westminster Confession of Faith, together with the Dutch Reformed Confession of Faith and Catechisms, shall be the standards of this church.

"The above communication and proposals were referred to a committee of the Classis of Ulster, consisting of the Rev. Messrs. Wm. Bogardus, H. Bogardus, and Elder E. Bunk

"Your committee beg leave to report the following resolutions, viz. :

"1st. That the said church and congregation of Berea be and hereby is admitted into connection with this Classis, and received under our constitutional care and government.

"2d. That the Classis are willing that said congregation take any measures and adopt any plans for its internal government which are not repugnant to the constitution of our Reformed Dutch Church.

"3d. That the Classis advise the Rev. Mr. Ten Eyck, who now labors among that people, to take the proper measures for the due organization of said church, and to complete their connection with this body.

"Classis rejoice in the hope that said congregation will become a pious and valuable member of our church, and pray that the Great Head of the church may receive them under his covenant protection and grace.

(Signed) "HENRY OSTRANDER, Chairman."

In pursuance with this act the ecclesiastical relation of Mr. Ten Eyck was regularly transferred from the Classis of New Brunswick to the Classis of Ulster, and installed by a committee of the latter body in 1823 as pastor of the Reformed Dutch Church of Berea. The first consistory was composed of the following persons: Thomas McKissock, John Blake, Caleb Dill, Peter Lowe, and Christian Crist. This consistory was chosen Aug. 2, 1823. The following are the names of the first trustees: Andrew Kidd, John Milliken, Robert Crowell, Nathaniel Ackerly, and Thomas Clineman.

The congregation was incorporated by a certificate executed Nov. 13, 1821. The proceedings were certified to by James Hunter and Thomas McKissock, inspectors of election. The trustees chosen were Robert Crowell, Christian Crist, Thomas Clineman, John W. Milliken, and Nathaniel Ackerly.

The present house of worship was built during the years 1821 and 1822, the parsonage being erected the year following. When erected, the church stood in the midst of a forest; the timber was obtained on the ground and hewn out by the congregation. Thus far in the history of this church there have been but three pastors, the first being Rev. James B. Ten Eyck, above mentioned. His pastorate continued until his death, April 20, 1872.

Rev. L. L. Comfort was settled in July of the same year, and remained also until his death, which occurred in July, 1879.

In the following August, Peter H. Milliken, who had just graduated from the Theological Seminary at New Brunswick, N. J., was called, and in October (1879) was ordained to the gospel ministry.

Elders elected since the first are Nathaniel Akerly,

James Hunter, Cornelius Decker, William Houston, Hugh Milliken, Peter B. Cromwell, Sidney Kidd, James Waugh, Peter Brett, Robert Dill, R. B. Innis, Robert Hall, Joseph Lawson, William Crowell, and William Crowell, Jr.

The financial affairs of the church were managed by a board of trustees until Aug. 29, 1880, when the following persons were ordained deacons: George McCartney, William I. Whigam, James Finley, and John E. Kidd.

The present organization is as follows: Rev. Peter H. Milliken, pastor; elders, Sidney Kidd, Joseph Lawson, William Crowell, Robert Hall, and William Crowell, Jr.; deacons, George McCartney, William I. Whigam, James Finley, and John E. Kidd.

The congregation is composed of 61 families and 118 members.

THE FIRST REFORMED DUTCH CHURCH, WALDEN, executed a certificate of incorporation Feb. 14, 1870. The pastor of the church was Rev. M. V. Schoonmaker; the elders, William M. Snyder, William J. Bradley, and J. G. Millspaugh; the deacons, T. L. Millspaugh, Robert H. Sutcliff, John V. Tears, Joseph Millspaugh. This recent date of the incorporation does not indicate the age of the church, as shown by the following sketch furnished by the pastor.

Two churches preceded it,—the Protestant Episcopal, which was the first established church in Walden, and afterwards a small Seceder Church, which, failing in numbers and strength, fell into the hands of the Methodist Society.

In the year 1830 the matter of building a Presbyterian church was talked of. Grounds were selected as a suitable site at the junction of the properties owned by Jesse Scofield, David Parshall, and Jacob T. Walden, after whom the place is named. A deed was executed to Cyrus Lyon and Cornelius Neaffie as trustees. On soliciting subscriptions for the building of a church, it was found that the community was divided as to whether it should be a Presbyterian or a Dutch Church, as ours was then called. It was decided to build a church, and the name to be designated hereafter. The plot of ground comprised about four acres, supposed to be sufficient for church, parsonage, and burial-ground. A building committee was appointed, composed of Jesse Scofield, A. F. Scofield, Peter Neaffie, and Cornelius Neaffie.

In the summer of 1835 the foundation was laid. In the fall of 1836 the building was inclosed, and the basement so far finished as to be used for religious service. In the year 1838 the building was completed, and was solemnly dedicated to the worship of Almighty God. The sermon on the occasion was preached by Rev. Thomas Dewitt, D.D., of New York City. Previous to this it had been decided by a majority of votes that it should be a Reformed Dutch Church, under the care of the Classis of Orange. The church is located on an eminence, and is designated from others in the village as "the church on the hill." It is well and substantially built. Proportions, 70 feet in length, 50 in breadth. Cost, $12,000, and will comfortably seat 500 persons.

The next year after the building of the church steps were taken for building a parsonage on the purchased grounds adjoining the church on the north. Its cost was $3000. In the year 1871 an addition was made to the parsonage, making it a double house, at an additional cost of $2000.

The church was organized with a membership of twenty persons. The first consistory was composed of Jesse Scofield and Barent Van Buren, elders; Alexander Kidd and Peter Clearwater, deacons.

January, 1839, a call was presented to Rev. Jacob C. Sears, but was declined. July, 1839, a call was made upon Rev. John M. Scribner and accepted. Mr. Scribner was pastor about two years and resigned.

April, 1842, a call was made upon Rev. Charles Whitehead and accepted. Mr. Whitehead remained pastor for seven years, under whose ministry the church grew and was multiplied. He resigned March, 1849. June, 1849, a call was presented to Rev. William Brush and declined. August, 1849, a call was made upon Rev. M. V. Schoonmaker, then settled at East New York, Long Island. After due consideration this call was accepted, and on the 28th day of August, 1849, Rev. M. V. Schoonmaker was duly installed as pastor of said church. He is pastor still, having served the church for a period of thirty-one years.

The following are the names of consistory at the time of his call: P. B. Cromwell, T. T. Storm, J. D. Coe, and Moses Smith, elders; Robert Laird, J. G. Wooley, and G. Van Arsdale, deacons. All of the former have passed away.

The following are the present acting consistory: E. W. Knapp, J. V. Tears, H. Suydam, A. Bateman, elders; Robt. Moore, J. Lefevre, P. Millsbaugh, J. Millsbaugh, deacons.

The congregation numbers about 100 families and 200 communicants, with a Sabbath-school of 150 scholars.

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF MONTGOMERY

executed a certificate of incorporation July 7, 1832. The proceedings were signed by Joshua Conger and Benjamin Van Keuren. The trustees chosen were Nathaniel P. Hill, Gideon Pelton, John C. Wilkin, Robert S. Crawford, Charles Borland, Jr., and George Eager. The corner-stone of the Presbyterian church in the village of Montgomery was laid July 19, 1831, by the Hon. Charles Borland, and an impressive address was delivered on the occasion by the Rev. Ezra Fisk, D.D., of Goshen, accompanied with other solemn religious services.

Aug. 27, 1832, the congregation voted to invite the Rev. James O. Stokes to become their pastor. The Presbytery refused to install him, and furthermore the church at this time was not under the care of the Presbytery. He served the church as temporary supply one year.

Oct. 2, 1832, a committee of the Presbytery of Hudson, viz.: Rev. Charles Cummins, D.D., Rev. William Timlow, and Rev. Daniel T. Wood proceeded to organize the Presbyterian Church in the village of Montgomery. It consisted of 30 individuals, viz.: Cyrus Lyon, Walter Mead, Saml. T. Scott, Benjamin Van Keuren, Joshua Conger, Elizabeth Van Keuren, Eve Miller, Isabella H. Borland, Mary Preston, Rhoda Neaffie, Margaret Gridley, Rachel Chandler, Matilda C. Hill, Jemima Parshall, Sarah Pelton, Sarah McNeal, Emily Weller, Ann Eliza McNeal, Hiram E. Conger, John Boak, Jr., Samuel Bookstaver, John Peache, Hiram Hays, John Kelly, Sarah Ann Conger, Esther Hunter, Jane Lawson, Elizabeth Eager, Stephen Gillespie. On the day of the organization, after sermon by the Rev. C. Cummins, D.D., the above 30 persons, having presented their certificates of good standing and dismission from their respective churches, were in due form constituted a church of Jesus Christ, under the name of the Montgomery (village) Presbyterian Church.

The following persons were elected ruling elders on the same occasion, viz.: Cyrus Lyon, Walter Mead, S. T. Scott, John Kelly, and John Boak, Jr. The three last were ordained, the two first having held office in other churches were not re-ordained.

The church and congregation were addressed on the occasion by the Rev. W. Timlow, and the newly elected elders by the Rev. D. T. Wood, after which, by prayer and the imposition of hands, they were duly constituted and installed over the flock which the great Head of the church had appointed them to superintend.

In March, 1834, Rev. Sheridan Guiteau was elected pastor of the church, and was soon after installed; resigned his charge June 9, 1835. He was succeeded by the Rev. Benj. B. Stockton, late of Leroy, N. Y.; he was installed July 28, 1835, and resigned April, 1838.

April 26, 1838, the church extended a unanimous call to the Rev. Elias R. Fairchild, of Hardyston, N. J. He accepted, and was installed June 26, 1838. His pastorate was brief—one and a half years; dismissed by the Presbytery Oct. 3, 1839.

Dec. 14, 1839, the Rev. Robt. G. Armstrong, of Fishkill, N. Y., was elected pastor; he was installed Feb. 5, 1840, and dismissed May, 1841.

The Rev. William W. Newell, D.D., of Boston, was unanimously elected Mr. Armstrong's successor.

Mr. Newell received the call Nov. 21, 1841; entered upon his labors Jan. 4, 1842, and was installed Feb. 2, 1842.

Rev. Mr. Newell's ministry was signalized by a remarkable outpouring of the Spirit,—102 received into the church at one time, 92 by profession and 10 by letter, and subsequently 48 by profession and 15 by letter, making in the aggregate 165 as the crowning glory of his ministry.

In August, 1842, Messrs. H. E. Conger, Abraham Vail, and Theo. L. Jackson were inducted into the ruling eldership of the church.

Rev. Mr. Newell resigned his charge Oct. 10, 1847.

In April, 1848, the people with one voice invited the Rev. Dr. Fairchild to re-accept the pastorate of the church. The unanimity and cordiality was such, and his principal object being removed now in our having a parsonage, the doctor accepted the call with the clear and acknowledged understanding that the congregation would wipe out their church debt. This debt had run along from the foundation of the church,—increased by $600 with the building of the parsonage,—till now, with accumulated interest, it had risen to the large sum of $2300. The debt was extinguished. In the fall of 1849, Dr. Fairchild's health failing, he spent the winter at the West to recuperate, hoping to resume his ministry in the spring.

The congregation meanwhile at his suggestion had employed Rev. Gideon N. Judd, D.D., of Catskill, N. Y., as temporary supply. Dr. Judd labored with great acceptance during the winter, and when the spring came, and Dr. Fairchild reported himself as no better prepared to resume his labors, the congregation saw the way open to secure the services of Dr. Judd as their future pastor. The call was made and accepted, and he was installed Sept. 4, 1850.

Dr. Judd continued in his labors—"Warning every man, and teaching every man, that he might be able to present every man perfect before Christ Jesus"—until the midnight cry came on March 3, 1860, to come up higher.

In April, 1860, Dr. Fairchild undertook to resume his labors, but his former indisposition returned upon him, and he was obliged to resign his charge October, 1861.

Messrs. Alexander Beattie and Miller Van Keuren were added to the bench of elders at this time. April 7, 1862, Rev. Joseph M. McNulty was elected pastor; after having served the church for six years, during the troublous period of the war, he was dismissed by the Presbytery at his own request, April 22, 1868.

Rev. Richard Bentley accepted the call of the congregation July 8, 1868; he was installed Nov. 10, 1868, and dismissed by Presbytery November, 1871.

In January, 1873, Rev. John Ward, of Bloomfield, N. J., accepted the unanimous call of the congregation, and commenced his ministry. He was installed May 22, 1873. Messrs. Ahial Decker, Alexander T. Russell, D. M. Wade, F. Bodine, and Peter E. Miller were inducted into the ruling eldership at this time.

Presbytery dissolved the pastoral relation between Mr. Ward and the congregation April 19, 1875.

The present pastor, Rev. J. C. Forsythe, was installed Oct. 14, 1875.

The trustees (1880) are H. V. McNeal, Esq., George

Senior, Esq., John I. Decker, Esq., Samuel W. Eager, Esq., John J. Van Keuren, James Vanderloef.

The elders are Ahial Decker, Theo. L. Jackson, Daniel M. Wade, Fred. R. Bodine, Peter E. Miller.

The Sabbath-school of the Presbyterian Church when first organized, in May, 1832, was distinctively a village union school, all the evangelical Christians of the village sustaining and being identified with this benevolent home work. Its sessions were held in the Academy Hall, and Dr. Peter A. Millspaugh was its first superintendent. After a few years the Methodist element was withdrawn to form a church and society of their own. The sessions of the school were removed to the auditorium of the church, and thenceforth the complexion and identification of the school was with the church, within whose hallowed walls its sacred assemblages were held.

Hiram E. Conger, Esq., was the next superintendent. He was followed by Elder B. Perkins, H. B. Bull, Esq., Electus Douglass, Esq., and the present incumbent, since 1872, is Elder F. Bodine. The school averages 100 scholars, with 12 teachers.

The present officers are F. Bodine, superintendent; P. E. Miller, vice-superintendent; B. B. Johnston, librarian; Daniel M. Wade, treasurer.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF MONTGOMERY

effected a legal organization April 25, 1829. The proceedings were signed by Samuel Wait, chairman, and the trustees chosen were Samuel Wait, Samuel Birdsall, Stephen Woolsey, Joshua Marston, and Edward Hanlon.

The church filed another certificate Oct. 8, 1831. The proceedings are verified by Samuel Wait and Edward Hanlon. The trustees chosen were Samuel Wait, Edward Hanlon, John Knapp, Thomas Graham, and Silas R. Goodale.

In the year 1824 a new "two weeks' circuit" was constituted of portions set off from the Newburgh and New Windsor Circuits, and called Bloomingburgh Circuit. Noah Bigelow was appointed preacher in charge, Daniel Ostrander at the time being presiding elder. The stewards were William Wiggins, James Rumsey, and Daniel Wilson. The ensuing year T. Kennedy was the preacher in charge, and John Loughhead was ordained a local deacon. The next year, 1826, Jarvis T. Nichols was appointed to this circuit. There were then nine classes, as follows: Bethel First Class, Aaron Palmer, leader; Bethel Second Class, Daniel C. Palmer, leader; Deerpark, William Wiggins, leader; Middletown, Charles Woolsey, leader; Outlet, I. Denton, leader; Bloomingburgh, J. Loughhead, leader; Burlingham, —; Old Shawangunk, E. Niver, leader; Sam's Point, R. Mance, leader.

During the session of Conference in 1826, James Kennedy, one of the stewards, died, and Charles Wooley, of Middletown, was appointed in his stead.

The first mention of Montgomery found in the records is in the minutes of a Quarterly Conference held at Bethel Oct. 14, 1826, where, in the account of moneys received, Montgomery is credited with one dollar. It may be mentioned, however, that at the next Quarterly Meeting Montgomery was credited with $6.50, and at the meeting of March 24, 1827, Montgomery is credited with the largest amount on the list. The first Quarterly Meeting for the year 1827 is recorded as being held at Burlingham, in Mr. Todd's barn, July 21, 1827, Rev. Phineas Rice, president; J. T. Nichols, circuit preacher; Isaac Ferris, missionary. This year the Conference collections from the whole circuit amounted to $6.50. In 1828, Bezaliel Howe and Hiram Wing were the preachers. The first mention of Walden and Coldenham as preaching-places occurs during this year.

In 1829, B. Howe and J. W. Lefevre were the preachers. The "table expenses" of the former were estimated at $100, and of the latter at $50, which was probably in addition to the disciplinary allowance of $200 to married and $100 to single men.

The great event of the year was the building of the church at Montgomery. At the first Quarterly Conference for the year, held at Bethel church July 4th, a committee, consisting of "Brothers Birdsall, Todd, and Couch," was appointed to make an estimate of the expenses of building a church in the village of Montgomery. The deed conveying the site bears date Aug. 15, 1829. It is from Stephen Preston and Mary Preston to Samuel Wait, Samuel Birdsall, Stephen Woolsey, Edward Hanlon, and Joshua Marston, trustees. Samuel Wait was the leading man in this enterprise.

In 1831 the preachers were E. Smith and Mr. Lefevre. Conference that year resolved itself into a "Sabbath-school Society." P. Rice was chosen president, Rev. E. Smith vice-president, E. Todd treasurer, and a board of managers consisting of R. Westlake, E. Miers, A. Palmer, J. Walker, S. B. Ostrander, J. Bushfield, N. Sullivan, R. Mance, N. Todd, S. Martinus, P. Coleman, I. Denton.

At the Annual Conference of 1831 the name was changed to Montgomery Circuit. Noah Sullivan was this year recommended as a traveling preacher, and Samuel Wait was chosen a steward. E. Smith and H. Humphreys were the preachers.

J. Law and D. Holmes were the preachers in 1832. A "Circuit Missionary Tract and Sunday-school Society" was formed this year, of which Samuel Wait was secretary. In 1833, J. Law and D. B. Ostrander were appointed to this circuit. Johnson Young was elected a steward. The next year Hiram Wing and Sylvester H. Clark were appointed preachers.

The parsonage at Montgomery was built in the fall of this year.

These interesting details of the first work of Methodism in this vicinity are taken from a sketch recorded in a book now in possession of the pastor.

The present organization (December, 1880) consists of Rev. H. C. Earl, pastor; Wm. H. Felter, leader; George Overheiser, Thomas H. Senior, J. B. Lawson, Daniel Jewell, Wm. McWhorter, James Laughlin, Edward Knapp, stewards; George Overheiser, Thomas H. Senior, J. B. Lawson, Andrew Morehouse, John A. Powell, Wm. H. Felter. The Sunday-school is under the charge of the pastor. The members of the church number about 100; Sunday-school attendance about 140, with 500 volumes in the library.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF WALDEN executed a certificate of incorporation April 15, 1850. The proceedings were signed by John T. Boothroyd and Christopher Briggs. The trustees named in the instrument were Christopher S. Briggs, John T. Boothroyd, Lyman Fairchild, Philip B. Evans, Henry H. McElheny.

Mr. A. H. Saxe furnishes the following account:

Previous to the year 1850 the Methodist Episcopal Society of Walden comprised one or two "classes," which were wont to meet for public service in a school-house. They were under the pastoral care of the preacher in charge of Montgomery, an adjoining village. In the year above named, under the pastorate of Rev. Humphrey Humphreys, the building known as Beattie's church was bought, and the first trustees were elected. It continued in connection with Montgomery until 1866, when by the action of Conference it became an independent charge. In this year a parsonage was built, one of the most neat and substantial in the district.

In 1870, under the pastorate of Rev. E. E. Pinney, the church was greatly enlarged and beautified at an expense of about $6000, and was rededicated, substantially free from debt, Dec. 21, 1870, Dr. C. D. Foss (now bishop) preaching the dedicatory sermon. After the evening service, conducted by Rev. W. P. Abbott, additional sums were raised.

Below is a tabular statement of pastors from 1850, while connected with Montgomery: 1850, Rev. Humphrey Humphreys; 1852, Rev. J. C. Washburn; 1854, Rev. ——— Stout; 1856, Rev. J. Millard; 1858, Rev. D. B. Turner; 1859, Rev. A. C. Fields; 1861, Rev. J. W. Jones; 1863, Rev. J. W. Breakey; 1865, Rev. M. Van Deusen.

As an independent station: 1866, Rev. A. H. Saxe; 1868, Rev. I. Croft; 1870, Rev. E. E. Pinney; 1873, Rev. David Phillips; 1876, Rev. J. Millard; 1879, Rev. Z. N. Lewis (present incumbent, 1880).

The present organization consists of Rev. Z. N. Lewis, pastor; Wm. H. Dawson, Caleb Birch, George Root, Henry Matthews, Philip Van Buren, John Whitehead, A. S. Tears, John S. Taylor, stewards; Wm. W. Snyder, James M. Walker, John S. Taylor, A. H. Saxe, Jacob Brodwell, J. Thomas Andrews, Samuel Robinson, trustees; James M. Walker, superintendent of Sunday-school.

The church numbers 230 members.

The Sunday-school attendance is nearly as large, the work being very interesting and well sustained. There is a library of about 500 volumes.

THE CHURCH OF THE HOLY NAME OF MARY (Catholic), in the village of Montgomery, was incorporated Oct. 1, 1870. The trustees who executed the certificate were Rev. John McCloskey, archbishop; Rev. William Starr, vicar-general; Rev. Hugh S. O'Hare, pastor; and two laymen, Owen Early and Patrick Gannon.

No statistics have been received from this church in reply to our inquiries before going to press. The society has a house of worship of convenient size and arrangement. The congregation is efficiently led by the pastor, and the church doubtless has a future of great success before it.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

If an entire volume for this town were being written instead of a single chapter in a county history, the old burial-places could be drawn upon for many interesting data. We can only briefly mention the location of some of them as a clue to such further study as any one may desire to make.

The old burial-place of St. Andrew's Church is in the neighborhood where the house of worship formerly stood, and the ownership of the ground is retained by the church. It is cared for to some extent as a place of sacred memories.

At Goodwill Church the old burial-place should furnish many important dates, settlement at that point dating back to 1725-30 beyond any doubt. This ground is also owned by the church, which is able to give to it that loving care for the memory of the early families that mere public grounds without special ownership too often fail to receive.

The Coldenham burial-ground dates back to about the same period.

The old ground of the Reformed Church, Montgomery village, must also be considered about as early a place of burial, for the church dates from 1732.

Other burial-places are as follows: the remains of one near the Reformed Church in Walden village, the one known as the Methodist Cemetery in the same village, the Berea graveyard, the new one of the Reformed Church, Montgomery, the Presbyterian at Montgomery, and there are doubtless many other places where one or more of the dead were buried in the old times, when private burial was so common on farms here and there throughout a new country.

THE WALLKILL VALLEY CEMETERY ASSOCIATION, at Walden, was organized at a meeting held Sept. 9, 1865, at the office of Scofield, Capron & Co. Egbert Millspaugh was appointed chairman, and Augustus F. Scofield secretary. The trustees chosen were James Todd, Henry Bergen, William J. Embler, Egbert Millspaugh, Stephen Rapalye, Augustus F. Scofield, Levi L. Gowdy, Henry Suydam, and Seth M. Capron. The proceedings were verified by the officers before John L. Hart, justice of the peace, September 9th, and recorded September 15th.

This association have a handsomely-situated cemetery a mile southwest of old St. Andrew's burying-ground. The grounds have been laid out with care, many fine monuments are erected, and much care is evidently being given to the proper adornment of the grounds.

IX.—TOWN SOCIETIES, BANKS, INCORPORATIONS, Etc.

MASONIC.

It is understood that there was an early lodge, dating back to 1800; that it was removed afterwards to Tuthilltown, Ulster Co., and was there dissolved. (See General History.)

COURT ORANGE, No. 6231, A. O. F.

This organization was formed June 1, 1876, and now numbers about 70 members, and is in a very prosperous condition. This order is beneficial and benevolent, and is said to have been instituted about the middle of the eighteenth century (1745), and is now established in many parts of the world. Its universal character, together with its superior financial system of management under one central government, with subsidiary districts and subordinate controlling bodies, has secured its stability of character and maintained its continuous growth in wealth and membership until it has reached the following conditions:

There are 541,509 benefit or regularly contributing members, and 12,531 honorary members; in all, 554,040. The different branches are styled "courts." There is one High Court of the order, two subsidiary High Courts (the one in the United States now located in the city of New York), 290 district courts, and 4514 subordinate courts, situate in the United States, Canadas, England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Australia, Bermuda, East and West Indies, Gibraltar, Malta, New Zealand, St. Helena, South Africa, Peru, and in other parts of the world.

The benefits disbursed for the year ending Dec. 31, 1879, were as follows: Sick benefits, $1,602,379.06; funeral allowances, $440,478.27; benevolence to distressed members, $68,265.08; total, $2,111,122.41.

The subordinate court funds at the end of the year 1879 amounted to $12,387,775, and the district (an intermediate governing body) court funds, $1,570,140; total, $13,957,915.

The primary objects of a court of Ancient Foresters are to guarantee its members, 1, a weekly allowance in sickness; 2, to furnish medicine and the services of a physician without cost; 3, to the comfort of members when sick or in affliction; 4, to provide relief in time of adversity and distress; 5, to supply a specific sum for the burial of members and members' wives; 6, an endowment for the widow and orphan or nearest of kin. The fulfillment of these objects has won the gratitude and appreciation of a vast number of members, their families, and relatives during the existence of the order, many of whom least expected to require or realize its advantages when joining the fraternity.

The following have been the officers of Court Orange since its organization:

June, 1876.—John McNamara, C. R.; Wm^d Smith, S. C. R.; Benj. Brown, Treas.; Thos. Meekin, Sec.; Moses Hatch, S. W.; James Lyle, J. W.; James Wilkinson, S. B.; John Bamforth, J. B.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.

Various organizations have existed in town from time to time, but they have disappeared, each doubtless having done something towards moulding public sentiment and training up the young in the ways of virtue. At present the Women's Christian Temperance Unions and the Reform Clubs of Walden and Montgomery are the principal active societies. Their frequent meetings and their praiseworthy attempts to open free reading-rooms constitute the principal work of the present time.

BANKS.

The first banking business done in Walden was by the firm of Lefevre & De Garmo about 1870. They kept a private banking-office for a year or two. After they closed up there were no banking facilities for some time. Stoddard, Downs & Rutherford then opened business under the name of "The Exchange Bank of Walden," Nov. 24, 1873. They continued in business under that name until April 26, 1877, when they closed up, having done a safe and successful business for three years and a half. It was believed that the time had come to establish banking upon a more permanent basis, and therefore, prior to the close of the Exchange Bank and in anticipation of such close, the NATIONAL BANK OF WALDEN was organized, March 5, 1877. The business of the previous institution was changed to the new organization as soon as practicable. The first board of directors were John C. Scofield, president; George W. Stoddard, vice-president; W. G. Rutherford, cashier; John Kidd, Henry Bergen, John V. Tears, S. M. Capron, A. Bateman, D. B. Squires. The present handsome building, three stories in height and built of brick, was erected for banking purposes before 1870, and is now owned by the Walden National Bank. They have since their occupancy constructed a first-class fire-proof and burglar-proof vault. It is one of the best in the State, with all the modern improvements, including a chronometer lock. The rooms are pleasant and convenient. The present board of directors is but slightly changed from that of 1877. It comprises John C. Scofield, president; George W. Stoddard, vice-president; W. G. Rutherford, cashier; John Kidd, Henry Bergen, D. B. Squires, J. M. Wilkin, Jacob Tears, J. A. Crawford.

The discounts at present date exceed $120,000. The deposits are over $100,000. Dividends are declared semi-annually, and there is an undivided surplus of $3000. It may be added as proof of the careful and successful management that not a dollar has been lost in the loans of four years.

THE WALDEN SAVINGS BANK was organized under a charter dated April 25, 1872. The first trustees were Seth M. Capron, William E. Gowdy, D. Wortman Rapalje, John S. Taylor, Thomas J. Bradley, Thomas Hepper, Henry Bergen, D. M. Wade, Jonathan Hawkins, A. Deyo Bevier, Daniel D. DuBois, William H. De Garmo, Marcus K. Hill, James G. Terbell, James Todd, George Weller, John V. Tears; and the first officers were Seth M. Capron, president; Thomas J. Bradley, first vice-president; George Weller, Sr., second vice-president; Peter Lefevre, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Capron continued in the office of president until his death, Nov. 30, 1878. He was succeeded by George Weller, Sr., the present incumbent. Peter Lefevre served as secretary and treasurer about a year and a half. He was succeeded by Joseph G. Millspaugh. His son, Martin L. Millspaugh, was the next secretary and treasurer. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, George W. Stoddard. The place of business is in the rooms of the Walden National Bank. The first depositor was John R. Hays. The deposits now exceed $135,000, and the surplus is over $60,000.

The present organization (December, 1880) comprises the following officers: George Weller, president; John Kidd, first vice-president; John V. Tears, second vice-president; George W. Stoddard, secretary and treasurer; B. R. Champion, attorney (Goshen). Trustees, George Weller, John V. Tears, Daniel M. Wade, elected April, 1872; Moses Littell, elected January, 1873; Joseph Rowland, Jacob Tears, elected November, 1873; John Kidd, elected August, 1874; Frederick Bodine, elected December, 1876; Robert Ashby, elected January, 1877; John R. Hays, elected June, 1877; Theron L. Millsbaugh, elected January, 1880; Hiram B. Wooster, Jacob Van Steenburgh, elected March, 1880.

THE INSURANCE AGENCY,

by the officers of the National Bank, is a large and important business, affording insurance facilities to Montgomery and adjacent towns. A line of strong companies is represented. The lowest rates possible for safe insurance are given, and all losses are promptly adjusted.

X.—PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

The High Falls at Walden in the earlier years, when the volume of the stream was greater than in modern times, were very noted. They are still romantic and attractive, though the primeval forests on their banks were long since cut away, and for a century or more the whirling waters have been compelled to minister to the wants of man. Another writer says:

"The fall is about forty feet, not perpendicular but in an angle of about forty-five degrees. When the stream is full of water the sight is beautiful beyond description, and is increased in grandeur by the resistance of its rocky and irregular descent. At every step the foaming flood is met by some obstructing rock, which throws the rush of water in another direction, there again to be impeded in its downward course and forced aside by the mighty pressure from above. Thus struggling from rock to rock, deep buried by the headlong torrent, the flood, in tones of thunder, meets the abyss below, and plunging deep comes boiling up throughout the mighty cauldron, and in whirling eddies flows on its way. The roar of this waterfall in the vicinity is almost deafening for a little while, and the view of it from both sides of the stream, which at this place are high, is truly grand and magnificent. The abyss below is really frightful at such a time, yet directly over it, at the foot of this fall, the first settlers built a bridge, which remained there till the site was changed to that of Galatian's Mill."

INDIAN LOCALITIES.

On the east bank of the Wallkill, on the line between the towns of Montgomery and Wallkill, and on the farm of Daniel Rogers, deceased, there was an Indian settlement. The land at this location, and for some distance around, was cleared, and full-grown apple-trees flourishing when first visited by the white immigrants. Some of the trees were standing for many years.

On the flat, just above the bridge across the Wallkill, near Mr. John Miller's, and below where the old Miller stone house stood, there was another settlement. They were there when Johannes Miller planted his shanty on the hill above them. Of these there is no tradition worth recording, except that they were friendly, and not many years after the settlement began to leave, and were all gone several years before the war.

On the farm of Mr. Stuffle Mould, on the main road from Montgomery to Albany, near the residence of Samuel Hunter, Esq., there was a third Indian location. This clan was quite numerous. They broke up and left about 1775. A squaw of this clan, by association with the family of Mr. Mould, had become partially civilized, and did not wish to go. She had made herself useful to the family in many ways, and they wished to keep her. To accomplish this, with the consent of Mr. Mould, she hid herself somewhere about the house. The Indians in looking over their members missed her, and knowing her intimacy with the family instantly suspected that she did not want to leave, and had secreted herself till they should remove. To obtain her they surrounded the house for several nights in succession, made all kinds of hideous noise, demanding the absent squaw. At last Mr. Mould concluded that if she was not produced and given up, the Indians, as they were about to leave, would as soon break friendship for cause as not, and in the excitement of the moment might murder the family, he produced her, and they left never to return.

OLD HOMESTEADS.

The following list of old historic homesteads was given by Mr. Eager in 1846. The description is of recent date enough to still indicate the location of such as remain or the site of those which have been removed:

The Rockafeller house, near the village of Montgomery, known as "The Camp."

The stone Hedden house, near the Goodwill church.

The Charles Booth house, owned in later years by Lewis Booth, on the road from Neelytown to Campbell Hall (town of Hamptonburgh).

The Henry Van Keuren stone house, near Goodwill church, owned by Dr. James Van Keuren in modern times.

Hans Youngblood's stone house, near the Muddy Kill, where there was a German school in 1761.

The Willhelms Smith house, built in 1759 of stone drawn from Comfort Hill. They would draw a day or two, then mend the roads for a day or two. It was owned in after-years by Hendrick Smith.

The house known as the Beemer place, on the State road.

The old house at Neelytown built by William Eager, owned in later times by Mr. Mulford.

The old house at Neelytown built by James McCobb, subsequently owned by James Jackson, and later by Mr. Sherwood.

The old house where Rev. Robert Annan lived during the Revolution, and owned in later years by Foster Smith.

The old stone house built by Lieutenant-Governor Colden.

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

This town is well adapted to successful agriculture. Its surface is pleasantly diversified with hills and with rolling uplands. There is also valuable meadow land.

While there are handsome elevations, there is no eminence of height sufficient to be called a mountain.

The meadows are extensive and productive; the plow-lands are warm and fertile. Considerable wheat was formerly raised. The valley of the Wallkill in this and other towns near is favorable to a varied system of farming. It is productive in pasturage and mowing, and also capable, if judiciously managed, of yielding excellent crops of grain.

There is an abundant supply of pure water furnished by numerous springs, brooks, and rivulets.

The last few years have witnessed an immense development of dairy products, more especially in the direct sale of milk daily to New York City. It is difficult to obtain statistics to fully show the magnitude of this trade. It is reported that the milk trains on the railroads pay the companies better profit than any other class of trains.

The Wallkill River is a durable stream, and running through the town from south to north, furnishes extensive hydraulic power at many points on its course. The fishing was formerly of considerable value as a source of profit. Delicious eels and catfish abounded. The muddy waters of the Drowned Lands were favorable to their growth. They were taken in various ways, but principally by rude dams of stone thrown across the kill, in which was set a rock at the point where the water issues from the dam. At the mills these rocks were set in the race-ways below the mills, and are said to have been taken by wagon-loads and sold in this and neighboring towns.

The soil of the town in the vicinity of Montgomery and St. Andrews consists of loam and sand; in other parts, loam and gravel of good depth. Upon the eastern slope of the Comfort Hills are many excellent farms. Through a valley which skirts their base flows the Muddy Kill, draining off to the Wallkill any surplus waters. There is very little land in Montgomery that cannot be cultivated.

Under the old drainage law, passed for the benefit of Orange and Dutchess Counties, the people availed themselves of its provisions with considerable vigor until any bog meadow or wet lowlands were thoroughly reclaimed.

The soil is well adapted to fruit. Valuable orchards were planted sixty years ago or more by Robert Griffith, John Miller, Andrew Graham, and others. The production of fruit has sometimes been large, though not competing with the valuable fruit regions of Western New York, or in later years of Michigan.

As in other towns, the style of farming has changed somewhat under the later method of sending milk direct to the New York market. By the Wallkill Valley Railroad the town enjoys easy and prompt connection not only with the larger villages of the county, but with the great metropolis.

The bonding of the town may have seemed to some a rash step, and the creation of a great burden of debt; but the advantages to be considered on the other hand are very many. Doubtless if the citizens could now abolish the debt by abolishing the railroad, they would still vote to pay the debt and enjoy the present railroad facilities. Indeed, men who had opposed bonding, in advertising farms to sell soon after, named their nearness to railroad stations as enhancing immensely the value of the real estate.

ORANGE COUNTY SCIENTIFIC AND PRACTICAL AGRICULTURAL INSTITUTE.

"The design of this Institute is to afford the most efficient means for the acquisition of a combined scientific and practical knowledge of agriculture.

"A number of farmers residing in the same neighborhood in the town of Montgomery, from seven to nine miles west of Newburgh, having united under a written contract one with the other to become instructors to such pupils as may be committed to their care through the undersigned, their officers, present the Institute to the attention of the public.

"Each pupil will be under the practical instruction of the member of the association with whom he may reside.

"The scientific instruction will be under the care of Mr. James Darrach, a graduate of Yale College, a gentleman of scientific attainments, and, in common with his associates, a holder of his own plow.

"This part of the institution will embrace most of the academic studies, natural history, and the principles of agricultural economy.

"The peculiarity of this Institute which recommends it to parents is, that the practical instruction will be given by practical farmers, whose duty and interest compel them to attend to the economy as well as the management of a farm.

"It presents also the following features: family discipline and care; constant companionship with the instructors; varied husbandry and soil which the pupils will be constantly directed to observe and compare. In the neighborhood are places of worship within convenient distance for all to attend,—Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Reformed Dutch, Scotch Presbyterian, and Methodist.

"Terms: $125 per annum for tuition and board, payable semi-annually in advance.

"Mail and other stages that pass over the Newburgh and Cohecton Turnpike connect our places daily with Newburgh.

"Enquiries and applications may be addressed to either of the undersigned at Coldenham, Orange Co., N. Y.

LINDLEY MURRAY FERRIS, Pres't.

"SAMUEL WAIT, Jr., Secretary."

At the opening of this institution on May 20, 1846, an introductory lecture was delivered by Professor James Darrach, on the nature and object of the institution, mode of instruction, etc., and widely circulated at the time.

THE WOOLEN-FACTORY AT WALDEN was established in 1823 by Jesse Scofield and Dr. Capron. It was then styled the Franklin Company, and the old name may still be seen over the arched entrance. They continued the business down to about 1844. The firm was then changed to Scofield, Capron & Co., composed of Augustus F. Scofield, Seth M. Capron, and L. L. Gowdy. They continued until the death of the latter, in June, 1871. They were run for a month longer under the same firm-name when the senior partner, A. F. Scofield, died. This death brought about a dissolution of the firm. A reorganization took place under the firm-name of Townsend, Gowdy & Co., who remained in the business for about three years. They were succeeded by S. M. Holmes & Co., who only operated the mill for one year. The next proprietor was R. N. Kitchen, who continued for a short time when the business passed into the hands of the present proprietors, Perry, Bartow & Wheeler, who are doing a large and successful business. The woolen-factory has for more than fifty years been a marked feature of Walden, and one of the early sources of its substantial growth. It brought many operatives to settle here, and its early proprietors contributed largely to the business success of the village. The present firm are giving careful management to the enterprise, and operating the mills with energy and skill. The line of manufacture consists of woolen goods generally, cloths and fancy cassimeres receiving special attention. About eighty hands are employed and the works are run night and day. The present firm have only operated them since January, 1879.

The buildings are large, substantial structures of stone. The water privilege is valuable and permanent. Buildings or tenements for employes are built in the same style as the factory.

THE NEW YORK KNIFE COMPANY, located at Walden, have one of the largest cutlery establishments in the United States. Situated just at the falls of the Walkill, they own the first right to that magnificent water privilege. The company was organized in 1852, and founded a cutlery business at Matteawan, Dutchess Co.

In 1856 they removed to Walden, and purchased the old building, which had been standing vacant for some years, formerly a cotton-factory. This building has been at various times enlarged, improved, and fitted up with the best modern machinery. The officers of the company are Thomas W. Bradley, president and treasurer; Joseph Rowland, vice-president; and John Best, secretary. The line of work consists of table and pocket cutlery of every variety, style, and value. They employ about two hundred and fifty hands, and manufacture in a single year 1,600,000 finished pieces. Mr. Bradley, the president, superintends the entire business. His personal history is interesting. Leaving his lucrative business in 1862, he enlisted as a private in Company H, of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth; rose steadily through the official grades to the position of captain, and was brevetted lieutenant-colonel as a recognition by Congress of gallant services before Petersburg. Since the war he has had important military positions under the State authorities, closing his services in that line as lieutenant-colonel and assistant adjutant-general under Governor Tilden. He was also member of Assembly in 1875 and 1876.

THE WALDEN CONDENSED MILK COMPANY was organized by a certificate executed April 20, 1864. The capital stock was determined to consist of $50,000, divided into five hundred shares of $100 each. The trustees named in this instrument were Frank J. Kage, Henry W. Alden, and Homer A. Kidd.

This enterprise was carried on for two or three years and then reorganized under the name of

THE HIGHLAND CONDENSED MILK COMPANY, which filed a certificate of incorporation March 17, 1865. The objects of the association were stated as follows: "The manufacture and sale of milk and eggs in a concentrated or condensed form." The trustees named were Frank J. Kage, Homer A. Kidd, Jesse Scofield, Charles D. Wooley, and Henry W. Alden. The capital stock was determined at $50,000, to be divided into five hundred shares of $100 each.

A few years later the milk business was discontinued, and the buildings were devoted to the use of the Walden Soap-Works.

THE BRICKYARD AT WALDEN.

This was established in 1868 by the present proprietor, James Gowdy. The clay proved to be of excellent quality. Mr. Gowdy's facilities for manufacturing are convenient and extensive. The line of work is confined to the manufacture of common brick. The average number of hands employed is 20, and the capacity of the yard is about 2,000,000 per year. Mr. Gowdy is supplying brick to a large extent of country, but more directly to the village of Walden. It was said of Napoleon that he found Paris brick but left it marble. Mr. Gowdy found Walden wood, but will leave it brick, judging by the change of twelve years.

THE WALDEN KNIFE COMPANY.

This was organized as a co-operative association in 1870, and was carried on until 1874 under that arrangement, when it became a joint-stock association. At the first organization W. E. Gowdy was president, E. Whitehead secretary, and Milton B. Tears superintendent. The officers of the joint-stock association are J. S. Taylor, president; G. Weller, Jr., vice-president and treasurer; A. H. Saxe, secretary; E. Whitehead, manager. The line of work is exclusively pocket cutlery, of which from six hundred to eight hundred different styles are made. The company employ 125 hands. The buildings are those of the Giles Andrews Woolen-Mills. The knife company remodeled them and adapted them to their purposes.

Mr. A. H. Saxe adds the following:

The mill now occupied by the Walden Knife Company was built in the year 1827-28, and run by what was known as the Orange Company as a woolen-cloth factory. In 1837, Henry DuBois acquired the title to the property. In 1845, DuBois sold out to Wm. C. Langley, who two months later sold out to Giles Andrews and John Bradbury. In 1853, Giles Andrews acquired the title to the whole, buying out his partner, Bradbury.

The mill was run continuously by him as a satinnet factory until his death in 1869, and his widow, Mrs. Lucy Andrews, continued the business until she sold the property to Jonathan Wailes in 1873. The title, however, lapsed to her in a couple of years, and in 1875 she conveyed the property to the present owners, the Walden Knife Company.

Upon the history of the buildings occupied by this company we have the following additional facts :

June, 1825, James Clark & Co. (firm, James Clark, John J. Galatian, Erwin Galatian, and James Galatian) sold the property to the Orange Company. Members of that company were James Clark, John J. Galatian, Erwin Galatian, James Hall, and Francis Watson. Levi L. Gowdy, about the year 1829, became a member by taking stock in the company. About the year 1832 the factory was burnt, and immediately rebuilt larger. About the years 1833 or 1834, George Weller became a member of the company by purchasing the stock of John J. Galatian, deceased. About the year 1840 the Orange Company sold the mill and all their interest to Henry DuBois. After the sale the manufacturing business was carried on by the firm of DuBois, Galatian & Co., then changed to DuBois & Gowdy. They remained in business a short time and dissolved. Mr. Gowdy, after the dissolution, connected himself with A. F. Scofield and S. M. Capron, under the firm-name of Scofield, Capron & Co., in the woolen business. Soon after, Mr. DuBois sold the property to Wm. C. Langley, of the city of New York. Mr. Langley, about the year 1845, sold the property to Giles Andrews and John Bradbury. They occupied the property a number of years, when they dissolved. Giles Andrews bought out Mr. Bradbury's interest. He (Andrews) carried on the business down to the time of his death (1869). He bequeathed all the property to his wife, Lucy Andrews. She continued the same business for some time, became blind, then sold it to Jonathan Wailes, May 1, 1873. He had the property in possession to February, 1875. Finding it difficult to meet the payments, he gave it up again to Mrs. Andrews. Some time after she took possession Mrs. Andrews sold it to the Walden Knife Company.

THE WALDEN FILE-WORKS

are a new enterprise, Taylor Brothers & Co. They have erected spacious and convenient buildings near the railroad, one 28 by 33, one 12 by 47, one 12 by 26, and one 15 by 22. They are opposite the steam grist-mill, and the power for the file-works is furnished by the engine in the mill. The buildings are fitted up with the best modern machinery. Work was commenced Jan. 1, 1880. About 30 hands are employed, and the enterprise bids fair to be remunerative to the proprietors and an important addition to the village of Walden.

THE STEAM FLOURING-MILL

at Walden was built about 1873 by Terbell & Bateman, and run by them a few years, when the proprietorship was changed to A. Bateman & Co., and in 1875 to Taylor & Bateman. Mr. Bateman died Feb. 29, 1880, but the business is still conducted under the same firm-name. The mill does custom-work extensively, and also flouring for shipment.

THE MONTGOMERY WOOLEN-MILL

is located some distance below Montgomery village, on the Wallkill. It was established many years ago, and has a varied history involving several changes of proprietors. It is now operated by the firm of Crabtree & Patchin. The line of work is worsted braid to a great extent. Formerly bunting was manufactured there. The buildings are large, the water-power is lasting, and the property has been considered a valuable one, and is so at the present time.

TITUS & STRATTON'S GRIST-MILL,

at Montgomery, is an old affair. The building is large and substantial. It is the successor of the early mills of Revolutionary times, mentioned elsewhere, and was known for a long time as the Luquer Mill.

WALKER'S PAPER-MILL, AT MONTGOMERY, opposite the above grist-mill, is an important enterprise. It is now operated with great activity, a large number of hands are employed, and the quality of the paper made compares favorably with any of the same line in market.

THE NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK COMPANY

are just establishing a branch in this town north of the village of Walden. The buildings now being erected are very extensive, and it is understood that a cost of nearly $200,000 is being incurred. The works are intended to receive the milk of 5000 cows. This is the third branch established by the company. John G. Borden is the president; James P. Niblo is the contractor. The material used in the erection is brick, of which it is estimated 900,000 will be used, and they are furnished from the brick-works of J. Gowdy, Walden. It is expected that some 80 hands will be employed, and thus 20 tenements will be erected for the employés.

CREAMERIES.

There are two in the town, one at Montgomery village and one at Coldenham. They are both under the management of one proprietor, Mr. Beakes, and are doing the usual line of work common in later years to that class of enterprises.

VARIOUS MANUFACTORIES.

The RIDER ENGINE COMPANY have large and convenient works at Walden, employing a number of men. (See chapter upon Goshen.)

The WALDEN CIGAR MANUFACTORY, George K. Colden proprietor, is doing good work; not very large in extent, but it is noted for making an excellent cigar, proving that smokers in Walden have no need to send abroad for the fragrant weed.

The WALDEN SOAP-WORKS, C. D. Wooley proprietor, are an enterprise of some importance, convenient for the citizens of the town and reasonably remunerative to the owner.

The OVERALL MANUFACTORY AT WALDEN of H.

B. Wooster is an undertaking which that gentleman adds to his other business of grocer. It affords employment to 25 or 30 girls, and it is understood that the enterprise is successful in paying a fair profit to the proprietor.

BROWN'S GRIST- AND SAW-MILLS are located in the southeast part of the town, the successors of those of much earlier date.

EMBLER'S STEAM GRIST-MILL is located at Montgomery village, doing both custom business and flouring.

XII.—MILITARY.

Montgomery having a population of considerable extent prior to the Revolution, the people no doubt took an active interest in the momentous contest that separated this country from England and formed a free and independent nation out of the thirteen dependent colonies.

That public opinion in this section was considerably divided is evident from the fact of Governor Colden's residence and connections here, and from the glimpse of controversy over political matters which appears in the traditions and the records of the churches.

For the services of some of the residents of the town during the Revolution reference is made to the General History.

WAR OF 1861-65.

The list given below of soldiers from this town is mainly taken from a full and carefully-written record in the town clerk's office, such as ought to be found in every town. The whole of Company H of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth is included in the list, though there were quite a number of persons not residents there, and were not credited to the town. It is not our business to correct the record, however.

Of the soldiers furnished by this town, it may be added that they constituted either partly or entirely the following companies: Co. C of the Fifty-sixth, Capt. Frederick Decker; Co. A of the Nineteenth, Capt. Isaac Smith; Co. H of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, Capt. David Crist; Co. A of the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth, Capt. Wm. H. Terwilliger.

The amount of money voted at the several town-meetings for the expenses of recruiting and for bounties were as follows:

The town furnished at the outbreak of the war 4 men; between that period and the calls of July and August, 1862, 109 men; under the calls of July and August, 123 men; from July, 1863, to July, 1864, 67 men. There were 29 re-enlistments in 1864, 42 principals furnished substitutes, and 20 names were added to list of volunteers; under call of Dec. 19, 1864, 6 substitutes were furnished and 9 men were enlisted by contract in New York. On that (the last) call the paymaster-general allowed an excess on former calls of 144 years, or 51 three-years men, and paid the town $30,600. The town claimed, in addition, a surplus of 12 men, but the claim was not allowed.

John Miller

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

CHARLES MILLER.

The family represented by the subject of this biography are of both Welsh and Irish descent. The grandfather of Charles Miller was Samuel, who emigrated at an early date from Ireland to the province of Canada, where he remained for several years engaged in mercantile pursuits. From this point he removed to the United States, and eventually settled in Montgomery, Orange Co., where he in 1764 acquired land, a portion of which is now in possession of Charles Miller. He was an officer of militia as early as 1778, his commission being signed by Governor George Clinton, of the province of New York.

Mr. Miller had three sons, George S., William S., and Samuel, and one daughter, Mary. His death occurred at an advanced age. His son, George S., was born March 11, 1776, and died Dec. 5, 1828, in his fifty-third year, in Montgomery, where his life was spent. He was in 1800 united in marriage to Miss Julia, daughter of Charles Young, of Hamptonburgh, and had children,—Samuel H., Charles, William, Theodore, Sarah (Mrs. Alexander Blake), Cornelia (Mrs. Gilbert G. Weeks), and Elizabeth (Mrs. Samuel Knapp). But three of this number now survive. The birth of Charles Miller occurred in Montgomery, Dec. 5, 1805. He followed the pursuits of his father, those of an agriculturist, and in 1828 inherited that portion of the paternal estate which is his present residence. He was in 1833 married to Miss Helen, daughter of John S. Young, of Montgomery, now Hamptonburgh, to whom were born children,—George S., Julia Y., Gilbert, and Charles A., all now deceased. Mr. Miller is a Republican in his political predilections, but never participates in the active labor of the party. He has devoted his life to the more quiet occupation of a country gentleman, and to the promotion of worthy aims in his native township. He is largely interested in benevolent enterprises, and all deserving appeals find in him a willing helper. Mr. Miller worships with the Presbyterian denomination, and has been for years a member and elder of the Goodwill Presbyterian Church of Montgomery, of which Mrs. Miller is also a zealous member. Having retired from active employments, he devotes much time to the interests of the church and the good of humanity.

JOSEPH H. DECKER.

Mr. Decker may be regarded as one of the most enterprising and successful representatives of the agricultural interests of Montgomery. His family are of Dutch extraction, and at an early date sought the rich lands of Orange and Ulster Counties. Johannes Decker, the grandfather of Joseph H., was first a resident of Kingston, Ulster Co., from whence he removed to Blooming-Grove. His birth occurred April 16, 1741, and that of his wife, Annatie Hasbrouck, Dec. 29, 1747, her residence at the time of her marriage being Marbletown, Ulster Co. Their children were

Jacob, Cornelius, John, Rachel, Ann, Jonah, Elsie, and Matthew. Their son Cornelius was born in 1770, and resided in the township of Montgomery until his death in 1835. He was united in marriage to Miss Hannah Duryea, of Blooming-Grove, and had children,—George, Joseph H., John, Ann, Hannah Maria, Rachel, Caroline, Dolly, and Cornelius.

Joseph H. was born May 12, 1800. The years of his boyhood were principally devoted to labor. The educational advantages at that early day were exceedingly limited, and he was able to gain simply the rudiments of knowledge at the neighboring district school. At this time were acquired those habits of industry and frugality which laid the foundation for later success, and enabled him to become the possessor of a competency for his advancing years. He was on Dec. 30, 1819, married to Miss Maria, daughter of Adam Dickerson, of Montgomery, whose birth occurred Oct. 25, 1804. Their children have been Hannah Jane, born 1821; Harriet A., whose birth occurred in 1823; Francis C., born in 1830; Joseph H., born in 1839; Anna Mary, born in 1842; and Cornelius, born in 1835. The only survivor of this number is Francis C., who resides with his parents. Their daughter Hannah Jane was married May 7, 1851, to Hon. Hugh Barkley Bull, who was born in Crawford township, Oct. 1, 1816, and was a descendant of one of the earliest families of the county. He studied law with Henry B. Wisner and Hon. Samuel J. Wilkin, both of Orange County, and on being admitted settled in Montgomery, where he practiced his profession with success. He served as district attorney of Orange County in 1847, was elected to the State Legislature in 1851, and was also secretary and counselor of the Montgomery and Erie Railroad. His life was distinguished by great usefulness, and his death sincerely mourned. Mr. and Mrs. Bull left one child, Maria P., who died Feb. 25, 1880.

Joseph H. Decker has followed farming pursuits during his lifetime. In 1875 he purchased the farm which is his present residence, having formerly lived in the village of Montgomery, or on land adjacent to it. In politics he was early an Andrew Jackson Democrat. Circumstances, however, induced him to change his views, and he became a Republican. He is an attendant upon the services of the Reformed Dutch Church of Montgomery, of which Mrs. Decker is a member. Mr. Decker may well be regarded as a self-made man.

FRANCIS C. DECKER.

The Decker family have elsewhere been mentioned as of Dutch extraction, and among the earliest emigrants to the Empire State. Francis C. is the only surviving child of Joseph H. Decker, of Montgomery, and was born Oct. 24, 1830, in the above township. His early years were passed under the parental roof.

The public school of the district afforded but meagre opportunities for education, and Francis C. being desirous of more thorough advantages repaired to the academy at Montgomery, where some time was spent in study. Having fitted himself by these superior qualifications for the career of an instructor, he engaged for a while in teaching near his home. At a later period he removed to the village of Montgomery, and though ostensibly engaged in no active occupation, gave his attention to the management and maintenance of the family property. He removed in 1875 to the farm which is the present residence of his parents, and known familiarly as the "Saratoga Farm." Mr. Decker has ever been a staunch Republican in his political views, though the preferments of office have failed to lure him from the quiet pleasures of his own home. He has declined all public offices, though always manifesting a deep interest in the various political campaigns, especially those of local importance. Mr. Decker's religious creed is that espoused by the Reformed Dutch Church, of which he is a consistent member.

GEORGE SENIOR.

Dorsetshire, England, was the stronghold of the Senior family, from which locality William Senior, with his wife and twelve children, came to the United States in 1830. Mr. Senior, whose birth occurred in 1785, was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Harvey, and to this union were born children,—William, John, Elizabeth, Sarah, George, Thomas, Christopher, Ann, Edward, Joseph, Louisa, and Henry. Mr. and Mrs. Senior removed to Montgomery, where the death of the former occurred in 1863, while his wife survived until 1880, and died in her ninety-third year. The birth of their son George, the subject of this biographical sketch, took place during the year 1814, in the town of Stower, Dorsetshire, England, from whence he embarked with his parents for American shores.

He settled first in Dutchess County, where farming occupations engaged his attention during his early years. His advent to Montgomery was made in 1844, where he at once embarked in mercantile enterprises. From that period until his retirement from active business Mr. Senior was assiduously devoted to the interests of an increasing trade.

He was in 1842 married to Miss Mary A., daughter of Robert Lawson, of Dutchess County, and has children,—William, Augustus, Mary E., Sarah F., George Edward, John L., and James Renwick, of whom Sarah F. is deceased, Mary E. is Mrs. Cornelius D. Hawkins, of Montgomery, J. Renwick is a resident of New York, John L. is in Kansas, Augustus in Newburgh, and William and George E. merchants in Montgomery. Mr. Senior is a Republican in politics, though an energetic business life has left little time for participation in public affairs. He has been a director of the Montgomery and Erie Railroad since George Sumner.

James Todd

JOHN TODD, the father of James, was of Scotch nationality, and emigrated to Liverpool, England, where he embarked in mercantile enterprises. He became identified with the business interests of that city, where he remained during his lifetime, having married Miss Elizabeth Waddell, also of Scotch descent. Their children were Alexander, John, James, Jane, Mary, and Elizabeth.

Their son James bid adieu to his native land at the early age of twelve years, and embarked for the shores of America. He landed alone and comparatively friendless at Quebec, from which point he wended his way to Paterson, N. J., hoping there to discover relatives. Finding himself on his arrival thrown upon his own resources, he at once engaged in occupations which afforded him a livelihood. Ulster County, N. Y., having offered a broader field for his energies, thither he repaired in 1837, and engaged in tanning and currying, which continued to be his occupation until the purchase of his present home in 1848. He then removed to Montgomery, Orange Co., and became absorbed in agricultural pursuits, meanwhile retaining an interest in his former business. The land embraced in his farm being admirably adapted to grazing, he has made dairying a specialty. Mr. Todd was married, May 26, 1838, to Miss Mary Amanda, daughter of Martin R. Williams, of New Hurley, Ulster Co., whose birth occurred March 23, 1821. Their children are Ann E. (Mrs. Dr. T. P. Knapp), born June 30, 1839; Mary Jane (Mrs. W. F. Gilchrist), whose birth occurred Oct. 9, 1840; Margaret W. (Mrs. W. H. Coleman), born Oct. 9, 1842; Josephine (Mrs. T. D. Barker), born Oct. 6, 1844; Harriet B. (Mrs. W. H. Peck), born Sept. 1, 1846; James J., born Sept. 2, 1848; and Carrie Van Nest, whose birth occurred Feb. 29, 1864; all of these are still living. The business capacity manifested by Mr. Todd has made his assistance invaluable in various enterprises connected with the township and county. He has been a director of the Walden Savings-Bank, president of the Wallkill Valley Cemetery Association, and a director of the Newburgh and Ellenville Plank-Road Company. He has also been auditor of the board of township officers. Mr. Todd is in politics a Republican, and was an ardent supporter of measures for the successful prosecution of the late war. He was educated in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, though his affiliations have more recently been with the Reformed (Dutch) denomination.

John Kidd

The genealogical tree of the Kidd family indicates their Scotch-Irish descent. A branch of the family sailed for American shores from the north of Ireland before the war of the Revolution. Among them was Alexander, the great-grandfather of John, who became the proprietor of a large tract of land in Orange County during the year 1736, a portion of which is now embraced in the estate of the present representative of the family in Montgomery.

Alexander Kidd was married to Miss Jane Calderwood, and had sons,—Robert, Alexander, and James, and daughters,—Anna and Hannah. Robert, the eldest son, was united in marriage to Mary McGowan, and became the father of the following children: Andrew, John, Daniel, Robert, Archibald, William, Margaret, Jane, and Mary. Andrew, the father of John, was born June 27, 1772, on the home farm, and spent his life in agricultural employments. He was, in 1802, married to Miss Margaret Kidd, and had six children,—John, Ann Maria (Mrs. J. Gillespie), Alexander, Sidney, Robert, and Mehetabel Jane. The death of Andrew Kidd occurred Feb. 17, 1826. His son John was born Oct. 26, 1803, at the parental home, and the employments incident to country life absorbed his time after a few years had been spent at the neighboring school. He was, on the 16th of November, 1826, married to Miss Cornelia, daughter of Charles Haines, of Montgomery.

Mr. and Mrs. Kidd have had six children,—Andrew, Mirza, John E., David L., Margaret J., and Victor, now deceased. The death of Mrs. Kidd occurred in June, 1876, and was the occasion of profound grief in the family circle.

Mr. Kidd has during the whole of his active life followed the occupation of a farmer, and has now a deserved reputation for industry and enterprise. He is a director of the Walden National Bank, is the present railroad commissioner, and has been for eighteen years commissioner of highways.

He is a Republican in politics, and actively interested in all public measures for the good of the country. He was a strong and earnest supporter of the late war to maintain the Union, two of his sons having served in the army. Mr. Kidd is a consistent member of the Reformed Dutch Church, as was also Mrs. Kidd.

James W Beattie

C. F. Moulton

ts organization. In his religious belief he is a Presbyterian, and a member of the church in Montgomery, of which he is a trustee. Mrs. Senior and all the children are also consistent members of the church.

JAMES R. W. BEATTIE.

The great-grandfather of the subject of this biography was Robert Beattie, a native of Ireland, who emigrated to America and settled in Ulster Co., N. Y. Among his children was Robert, the grandfather of James R. W., who in 1794 purchased the homestead now occupied by his grandson. He was united in marriage to Miss Crowell, a lady of Irish parentage, and had children,—John, Thomas, William, Robert, James, Smith, Hannah, and Mary. Of these children, James, the father of Mr. Beattie, was born Oct. 14, 1786, and at an early age pursued the avocations of a farmer's son. He acquired at a later period the trade of a tanner and currier, which he followed with success during his lifetime. He was married Feb. 6, 1810, to Miss Charlotte, daughter of David Belknap, who located in the township of Newburgh in 1769, having purchased land, of which the deed is still in possession of the family. Their children were Elizabeth Frances, born in 1811; Charlotte Sophelia, born in 1813; Catharine Isabella, born in 1815; Hannah Jane, born in 1817; Justus S. McLeod, born in 1819; Maria O. B., born in 1823; James R. W., born in 1825; Sarah M., born in 1829; and Matilda, born in 1831. James Beattie died March 29, 1871, at his late residence in Montgomery. Mrs. Beattie survived until December 26, 1874, and died in her eighty-sixth year.

James R. W. was born June 12, 1825, on the homestead, where his life, with the exception of a brief period, has been passed. His early years differed but little from those of other youths of similar surroundings, having been spent at the public school of the neighborhood and in tilling the land owned by his father. In 1874 this land became his own by inheritance. He was united in marriage March 22, 1854, to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of William and Elizabeth Martin Fleming. The Fleming family were originally residents of County Antrim, Ireland, and having emigrated to America in 1832, settled in the township of Newburgh. Mr. and Mrs. Beattie have had six children,—William James, born Nov. 14, 1854; Charlotte Elizabeth, born April 6, 1856; Samuel Oliver, born Sept. 20, 1857; Maria Esther, born May 9, 1861; Frederick Martin, born Nov. 21, 1864, now deceased; and Maggie J., born Sept. 13, 1867. Mr. Beattie is a Republican in politics, though the engrossing duties of his farm leave little time for participation in matters of a public nature. He has made dairying a specialty, though the land is also admirably adapted to the raising of grain. His religious creed is that of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, better known as that of the "Covenanters," all the family, with one exception, being members of the church of that denomination located at Coldenham.

CHRISTOPHER J. MOULD.

Germany was the fatherland of the original representatives of the Mould family, members of whom emigrated to America at an early date, and at a subsequent period became residents of Montgomery, Orange Co. The tract of land upon which they settled is now occupied by the sixth generation. Christopher, the grandfather of the subject of this biography, was born and resided upon the paternal estate. He was married, and became the father of John C., Philip, Catharine, Anna, Mary, and ———. His son, John C., was born Feb. 3, 1783, on the homestead, where after a limited education he engaged in labor upon this and the adjoining farm, where the years of his life were spent. He was, June 17, 1815, united in marriage to Miss Mary Shafer, of Montgomery, who became the mother of the following children: Christopher J., Catharine, Daniel, Moses, Eve, Mary, Martha, Herman, Jessie, William, John C., and Anna. The death of John C. occurred at his home in Montgomery in March, 1870. The birth of his son, Christopher J., took place on the homestead May 16, 1816. He remained with his parents during his boyhood, attended the neighboring school at intervals of rest from labor upon the farm, and in various ways rendered his presence invaluable to the family. At the age of thirty he became ambitious to secure a home for himself, and removed to the estate which is now the family residence. He was united in marriage Dec. 14, 1845, to Miss Martha, daughter of Milton Bull, of Crawford. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Mould,—Mary Esther, whose birth occurred Sept. 10, 1846, who became Mrs. A. M. Fulton, of Monticello, N. Y., and whose death occurred Sept. 3, 1874; Lemma, born July 25, 1860; and Martha, born March 14, 1870. Mr. Mould, though unassuming in manner, and having but little ambition for the honors which accompany public life, was nevertheless a man of much influence in the community. His efforts were ever directed in the cause of humanity, and all beneficent measures found in him an earnest co-operator. He was a sturdy Republican in politics, and although popular with his party, accepted no official preferment from its representatives. The cause of temperance found in him a fearless advocate, both in his official relations as excise commissioner and in private life. In religion he espoused the creed of the Reformed Dutch Church, of which he had in former years been an exemplary elder.

The death of Christopher J. Mould occurred May 24, 1881, in his sixty-fifth year. His memory is cherished not less by the community than by an attached family circle.

MICHEL GEDNEY SNYDER.

The earliest representatives of the Snyder family emigrated from Germany, though few facts regarding their first settlement in America are preserved. William, the grandfather of Michel G., resided one mile east of St. Andrew's, in the township of Montgomery, where he followed farming employments during his life. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Redmond, and had children,—Catharine, John, William, Elizabeth, Abram, Jane, Michel, Phebe. His death occurred Sept. 12, 1829, in his sixty-seventh year.

Michel Snyder, the father of the subject of this biographical sketch, was born July 28, 1804, in Montgomery, the scene of his lifetime labors and later of his death. He was during the year 1824 united in marriage to Miss Priscilla Mullenix, of Newburgh, to whom were born children,—William, Henry, Michel Gedney, Abram, and John James, of whom but two, Abram and Michel Gedney, survive.

The death of Mr. Snyder occurred Jan. 11, 1873, in his sixty-eighth year.

His son, Michel G., was born on the home farm in Montgomery, Aug. 7, 1833, where he remained during his early manhood. The school of the district offered opportunities for education while a lad, and later years were busily occupied in labor upon the farm. Mr. Snyder was on the eighth day of October, 1861, married to Mrs. Catharine Louisa, daughter of John and Frederika Moadinger, of New York City, and widow of the late Alexander Gedney, to whom was born by the first marriage one daughter, Alice Gedney, now Mrs. Henry Seeley. Mr. Snyder is a Democrat in his political sentiments, but gives little time to the excitements of public life. He is better known as a thrifty and very successful farmer, whose cultivated lands and attractive surroundings bear witness to his enterprise. Both Mr. and Mrs. Snyder are supporters of the Reformed Dutch Church of Walden, at which they are regular worshippers.

CRAWFORD.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

THIS is the northernmost town of those which border upon the county of Sullivan. It is bounded north by that county and the county of Ulster, east by Ulster County and the town of Montgomery, south by Wallkill, west by Wallkill and the counties of Sullivan and Ulster.

The area of the town, as stated in the supervisors' equalization table of 1879–80, is 24,693½ acres. The assessed valuation of the town was $950,180, and the total tax paid upon that basis was $12,591.21.

Crawford was a part of the original John Evans Patent. After this was set aside, the territory in this section was disposed of in various smaller grants to Philip Schuyler and others.

Among other parcels of land frequently mentioned in discussing titles in Crawford are the "8000 acre tract" on which Pine Bush is situated, and the "10,000 acre tract" next south of the "8000." The patents represented in Crawford are the following:

1. Thomas Ellison and Lawrence Roome, Nov. 12, 1750.
2. Frederick Morris and Samuel Heath, Jan. 24, 1736.
3. Jacobus Bruyn and Henry Wileman, April 25, 1722.
4. Philip Schuyler and others, 8000 acres, July 7, 1720.
5. Part of the patent to Jeremiah Schuyler and others, Jan. 22, 1719.
6. Part of Thomas Noxon's Patent, Feb. 21, 1737.

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

The surface of this town may be described as a hilly upland, broken by several high ridges that extend northeast and southwest. Collaburgh and Comfort

Hills, along the border, rise from 100 to 200 feet above the valleys. The principal stream is the Shawangunk, which flows along the northwest border, forming the boundary line of Sullivan County; and lower down, of Ulster County. It is a rapid stream and has a large number of valuable water privileges, many of which have been utilized. The principal branch of the Shawangunk in this town is the Pakadasink, which flows northeast and also supplies power for various mills. In the eastern part of the town, and flowing through a valley somewhat parallel to that of the Shawangunk, is the Dwaars Kill. It has its sources in this town and farther south in Wallkill. There are several swamps of considerable extent,—one northwest from the Sinsabaugh neighborhood and one southeast from Searsburgh. The latter is drained by a small stream flowing north to Dwaars Kill. (See General History.)

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The early settlement of this town is very largely blended with that of the old precinct of Wallkill and the subsequent town of Montgomery, from which Crawford was taken; and reference is made to the chapters upon those towns for much interesting material relating in part to the territory now constituting Crawford. Especial attention is called to the Weller settlement, which in part was upon the territory of what is now Crawford. In the vicinity of Searsville there was an early settlement made by Johannes Snyder, where he owned a large tract of land, situate on both sides of the Dwaars Kill. This stream at the time furnished a greater water-power than at present, in the cleared-up condition of the county. At this place he erected a log mill, which was known on the town records as Snyder's Mill in 1768. This is in the present town of Crawford. Mr. Snyder, being a man of means, built a log church, also known as Snyder's Church, at the above period. The preaching was in Dutch, and the church worn out before the Revolution. The family is Dutch, and settled here as early as 1740.

N. G. Chrysler

The western boundary of the town, at the time we speak of, was the Shawangunk Kill. On this Mr. Robert Milliken erected a saw-mill, called Milliken's Mill on the town records in 1768. This appears to be the earliest mention of a saw-mill on this stream. The following mills formerly were on this kill, within the breadth, though not all within the limits of the town. Beginning at the south, and counting down the stream, we have first the old flour-mill of Pat. Boice; next was Milliken's saw-mill; next, Sears' grist-mill; next, Abraham Bruyn's flour-mill; and last, Cornelius Slott's saw- and grist-mill. This last was afterwards owned by his son, Arthur Slott, who gathered around him, on his own property, a village of a dozen tenements.

The ancestors of Mr. Slott were among the most ancient in the State. The family came from Holland to the city of New York in 1670. This is proved by family records. On arriving at New York they located at Hackensack, in New Jersey. After a number of years they removed to Rockland County, N. Y., and from there to Montgomery, on the Tinn Brock, at what has been called Slott town. By this time the old generation had died early, and Cornelius Slott, above named, was the active member of this branch of the family. Though understanding several of the mechanic arts, he confined himself to agriculture. When the militia were ordered out to defend Fort Montgomery, in 1777, Mr. Slott went with his company as an orderly sergeant. The fort was taken, and Mr. Slott made prisoner. He was taken to New York and put in the old Sugar-House, where he was confined ten months. When set at liberty he returned to his farm with a constitution injured by the service and hard and cruel treatment while in prison. He sold his farm in 1785, and moved to the city of New York. In 1790 he moved back to Orange, and made a purchase of the mill site at Pine Bush, and in the same year put up a saw-mill on the Shawangunk Kill, just below the mouth of the little Pakadasink. In 1791 he erected the grist-mill near the site of Arthur Slott's mill of modern times. When he first settled at this place there was no public road leading to his mill, and he called the commissioners of the town, who laid out a road from Hopewell north to his mill, then across the stream to intersect the old Shawangunk road that led to Albany. The sons of Cornelius were Arthur, Johannes, and Cornelius.

There was a settlement near Graham's Church that deserves notice. The residents were Mr. Abraham Dickerson, John Robinson, and Philip Decker. The last two were from Holland; the first, of Irish descent. Mr. Dickerson had a saw-mill on a small stream near his house, which was worn out and gone about the beginning of this century.

The valley of the Wallkill throughout the town was among the earliest portions settled. This was effected by Germans, Hollanders, and a few Huguenots, some of whom came directly to the town on arriving in the country, and others from the settlements previously made in Ulster County.

From William Jordan,—residing at the time of his death at Bloomingburgh,—the following items were obtained:

His father's name was Robert Jordan, and he came from Ireland to this country in 1771. He worked for a few years with various persons in the town of Wallkill. He married Mary Bull, daughter of the second William Bull. At that time she was the widow Wilkin, her first husband, George Wilkin, having been taken prisoner by the British in the Revolution, and died in the infamous "Sugar-House Prison." About 1784 or 1785, Robert Jordan settled at Bullville, in the town of Crawford. His children were Moses, who lived and died in the north part of Wallkill; John, who settled in the same neighborhood; and William, who was born April 4, 1793.

The wife of the latter was Cornelia Bull, daughter of Thomas Bull. He settled at Bullville and spent a large portion of his life there, serving as justice of the peace for thirty-two years. For the last seventeen years he resided at Bloomingburgh, Sullivan Co. The pioneer, Robert Jordan, had a brother, John Jordan, who came over with him. There was also another brother, Jonathan Jordan, who had been at Bullville for four years preceding, so that he must have settled there in 1767. Among the neighbors of Robert Jordan at the time of his settlement at Bullville or a little later were Joseph Elder, James Barclay, Samuel Barclay, John Martin, and Daniel Bull. Jonathan Harris, before the Revolution, owned the place upon which Robert Jordan afterwards settled. Thomas Turner owned 300 acres of land at Bullville. Mr. Jordan recalls the name of several early teachers who taught in Crawford in his boyhood, viz.: John Hardcastle, William Brown, Mr. Reed, Mr. Crosby. A pioneer at Searsville was William Snider, who owned a large tract of land, and lived there before the Revolution. There is a tradition that he buried a sum of money to save it during the Revolutionary troubles, and that a faithful negro alone knew the place of deposit. For his faithfulness in not betraying it to the enemy the negro received his freedom after the war was over. An early settler before the Revolution is said to have been one Wiltsey, and there is an uncertain tradition that he was shot as a Tory during the war. Joseph Elder was a blacksmith. Nathan Johnson was an early shoemaker and went around from house to house to make up shoes, a business known as "whipping the cat." Johnson was brought up by Mr. Mills, who had lived in Little Britain and made shoes for the army before coming to Wallkill. At Bullville there was an old orchard set out before the Revolution, all gone some years ago. William Jordan stood several drafts in the war of 1812, but was not drawn at any one of them. He was afterwards a colonel of the Shawangunk regiment of militia. He lived under every President of the United States, and had been a voter for sixty-six years. He voted for DeWitt Clinton for Governor. He first voted directly for Presidential electors in 1828. He voted the regular Democratic ticket in unbroken succession from that time to his death; voted for the successful candidates, Andrew Jackson, 1828 and 1832; Martin Van Buren, 1836; James K. Polk, 1844; Franklin Pierce, 1852; James Buchanan, 1856; and for the unsuccessful candidates, Martin Van Buren, 1840; Lewis Cass, 1848; Stephen A. Douglas, 1860; Gen. McClellan, 1864; Horatio Seymour, 1868; Horace Greeley, 1872; Samuel J. Tilden, 1876; and Gen. Hancock, 1880.

The following notes upon a few prominent citizens are partly upon the authority of Mr. Samuel W. Eager, the historian, confirmed and enlarged by present inquiry:

BENJAMIN SEARS.—This gentleman was rather a remarkable man. Nature had done a good deal for him; and if his natural talents had been cultivated and enlarged by a suitable education, few men in the county would have excelled him in business operations. The reach of his mind was extensive, and he could see the end from the beginning. But his education was very limited, and his memory his account-book. His power of recollection was astonishing; somewhat owing, perhaps, to great cultivation and exercise. Whatever he once knew he never forgot, so deeply was it engraven on his memory.

Mr. Sears, in the early period of his life, had been a constable of the town of Montgomery, then including Crawford. Of the hundreds of executions in his hands during that time, thirty years afterwards he could tell by the force of memory every person he had had one against, and the amount marked by the justice on the back of it in pounds, shillings, and pence. Mr. Sears kept store for many years, and in the fall was in the habit of taking cattle from his customers in payment of their accounts. One hundred head might be delivered to him in this way in the course of a few days, and if they were passed through a pair of bars singly, so as to be distinctly seen, he could tell the precise age, the person from whom purchased, and the one or more lost, if any, with the color, age, and a minute description of each. We need not be astonished at this, for every faculty, if daily cultivated and depended on as this was, is capable of exhibiting the same wonderful results. Let all appreciate the truth of this remark and be benefited thereby.

Of this family there were five brothers, Benjamin, Samuel, John, James, and Elnathan, all of whom were among the early settlers of Montgomery, and performed military duty during the Revolution. Their descendants are numerous, and found in every calling and pursuit of life.

JOSEPH ELDER.—This individual was of Irish origin, but at what time the family came into the country or town we are not informed. During the Revolution he was a young man, and some militia troops to which he belonged were ordered to the north. At a fixed time they were to be at Newburgh or New Windsor, and transported up the river on board a sloop provided for the purpose. Mr. Elder, for some cause, did not arrive at the place of rendezvous till too late to take his passage; the sloop had left with a fair wind and out of sight above the Danskammer. Go he must or be called a Tory, and there was no recourse left him but to try the distance on foot. Elder, young, patriotic, and of an iron frame of body, buckled on his knapsack, shouldered his musket, and started. Though the sloop made a good passage for those times and had the best of the start, Elder beat her to Albany by several hours.

The farm on which he lived was quite stony, though when cleared the land was productive, and Elder, like the rest of his neighbors, converted his useless stones into wall to fence his farm. In building these he scarcely ever used a team to gather and convey the stones to their destination. With a large leather apron girt about his loins, holding the end gathered up in one hand, and tumbling the stones into it with the other, when full he would raise himself erect, and, without apparent effort, carry them off to the wall and put them in place. This course he would pursue from time to time till the walls were finished. He was industrious and eminently robust and powerful. Looking on his muscular and giant frame he reminded one of ancient Milo, who could lift a grown bullock over an ordinarily high fence. His children, of whom several were sons, partook of the magnitude and physical character of the father, with great family similitude in other respects.

Mr. Elder had received but a very limited education, yet possessing strong natural good sense, he was fitted to discharge the duties of the various town offices to public satisfaction. He was many years a magistrate of the town, and if he erred at any time, the fault was of the head and not of the heart, for he was proverbially an upright and honest man.

DANIEL BULL.—We cannot in this place omit an honorable mention of Mr. Bull. He was the son of Thomas Bull, who was the son of William Bull, the early settler at Hamptonburgh. His father lived at the old stone mansion in the present town of Hampton-burgh, on the road from Montgomery to Goshen, and known as the Cad Bull stone house. He removed to this town before he was of age, upon a large tract of new rough land, then owned by his father, and located himself. His father, Thomas, was infirm towards the latter part of his life, and when about to make his will and settle his worldly affairs had thoughts of selling his land in Crawford, which was then worth about $2.50 per acre, and for which he had an offer, and asked his son Daniel, then a lad of about fifteen years of age, whether he had better settle it or let him take care of it. Daniel replied that if he would give it to him he "would try to take care of it." His father concluded to try him, and made his will accordingly. This gave the young man confidence and increased his pride; and the community at this day can judge of the manner in which he fulfilled this early filial promise. In 1780, when nineteen years of age, he married Miss Catharine Miller, who was younger still, and forthwith commenced clearing up his new estate.

The winter of 1780 was celebrated all over this country for its length and the depth of its snow. It was so deep and hardened by the severity of the weather that for some time the people of the county, in transacting their necessary or pleasure business, drove their horses and sleighs in any and all directions across the fields irrespective of the fences. Mr. Bull and Miss Miller went to Goshen to be married by Mr. Carr, of the Presbyterian Church, and that day a fall of snow commenced, which, with previous ones, deepened the road so much there was no traveling the next day. There the new-married pair spent two weeks of the honeymoon.

Thirteen children were the fruits of this early marriage, the most of whom grew up and were married. Their names, and to whom married, are as follows: Thomas, married Sarah Mills; Hannah, married Alex. Thompson; Abner, married Maria Brinson; David C., married Maria Barkley; Keturah, married William Bull; Catharine, married James H. Crawford; Mary, married Rev. John Johnston; Henry, married Jane Stitt; Milton, married Esther Crawford; Sarah, married Denton Mills; Miller, not married; Daniel, married Sarah Thompson; John, died young.

Mr. Bull was an industrious farmer from his early days. As an evidence of his practical agriculture, we refer the reader to the list of prizes awarded him by the society, which we think are more numerous than those awarded to any other family in the county. Few individuals have cleared up and subdued more wild land, and placed it in a good agricultural condition for their children. The obligations of parent, citizen, and friend, imposed on him through the course of a long life, were duly and faithfully discharged; while those of a superior and more holy character equally shared his careful attention and pious regard. He was an early friend to the construction of the Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike-road, and, with an interval of one year, continued a director from the organization of the company, upwards of forty years. This company had semi-annual meetings, and, with one or two exceptions at furthest, he was always present. This fact proves two things,—good health and a virtuous discharge of public duties.

The Crawfords of this section are descendants of John Crawford, who purchased land in New Windsor Oct. 18, 1737. They were very early residents of this town, and their descendants are numerous and now widely scattered. The names of James, John, William, and Samuel appear upon the old military roll of 1738 for "Wall-a-kill," and the family name repeatedly occurs in all subsequent records of this territory down to the present time. We are not in possession of data that will enable us to connect the families of later years to those of a century and a half ago. A few notes upon one branch throw some light upon the modern names in this town. Robert I. Crawford was a prominent man in the early part of this century. His homestead was near the old Hopewell Church. Of his children, Robert and Theron settled in Crawford, Addison in Crawford, near Searsville, Leander and George at Middletown, Albert, another son, died in early life; daughters were Mrs. Stansbury Gillespie, Mrs. Hill Harris, Millicent, who died unmarried, Esther and Emeline, also unmarried. Robert I. Crawford had a brother Israel, and he had two sons, Israel and Leartus. Mrs. Crawford Gillespie was a sister of Robert I. Crawford, and Mrs. Daniel Shafer also. Nancy, another sister, died unmarried. The records of Montgomery and those of the town of Crawford furnish many other names of this family, in whose honor this fertile town was named.

THOMPSON BROTHERS.—The settlement of the Thompson brothers was made at an early day, probably during the Revolutionary war, about 1776. They were from Ireland, county Longford. After coming to this country they lost a part of what funds they had by the depreciation of Continental currency. The three—Alexander, Andrew, and Robert A.—came to Crawford, with good judgment selected a fine location, and purchased 500 acres on what is now known as Thompson's Ridge. They divided the tract into three equal farms, each brother having one of them. Alexander's homestead was the north farm, now owned by the present Alexander Thompson, and on a part of which Hopewell Church stands. Andrew's was the next south, being the farm now occupied by Nathan T. Thompson, a great-grandson of Andrew. The homestead of Robert A. was the south farm of the three, now occupied by Wm. H. and Robert I. Thompson, great-grandsons of the original owner. These three farms have been owned by the Thompsons from the time of the first settlement to the present. For the first time in about one hundred years of occupancy the middle farm of the three is now offered for sale. The children of the pioneer Alexander were Alexander, Jr., one daughter who died young, and one who became the wife of Col. Moses Crawford, near Collaburgh. The children of Alexander, Jr. (whose wife was a daughter of Daniel Bull), were Albert, of Ontario County, a physician; Augustus, of Crawford; Daniel, the supervisor of the town for a long series of years, and superintendent of the Crawford Railroad; John Alexander, a lawyer of Monticello; Mrs. Hon. Alex. C. Niven, Monticello; Mrs. W. W. Jackson, Hamptonburgh; Mrs. Hiram Phillips, Hampton; Mrs. S. Sherman, Davenport, Iowa; and Mrs. Samuel C. Brush and Mrs. Wm. H. Smith, of New York City.

The sons of the pioneer Andrew were James, William, Robert R., Alexander, and George, all of whom settled in Crawford. There were two daughters, Mrs. Nathan Young and Mrs. Isaac Schultze. The sons of the pioneer Robert A. were Robert A., Jr., and Andrew, the latter of whom became a minister and died at Mount Hope. There were two daughters, Mrs. Hugh Barclay and Isabella, the latter of whom died in early life. The family, as a rule, were long lived. Robert died at the age of ninety, Alexander at the age of seventy-five, and Alexander, Jr., at the age of eighty-five.

RAINEY FAMILY.—David Rainey was probably in Crawford before the Revolution. He settled on the homestead now owned by A. R. Taylor, and known as the "Brock House Farm," near Pine Bush. His children were David, Jr., James, William, and Mrs. Crane. Two others, Susan and Jane, died young.

A sister of David Rainey, Sr., married James McBurney, a Revolutionary soldier. Their children were Mrs. John Taylor, Mrs. John Wool, William McBurney, David McBurney, Elizabeth, Mary, and James.

The present Theron Hill place was settled by his ancestor at an early day.

OTHER PIONEERS.—Mr. Whitten, an early pioneer, located where Jacob Whitten now lives.

Mr. A. R. Taylor, now for more than thirty years intimately connected with Pine Bush and the north part of Crawford, was from Ulsterville. His ancestor was a British soldier, who espoused the American cause about the time of Montgomery's unsuccessful expedition to Canada. He served in the American forces, and finally settled in Shawangunk.

The town officers chosen in 1823, as given under the head of organization, below, are all dead except Ira Clark, an illustration of how complete is the work of death in a single half-century upon those who at its beginning have already attained manhood.

William W. Crawford, the first supervisor, lived east of Thompson's Ridge, on the farm now owned by John Erskine Crawford. Oliver Mills lived at Searsville, and had a small grist-mill. Jacobus Smith resided on the place now owned by his son Henry. Moses Crawford lived at Collaburgh, where Alexander Crawford now resides.

Daniel Bull is the well-known citizen, already mentioned, who purchased 1000 acres at Bullville. His homestead was the place now owned by the heirs of the late David C. Bull. Henry Weller lived on Comfort Hill. Robert D. Hunter resided near Pine Bush, where his grandson, Townley Crawford, now lives. Samuel Stevenson lived near the extreme southeast part of this town. Archibald Crawford lived in Pine Bush. He had kept a hotel at Collaburgh, and was also a surveyor.

John C. Nicholson, the first collector, was at Searsville, though he lived for a time in another part of the town.

Lewis Scott lived at Old Hopewell. Alexander Thompson's place was where the present Alexander Thompson now lives. Hieronomus Weller was a blacksmith at Pine Bush. Isaac Van Doren, one of the inspectors of common schools, was the minister of that name mentioned in the church histories. George Hunter and Charles Winfield, the other two school inspectors, were the physicians mentioned elsewhere. The teachers were thus placed under the care of the ministers and the doctors. Joseph Elder, town officer of 1823, was the well-known prominent citizen of Bullville. James Bruyn resided where Leander Gillespie now lives. John W. Henry was in the western part of the town. Peter Weller lived a mile above Bullville, on the place now owned by Edwin Green. Nathaniel Hunter lived near Pine Bush, on the place now owned by George D. Shafer. Benjamin Dickerson resided in the west part of the town. Edward Schoonmaker kept a hotel at Old Hopewell. Arthur Slott resided at Pine Bush and owned the grist-mill. David Sease, town clerk for many years, resided at Searsville, and was sheriff of the county for some years.

It is unnecessary to continue this memorandum upon the names of the thirty-nine overseers of highways, for the number of the districts, as given below, will easily indicate their location.

Coming down to a later period, the following memorandum of road districts for 1813, taken from the town-books of Montgomery, shows very nearly the names and location of the families of Crawford seventy years ago. The numbers are of course those of 1813, not of the present time.

The remainder of the districts are given in the chapter on Montgomery. The names upon the territory of the two towns are so similar that it is difficult to assign the districts to each town with exactness. Several of them were very likely joint districts as the town line now exists.

PHYSICIANS.

Dr. Crosby practiced in Crawford; lived near Hope-well Church, between the present house of worship and the old one; practiced about 1800, before and after, dying probably about 1825. Dr. Charles Winfield lived near Pine Bush. Dr. Hunter, of Searsville, was located there many years; spent his life there, dying about 1874. Dr. Griffith lived at Pine Bush; practiced there for many years, and died about 1855. Dr. Durkee lived a mile south of Pine Bush; practiced for fifteen years or more and died there.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

This town was formed from Montgomery, March 4, 1823, early enough in the spring to have the first town-meeting occur that year. The propriety of organizing a new town arose from the fact that Montgomery comprised a territory of such extent as to render the transaction of public business a matter of considerable trouble. It was possible also to make a convenient arrangement of boundaries and form two towns each with a central point accessible to all. The new town very appropriately received the name of Crawford, thus perpetuating the name of one of the earliest settlers, and honoring a family of numerous branches and intimately associated with all the interests of this section.

FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

The first annual town-meeting was held at the house of Edward Schoonmaker, in the town of Crawford, April 1, 1823, and the following town officers were elected for the ensuing year: Supervisor, William W. Crawford; Town Clerk, Oliver Mills; Assessors, Robert I. Crawford, Jacobus Smith, Moses Crawford; Overseers of the Poor, Daniel Bull, Henry Weller; Commissioners of Highways, Robert D. Hunter, Samuel Stevenson, Archibald Crawford; Collector, John C. Nicholson; Constables, John C. Nicholson, Lewis Scott; Commissioners of Common Schools, Oliver Mills, Alexander Thompson, Hieronimus Weller; Inspectors of Common Schools, Isaac Van Doren, George Hunter, Charles Winfield; Inspectors of Election, Joseph Elder, Alexander Thompson, James Bruyn; Fence-Viewers, John W. Henry, Peter Weller, Nathaniel Hunter.

The following votes were passed: that there should be three assessors, one collector, two constables, three fence-viewers; every man his own pound-master and farm his own pound; hogs well yoked may run at large; twenty-five dollars bounty for every wolf killed in town; collectors' fees, three cents on the dollar.

At a special town-meeting, held April 9, 1823, it was voted unanimously to raise four hundred and sixty dollars for the support of the poor the ensuing year.

The overseers of the highways appointed were the following:

By a written assent recorded in the office of the county clerk, and bearing date July 30, 1868, the sum of $80,000 was fixed upon as aid to be rendered by the town in the construction of the Middletown and Crawford Railroad.

The amount was raised and used. The interest has been annually paid, but the principal remains a debt against the town.

V.—VILLAGES.

HOPEWELL

is a well-known neighborhood in the west part of the town. The name was previously adopted by the Presbyterian Church which was formed there as a colony from the older congregation of Goodwill, in Montgomery. On invitation of the hive from which they had swarmed, the fanciful designation was chosen as expressing perhaps their hopes of future success. A former writer says of this movement: "It was the case of sons and daughters leaving the old mansion so dearly beloved and taking up their abode in a new and distant land. Their hopes were well founded: the congregation is prosperous and well endowed." There is now no business in the way of trade or mechanical pursuits to be mentioned. It is a rich farming neighborhood, with post-office facilities at Thompson's Ridge.

BULLVILLE.

is the name given to the post-office located in the southwest part of the town near the Walkkill line. Mr. Thomas Bull resided there for many years, and conducted various business operations, and from him the hamlet derives both its origin and its name. Under the head of early settlement many facts have been already given concerning this neighborhood. The village is handsomely situated on high ground, and with its elegant new Methodist church and several fine dwellings constitutes an attractive rural place. At the present time there is a store kept by Charles Roe; a hotel by Silas Dickerson; a blacksmith-shop by George McKinney, and another by Hugh Carroll; a creamery by Samuel Robinson; a flour and feed store and a coal-yard, also by Samuel Robinson; to these may be added Robinson's distillery.

is occasionally written Searsburgh. It is situated very nearly central upon the Dwaars Kill, and is named in honor of Mr. Benjamin Sears, who resided there, owned the mills, and was once sheriff of the county.

Among his sons were Dr. Sears; William Sears, a lawyer of New York City; and Rev. Jacob Sears, of New Jersey. The place is an old point of considerable trade, but the opening of the railroad, leading to easy connection with other villages, and not passing through this, has rendered the modern trade of less importance. There is now a store by Augustus Comfort; a hotel by A. R. Vanderlyn; blacksmith and wagon-shop by D. W. Deyo; blacksmith-shop by Wm. Lupton; and a grist-mill by Gilbert Roat. There is also a saw-mill. The postmaster is Augustus Comfort. Searsville is quite central, and accordingly the town-meetings have nearly always been held there, and the general town business transacted at that place.

THOMPSON'S RIDGE

is a short distance from Searsville, and is a station upon the Crawford Branch of the New York, Ontario and Western Railway (Oswego Midland); it also has a post-office, Daniel Thompson postmaster. The name is appropriate from the number of families of Thompsons constituting the neighborhood.

Daniel Thompson, the superintendent of the road, resides near here. At this station a large amount of milk is shipped, and considerable freight and passenger business is done.

The station buildings and a building erected for a store (but only in operation occasionally) constitute about all there is of the "village." There is near by a beautiful grove, with convenient arrangements for picnic parties, including a pond and boats. The old farms of the Thompsons and others in this neighborhood comprise some of the most productive lands, not only in Crawford but in Orange County.

is a thickly-settled neighborhood in the south part of the town. It was formerly a place of some importance on the old Cohecton turnpike, having a hotel and the other buildings necessary to constitute a village, viz.: a blacksmith-shop and a school-house. The last two still remain, but the opening of the railroad system of the country brought to an end the tide of travel that once passed along this important highway.

PINE BUSH

is a thriving business-place near the Shawangunk River, in the north part of the town. It is the terminus of the Crawford Railroad, and its post-office supplies quite a section of country on both sides of the river. The village is pleasantly situated upon a tract of land quite level, with a fine farming country lying around it. At considerable of a steep descent below the Shawangunk Kill flows past the village, supplying water-power to the grist-mill, which dates back to Revolutionary times. In full sight beyond the river are the Shawangunk Mountains, rising into a rugged range, whose frowning peaks overlook the valley. Northeast and east there is a distant view of the Hudson River heights, marking the horizon with a line of blue. Northward, between the ranges, are the lower lands of the kill, stretching away in the distance. Together, there is a combination of upland and valley, of mountains and streams, of forest slopes and cultivated fields, which constitutes an attractive landscape. Summer visitors may penetrate into wilder depths, may refuse to linger so near the borders of civilization, but surely they will travel far to find a place possessing more elements of quiet beauty or a more charming prospect on which to feast the eye and delight the taste than the pleasant hamlet of Pine Bush.

James Thompson was in trade at this place as early as 1824 or 1825. His successors in the same store were Hezekiah Watkins, Tarbosch & Weller, Lewis Wisner, Elijah Smith, and George Oakley. The building stood in what is now Railroad Street, and was removed a few years since. Elijah Smith, about 1834 or 1835, opened a store and continued for some ten years. The building is now occupied by John Bowne as a dwelling. About 1830, Dr. Ewen came to Pine Bush and built the old hotel. He also kept a drug-store. There was a tannery west from Wheeler's house, run by Abraham Mould from 1825, or about that date, and continued for a few years. Abraham Mould was afterwards killed by James Mitchell in an altercation. Mr. Mitchell was tried for the offense, but acquitted on the ground of justifiable homicide done in self-defense.

The plank-road from Ellenville to Newburgh was opened about 1848, and passed through Pine Bush. This was the beginning of the modern growth of the village. Mr. A. R. Taylor, to whom we are indebted for most of these items, came here from Ulsterville about that time and bought out George Oakley's interest in the store. At that time there were only three or four dwelling-houses in the place. Mr. Taylor continued in trade about seven years, and then purchased the grist-mill, which he ran for several years. The store passed to Oliver Taylor, who finally built opposite the present Taylor House.

The present business of Pine Bush comprises the following: the station buildings of the Crawford Railroad, Earl Terwilliger agent; two hotels, the Taylor House, now kept by Hezekiah W. Cole, and the well-known Decker House, now kept by S. G. Decker; stores dealing in general merchandise, Wheeler & Taylor, Howell & Van Keuren, J. W.

Parlaiman (formerly I. J. Whitten & Son), and Theodore Hinoult; shoe-stores, by C. Hinoult and by Napoleon Hinoult; harness-shops, by E. Decker and by C. H. Homan; a restaurant, by A. Fuller; a fancy store, by Mrs. E. Boice; a drug-store, by J. T. Topping; blacksmith-shops, by Hugh Lowery, by Hugh Lowery, Jr., and by Amos Baker; wagon, carriage-making, and undertaking, by D. T. Bowen; wagon-shop and undertaking, by J. M. Crawford; wagon-shop, by J. V. Decker; meat-market, by Cooley & Woodlock; grist-mill and saw-mill, by Smith & Cox; G. B. Barnes, photographer and dentist; exchange and livery stable, Newton Higby; distillery, R. E. Terry; hardware and tin-shop, by J. H. Wallace and by William Miller; coal, lumber, cement, lime, etc., by W. T. Wallace (formerly A. T. Deyo); shoemaker, Milton Terwilliger; tailor, Abraham Terwilliger; millinery, Mrs. S. W. Freer; creamery, D. W. Berry; marble-works, E. Billings.

The present postmaster is W. Wheeler, who has held the office about fifteen years. Before him was H. W. Decker, from 1861 to 1865; and previous to Mr. Decker, A. R. Taylor was the incumbent of the office for about eight years. Earlier than this were Arthur Slott and Cornelius Slott. The office was originally known as Crawford, but the inconvenience of the name (being the same as that of the town, with two other offices in town) led to a new designation, and the present name was deemed appropriate in view of the old growth of pines which once covered all this tract.

The growth of Pine Bush has been largely increased by the opening of the railroad, affording an easy opportunity of connection with the villages to the south, and securing convenient freighting facilities both to and from this place. Mr. A. R. Taylor has taken a liberal course, as an owner of a large amount of real estate, in opening new streets and contributing largely to every measure of village improvement. He has been largely employed as a civil engineer and surveyor, and is still often engaged in land surveys and the adjustment of boundaries. He drove the first railroad stake in Chicago during an engagement at the West many years ago.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

At the town-meeting of 1823 commissioners of common schools were chosen, viz.: Oliver Mills, Alexander Thompson, and Hieronimus Weller. Subsequently the following other persons served one or more years each in that office down to 1844: Nathaniel Hunter, Robert I. Crawford, John Hill, Geo. Pitts, Moses Comfort, Samuel Stevenson, James Crist, Wm. J. Smith, Robert R. Thompson, Matthew Smith, Andrew A. Millspaugh, David C. Bull, John Whitten, Wm. Jordan, Jacobus H. Van Keuren, Charles Winfield, Wm. Case, Jason Gillespie, Lawrence Low, Sutton Green, Garret Smith, Augustus Thompson, James Elder. During the same period, 1823 to 1843, the following persons served one or more years each as inspectors of schools: Isaac Van Doren, George Hunter, Charles Winfield, Andrew K. Barkley, James H. Crawford, Daniel G. Durkee, Wm. B. Crawford, John A. Carpenter, David Sease, Ira Clark, Augustus Thompson, Robert R. Thompson, Daniel H. Smith, Jacob Randall. Several of these served for many years.

The town superintendents from 1843 to 1856 were:

The school districts at the time of the organization of the town in 1823 were the following: District No. 1, the school-house being near the town line, by Adam Dickerson; District No. 2, the school-house being near the place of Robert D. Hunter, at Pine Bush; District No. 3, the school-house being near the residence of Jacobus Smith, at Pine Bush; District No. 4, at Searsburch; District No. 5, school-house at Hopewell, near the house of Alexander Dixon; District No. 6, the school-house located near the Hopewell meeting-house; District No. 7, the school-house at McCreery's, near the Shawangunk Kill; District No. 8, the school-house near the house of Daniel Bull; District No. 9, the school-house near the residence of Archibald Crawford; District No. 10, the school-house near the residence of Daniel Crawford.

In No. 1 there were then 63 children between the ages of five and fifteen; in No. 2, 61; in No. 3, 78; in No. 4, 70; in No. 5, 49; in No. 6, 49; in No. 7, 41; in No. 8, 36; in No. 9, 71; in No. 10, 25; in part No. 6 (Walkill), 4; in part No. 14 (Montgomery), 8; total in town, 655.

The public money distributed amounted to $267.44.

VII.—CHURCHES.

THE PRESBYTERIAN SOCIETY OF HOPEWELL

was incorporated by a certificate executed Feb. 25, 1800, at a meeting held at the church. The paper was signed by Jacob Linderman and John Crawford, inspectors of the election, and the trustees chosen were Henry Palmer, Abraham Caldwell, William Hunter, Jacob Linderman, Robert Thompson, David Milligan, Daniel Bull, Nathan Crawford, and Israel Losee.

The first effort to build a Presbyterian church in Hopewell was made about the year 1779. All, however, that was done at this time was to raise and inclose a building without finishing the interior, but in which the people occasionally enjoyed the preaching of the gospel.

In this situation they continued till the year 1792, when they formed themselves into a body corporate and chose the following persons as their board of trustees, viz.: William Cross, Robert Milliken, Jonathan Crawford, Daniel Bull, Andrew Thompson, Nathan

Ans. H. Leggett

Crawford, Abraham Caldwell, Robert Thompson, and Robert McCreery.

At a meeting of the trustees, held very soon after, they adopted measures to finish the inside of the building, and about the same time resolved upon the expediency of securing the regular preaching of the gospel. They accordingly made a call on the Rev. Jonathan Freeman, and on his accepting of the call he was ordained and installed their pastor, Aug. 28, 1793. Soon after his settlement among them, Mr. Freeman ordained Abraham Caldwell, William Cross, Robert Thompson, Jacob Linderman, John Crawford, and Matthias Millspaugh ruling elders; and this appears to be the true date of the organization of the church.

The ministry of Mr. Freeman was not of long continuance. The pastoral relation between him and the people was dissolved April 18, 1798. During the ministry of Mr. Freeman everything seemed to progress comfortably, and at the time of his leaving them the little church, which at first consisted of 21 members, had grown to the number of 105.

The resignation of Mr. Freeman left the church vacant for more than five years. At the expiration of this time the church called the Rev. Isaac Van Doren. He was ordained and installed their pastor on June 29, 1803. The ministry of Mr. Van Doren was long and happily protracted. He continued his labors among the people during the full period of twenty-one years, enjoying their warmest affections, and finding his ministry followed up with many blessings. In the year 1820 he enjoyed a very extensive revival of religion among his people, which resulted in the addition of 152 members to the church. But a time came, in the providence of God, for the severance of hearts so long and happily united. This occurred April 20, 1825, when, at the request of Mr. Van Doren, the Presbytery dissolved his pastoral relation, and once more declared the church of Hopewell to be vacant.

After being vacant nearly two years, the church called the Rev. Hugh M. Koontz to become their pastor. He was ordained and installed Dec. 20, 1826, and after laboring among the people for nearly six years his pastoral relation was, at his own request, dissolved. This was done in May, 1832.

About this time the congregation took measures to build a new house of worship. In carrying out these measures they abandoned the old site and selected another one, on which they erected a neat, commodious, and firm stone building. This new building was commenced early in the spring of 1831, and was finished and dedicated to the worship of God the following year. The way being now open again for the administration of the word and ordinances, the congregation called the Rev. John H. Leggett to become their pastor. He was installed May 15, 1833.

The following persons were ruling elders in 1846, viz.: Robert I. Crawford, Nathaniel Hunter, Nicholas Leybolt, Hieronimus Weller, David C. Bull, Alexander Crawford, and Samuel K. Leybolt.

Rev. Mr. Leggett continued as pastor until 1855. Subsequent ministers have been: Rev. Andrew Johnson, 1856 to 1866; Rev. B. G. Benedict, Oct. 21, 1866, to 1870. The present pastor, Rev. John Turner, was called soon after. The present elders (November, 1880) are Alexander Crawford, Cornelius Barnes, Robert Crawford, Stansbury Gillespie, and George D. Shafer. The members number 152.

REV. JOHN H. LEGGETT, born in the city of New York, May 28, 1800, was educated at Columbia College, and after a four years' course of theological study under John M. Mason, D.D., who then stood at the head of the American pulpit, was ordained to preach the gospel by the Second Presbytery of New York, in the year 1824. May 19, 1824, he married Mary Noel Bleecker, resident also of New York City. His first pastoral charge was at Moreau, Saratoga Co., N. Y., his second at Peekskill, whence he removed to Marlborough, Ulster Co., where his labors were followed by a powerful and memorable revival of religion. In the year 1833, Mr. Leggett was called to the Hopewell Church, where he continued to labor for twenty-three years. The following extract is from an article written and published just after his death by Rev. Dr. E. D. G. Prime, editor of the New York Observer:

"Having for a period of more than thirty years enjoyed the intimate acquaintance and friendship of Mr. Leggett, and knowing well the transparent purity and excellence of his character, and his great usefulness in the ministry of the gospel, we feel that his death should be marked by this memorial to his life and services. His long pastorate was over the Hopewell Church, where he remained for twenty-three years, enjoying in the highest degree the affections of the people and ministering to them with earnestness, fidelity, and great ability. In all this time he was detained from his pulpit only one Sabbath by sickness, and was seldom absent for any other cause a single day. Few men have devoted themselves to their pastoral work with such entire singleness of purpose, and few have been more honored or blessed by the Master in the marked approval of their labors. As a true shepherd, he went in and out before the sheep of his flock, leading them, in the name of the Great Shepherd, both by his example and his fervent, instructive preaching, in the green pastures of the word, and beside the still waters of divine consolation and refreshment."

As a preacher he was characterized by remarkable fervor and animation. His sermons, which, though carefully prepared, were invariably delivered from briefs, were both instructive and impressive. Many elderly people still tell of sermons they had heard him preach years ago, and not a few throughout the county who heard him but once or twice, and that while perhaps they were children, yet remember even the text, and the effect of the discourse upon mind and heart.

Mr. Leggett was chosen stated clerk of the Presbytery of Hudson in 1838, and filled that office with great efficiency for more than twenty years. "The records of Presbytery under his hand were models of neatness and beauty."

In 1856 he was called to the more arduous work of building up a new congregation and church at Midletown, which was successfully accomplished, and in which he continued for about nine years, when, on account of feebleness by age and disease, he retired from the stated duties of pastor, though continuing to preach with great acceptance from time to time in New York and other places.

The last few years of his life were passed at the home of his youngest son, Rev. T. A. Leggett, at Chester, where he died on the 31st day of May, 1873.

GRAHAM'S CHURCH (ASSOCIATE REFORMED).

This congregation was formed and church erected in 1799, by the exertions of Mr. Robert Graham, who at that time was an elder in the church of Goodwill.

The name was bestowed in his honor on the day the building was erected. Mr. Graham resided within the bounds of this congregation.

Soon after erection, and before being finished, it was opened by public worship on the 4th of August, 1799. The Rev. John McJimsey, of Neelytown Church, preached the sermon. Mr. Graham died Sept. 22, 1799, and by his will he devised his farm of about 100 acres, in the vicinity of the church, to the congregation for the use of the pastor. The individuals who composed this new congregation principally were in the habit of attending church at Neelytown. By an arrangement made with that church the labors of Rev. Mr. McJimsey were obtained for every alternate Sabbath. Before the erection of the house of worship he had preached in this neighborhood in private houses and sometimes in barns. The Graham Church was for a time only a branch of the Neelytown organization, but in 1802 it became a distinct body, and the first elders ordained were Samuel Gillespie and Andrew Dixon. Mr. Wm. Crawford, an elder previously in the Little Britain Church, united with this church, and became a member of the Session. The church was still united with that of Neelytown in supporting the same pastor. At the first administration of the sacrament there were twenty-eight members. The growth of the congregation, though not rapid, was progressive.

In 1809, Mr. McJimsey received and accepted a call from an Associate congregation in Albany, and his pastoral connection with these churches was dissolved. This did not arise from any dissatisfaction between any of the parties, but was sincerely regretted by all. Within a year the Rev. Arthur I. Stansbury was called to this church, in connection with Neelytown, who continued his services till 1816. From that time till 1819 the church was vacant, with occasional supplies; when she, in connection with Neelytown, recalled the Rev. J. McJimsey, who resumed his ministerial labors, as before, between the two churches. When he left, ten years before, there were 57 members; on his return, he found but 21, and the first elders dead. Death and removals had almost extinguished the whole.

In 1831 the Neelytown church was permitted to go down by building a new one in Hamptonburgh; and from that time Graham's church had all the services of Mr. McJimsey.

The services of Mr. McJimsey were continued until his death in 1854. The next pastor was Rev. Alexander McWilliams, 1855 to 1861. The present pastor, Rev. John Erskine, was settled in 1861.

The elders have been: 1802, Samuel Gillespie, Andrew Dixon, William Crawford, Sr.; 1809, Daniel Wilkin, Andrew McWilliams; 1823, Gawn Mackimison, Arthur McKinney, Jason Gillespie; 1839, Henry H. Weller, Robert Burnet; 1846, Robert L. Brown, Luther McKinney.

Robert Graham, the founder of this church, was a genuine Presbyterian of the Scotch-Irish stamp, and dearly loved the Master and his cause. "He rests from his labors and his works do follow him." This church was connected with the Associate Reformed Presbytery of Newburgh till 1858. It is now United Presbyterian.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF CRAWFORD

is located at Bullville. It was incorporated April 20, 1859. The certificate was signed by John Shorter and James C. Gowdey. The trustees named therein were Jacob M. Shorter, Robert Hill, and Heman S. Shorter. Mrs. Jacob M. Shorter, Robert Hill, Mrs. Heman S. Shorter, Matthew M. Wilkison, Mrs. M. M. Wilkison, Rhodes Mance and wife were among the first members.

The house of worship was finished so as to be dedicated in the summer of 1861. It cost $8000, all of which was a gift from Mrs. Mary Shorter. The first pastor was Rev. John Wardle, the Conference acceding to Mrs. Shorter's request that he should be appointed. Matthew Wilkison was the builder of the church edifice. Successive pastors have been Rev. Messrs. Wardle, Jones, Lamont, Heroy, Shriver, Esray, Shurter, Bohlman, and the present pastor, A. Van Keuren. Present number of members about 92.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF PINE BUSH was incorporated Nov. 28, 1870. The certificate was signed by Samuel M. J. Gillespie and Theron Bodine. The trustees named were William B. Barnes, John Walker, Samuel Armstrong, William H. Cowley, Francis M. Bodine. There had been religious services for many years in this village before the formation of this society or the erection of a church. A large number of people were attached to the Reformed Church, located but a short distance over the Kill, in the town of Shawangunk, Ulster Co. The ministers of that church and the Methodist ministers from Bullville occupied the school-house, at Pine Bush, on alternate Sundays. Finally those inclined to Methodist views deemed it proper to organize. The movement was somewhat earlier than the date of incorporation given above. Trustees had been chosen in 1869, the same as named a year later in the certificate. Nov. 19, 1870, steps were taken towards building. A lot 100 feet in front was presented to the society by Wm. H. Cowley, and an addition of 50 more feet front was purchased of him for $100. The whole was 150 feet in length.

The house is located on the west side of the road leading from Pine Bush to Bullville. Ground was broken for the enterprise immediately, and the first load of stone delivered Nov. 30, 1870. The cornerstone was laid with appropriate ceremonies July 13, 1871. A box containing a Bible, a hymn book, and other articles was placed in a cavity of the stone. Addresses were delivered by Rev. G. C. Esray, Rev. J. K. Wardle, Rev. George Clark, and Rev. E. B. Pierce.

The dedication took place April 24, 1871. Rev. Benjamin I. Jones preached the sermon from the text, "The glorious gospel of Christ." The financial statements were then submitted, showing the property to have cost, including labor, about $8000, of which $4000 remained to be raised that the edifice might be free of incumbrance. The praiseworthy custom of not dedicating an edifice not fully paid for was next presented with great force, and $1600 pledged on the spot. At the evening service Rev. W. P. Abbott, of New York City, preached, and Rev. Mr. Jones again presented the subject of the finances. After a vigorous effort, with much self-sacrifice and liberal giving, the whole amount was reported raised, and the ceremony of dedication took place just before midnight. This charge is still connected to that of Bullville under one pastor, who resides at the latter place. The present officers are Rev. A. Van Keuren, pastor; F. M. Bodine, E. M. Johnson, D. T. Bowen, stewards; E. M. Johnson, William H. Cowley, and D. T. Bowen, trustees; Orville Eichenbergh, Sunday-school superintendent.

The house of worship is a handsome building of wood, 40 by 60. There is a tower 12 by 18 at the base, affording an entrance to the church. The height of the spire is about 70 feet. Repairs and improvements have recently been made to the amount of $324. The church was reopened after the repairs, Nov. 14, 1880, and on that day a balance, not previously provided for, of $128, was fully pledged.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

Burials in the Pine Bush section of the town are mostly at the New Prospect Dutch Reformed Church, town of Shawangunk, and at the old Rainey burying-ground, on the farm now owned by A. R. Taylor, two miles below Pine Bush.

At Bullville there is a new cemetery in good order and well maintained.

At Collaburgh there is a burial-place in very good preservation.

The James R. Crawford burial-place, on the present farm of Francis Crawford, is also very well kept.

There is a dilapidated burying-place, known as the Bruyn ground, on the farm now owned by Leander Gillespie.

On the farm of Ezra Smith is a very old graveyard, with a few red stone in use for monuments about the beginning of this century.

The old Hopewell burying-ground has many early graves and is worthy of some study for family history. The Hopewell graveyard contains many of the old settlers who died at a ripe old age: David Sease, eighty-seven; Stephen Farnum, eighty-eight; Daniel Bull, eighty-seven; John Crover, eighty-three; David C. Bull, eighty-one; Dr. Increase Crosby, eighty (he died May 13, 1845); Hannah Bull, wife of Alexander Thompson, Jr., eighty-two; Henry Linderman, seventy-nine. In the Crawford family cemetery, near Hopewell Church, we find Milton Bull, eighty-four; Eleanor Stewart Crawford, eighty-seven; Jonathan Crawford, seventy-nine. At Bullville Cemetery, Ephraim Niver, eighty-nine. Oliver Mills, one of the early town officers, is buried in the Hopewell graveyard.

IX.—TOWN SOCIETIES, Etc.

The only societies are various social, religious, or benevolent organizations, which have had a brief existence from time to time, leaving, however, little or no records for the historian to gather up.

A recent movement at Pine Bush on behalf of temperance has led to the establishment of a Temperance Hall, with a design for a free reading-room.

X.—PLACES OF SPECIAL NOTE, OR OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

There is perhaps nothing to mention under this head, except those places where the earliest pioneers built their humble homes in the dense forest. Here and there a single old apple-tree, and near by the cavity of an old cellar, indicates the spot where some family reared their dwelling in the far-off times, —where a single rose-bush, perhaps, still blooms, though the hands which planted it were long ago folded for the rest of the grave. These places, though sacred in the personal traditions of families, can scarcely claim a place in the sphere of a county history.

At Pine Bush there is a Revolutionary relic, though even there we must cross the Shawangunk Kill and enter Ulster County to find it. Not far from the site of the old Cornelius Slott grist-mill, and almost on the very bank of the kill, is an old log house, said to have been standing there in the days when Indian incursions and Tory raids made the life of every family familiar with danger. It is now on the property of N. W. Clearwater, but in the days of the Revolution it was the Van Amburgh property, and that family is also said to have been in some way connected to Anneke Jans, the historic ghost which every now and then disturbs the slumbers of those who guard the title to the vast estates of Trinity Church, New York. In this old cottage lived a stalwart woman, a member of the Van Amburgh family, for whose capture (as the tradition runs) a price had been offered by the British authorities. Shanks Ben, the one Ulster Tory, who was as famous in that county as Claudius Smith was in Orange, laid in wait at one time for her. He concealed himself in the hay stacked in the farm barracks, intending to seize his victim when she should come out to feed the cattle. Presently he saw her coming, a stout, vigorous woman, with a huge, old-fashioned fork. His heart failed him, and he made no effort, glad enough to remain concealed, and not bring down upon his devoted head the muscular indignation she was evidently capable of developing. He afterwards said that his heart was in his mouth all this time, fearing she would drive the tines of the fork into him as he lay covered with the hay she was reaching for. The wild days of those border wars have long since passed away, and these uncertain traditions only linger around the firesides of this valley, yet the old log house still stands, though for a hundred years the winter storms have beaten upon its primeval roof.

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The people of this town are mostly engaged in farming. Its grasses are free from noxious vegetables, and growing upon high land, are strong and produce a fine quality of milk. It is noted in the markets for its first-rate quality of butter. The roads of the town are in good condition. The Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike runs through the southern portion of the town, and furnishes desirable facilities for pleasure and business purposes. This region is favorable to the growth of apples and peaches, the quality and quantity of which, especially the apple for winter use, are on the increase.

MILLS.

The grist-mill at Pine Bush was built by Cornelius Slott, as already mentioned. Its successive proprietors since were Arthur Slott, A. R. Taylor, the firm of Charles Sinsabaugh and Andrew Thompson, J. C. Bennett, William Cowley, Theron Weller, Smith & Terhune, the last named selling to the present proprietors, Smith & Cox. The grist-mill at Searsville is an early affair, and has had many proprietors. The present owner is Mr. Rumph. Near Pine Bush was the old saw-mill of James Rainey, now abandoned. The Henry Hill saw-mill is still in operation. There are two saw-mills at Searsville, one owned by Mr. Comfort, the other now unused. There is also a saw-mill at the Widow Hill place, beyond Searsville. On the Pakadasink is the Henry Mould saw-mill, and also Elder's saw-mill.

XII.—MILITARY.

Being of comparatively modern organization, the town has no military history in its separate capacity prior to the great civil war. In the military rolls of the Wallkill of old times, and in the general account of military operations in the county, various incidents and several names will doubtless be found relating to the territory now constituting Crawford. There were a number of men from the town in the company called out during the war of 1812, but no list is obtainable here. Egbert Brink, Jemuel Corwin, and Isaiah Whitten are mentioned, whose widows now draw pensions on account of their husbands' services, and Virgil Y. Duryea, now living, is also a pensioner.

In the war of the Rebellion the town furnished the following numbers of men:

The sum of $525 was raised by subscription in 1862 for bounties, and paid to twenty-one volunteers in the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth Regiment, Co. H, Capt. Samuel Hunter, which company was organized in the town, and $50 was similarly raised and paid to volunteers in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment. Three thousand dollars was paid by county to volunteers from the town in 1863. In 1864 town bounties were paid to the amount of $27,610, and under last call $16,500. On final settlement with the State, the town was allowed for excess of years $3000, and for bounties $8700, total $11,700.

The following is the official record of the action of the town:

At a special town-meeting, held Aug. 9, 1864, the following resolutions were adopted, 185 voting in favor and 11 against:

"Resolved, That for the purpose of filling the quota of this town under the call of the President of the United States, dated July 10, 1864, for five hundred thousand men, the number of which from our town is now fixed at forty-five men, a sum of money not to exceed forty-five thousand dollars be raised on the credit of the town pursuant to the bounty law passed by the Legislature Feb. 9, 1864, for the purpose of paying bounties to volunteers.

"Resolved, That the town board be a committee to carry out the above resolution, and that they be empowered to make the bounties so as to be equal with and compete with other towns and also to make provisions for enlisting in the rebel States if deemed advisable."

On the 26th of the same month another meeting was held at which the above resolutions were ratified and confirmed, the necessary authority to issue bonds granted, and such further provisions made as were necessary to carry out the objects desired. The following persons were named as a committee to co-operate with the town board, viz.: William B. Crawford, Hezekiah W. Decker, John A. Crawford.

In the winter of 1864-65 the calls of the President rendered it necessary to take further action with reference to filling the quota, and a special town-meeting was held Jan. 28, 1865.

A tax of $30,000 was authorized for the purpose of paying bounties. The amount of the bounty to be paid to each volunteer was left to the town board, and ample authority was granted to take all necessary steps for carrying out the object of the meeting and filling the quota of the town. As will be seen above, the full sums authorized were not expended.

The Presbyterian Church at Hopewell contributed $50 for Bibles for the Fifty-sixth Regiment, and subsequently, for similar purpose, $55; total, $105. The Crawford Soldiers' Aid Society sent $300 in cash and supplies to the Sanitary Commission.

The following list of men was carefully prepared by Mr. Augustus Thompson in 1865, and has been compared with muster-rolls and other authorities:

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

DANIEL THOMPSON.

Daniel Thompson, supervisor of the town of Crawford, was born in that town Oct. 8, 1819, and has lived there all his life. His father, Alexander Thompson, was also born and died there. His grandfather and two brothers came from Ireland early in the history of this county, and bought five hundred acres of land in the town of Crawford, all of which is owned by their descendants to-day. Supervisor Thompson's mother was Hannah, daughter of Daniel Bull, descendant of the first settlers of that town.

Mr. Thompson received an academic education, and since leaving school has been engaged as a farmer. In 1850 he was married to Mary E., daughter of the late Dr. Hunter, of Searsville, in the town of Crawford. He has three children, two sons and a daughter. In the years 1852 and 1853 he served his town as commissioner of highways. In the spring of 1854 he was elected supervisor, and for twenty-two consecutive terms filled that office to the satisfaction of his constituents. He was not elected in 1876, but in 1877 was again sent to the board. With the single exception of Mr. Shuit, supervisor from the town of Monroe, he is the oldest member (in point of the number of terms of service) in the board, and he has been its chairman for two terms.

Mr. Thompson was elected president of the Middletown and Crawford Railway at its organization in 1871, and has since filled that position.* In 1862 he was appointed major in the Ninety-first Regiment National Guards of the State of New York, and held the office until the organization was disbanded.

In 1872, Mr. Thompson was appointed by the Governor and Senate a trustee of the New York State Homœopathic Asylum for the Insane at Middletown, and in 1875, on the reorganization of the board, was again named one of the trustees, his term of office expiring in 1881. He has been a vigilant and efficient member of that board, serving on the farm and building committee.

His father, Alexander Thompson, was supervisor of Crawford from the year 1834 to 1842, and his brother, Augustus Thompson, now deceased, for the years 1849, 1850, and 1851.

Supervisor Thompson is a Democrat, and has always been one. He is very decided in his opinions and quite outspoken in his language if he deems the occasion requires it. In his denunciations of anything which savors of fraud in our county affairs he has incurred the dislike of many who have had their schemes exposed. He is a hard worker in the board, and, by reason of his long experience, a most valuable member.

LEANDER CRAWFORD.

James Crawford and Mary Wilkin, his wife, were members of the congregation at Golen, Ireland; received from the church there a certificate, recommending them to any congregation in America where Providence may order their lot to be cast, as free from scandal, creditable persons, innocent and blameless. A copy of this certificate made here in 1727 is now in possession of their descendants, and the original was signed by Robert Colpheart, and dated June, 1718.

They were among the earliest settlers of what is now the town of Crawford, Orange Co., and the town took its name from them.

Their children born here are John, born Dec. 15, 1719; James, Jan. 21, 1722; Jane, March 3, 1724; David, Aug. 11, 1729; Samuel, June 9, 1732; and Joseph, Feb. 21, 1734. Of these, Samuel was great-grandfather of our subject, and had a son John, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, married Sarah Barkley, who bore him the following children: Robert I.; Andrew, was a tanner and currier in Mount Hope; George; Nancy; Sally, wife of Daniel G. Shaver, of Crawford; John B., spent most of his life in Crawford, and died at Havana, N. Y.; Israel, was a farmer in Crawford; Eleanor, wife of Nathan Crawford, a resident of Chemung Co., N. Y.; Julia, wife of Jonathan C. Gillespie, resides at Pine Bush; Keturah, wife of Harvey Harris, of Bloomingburgh. Of these children, only Julia survives in 1881, and is about eighty years of age.

John Crawford spent his life as a farmer in his native town, was a member and elder of the Presbyterian Church at Hopewell, and resided upon and owned some 500 acres of land.

His eldest son, Robert I. Crawford, was father of Leander, and resided upon 100 acres of the homestead during his life. He was an elder and active and influential member of the Hopewell church nearly his whole life, and gave liberally of his means for its support. His counsels were often sought by his fellow-citizens, and as an arbiter, administrator, or executor he served his friends nearly the whole of his business career.

He never sought public place, and never held office in the town except to serve for some time as assessor.

Daniel Thompson

Leander Cranford

A. W. Laylor

He was hospitable, social, frank, and honest, and died in 1861, aged seventy-seven years.

His wife was Deborah, daughter of Benjamin Dickerson, of Crawford, but formerly from Long Island. She died several years prior to her husband. Their children were: Emeline; Millicent, deceased; Leander; John Addison, a farmer in Crawford; Albert, deceased, was a farmer in Crawford, and died near Orange Lake, where he had removed; George, of Middletown, was formerly a farmer in Crawford; Sally Ellen, wife of N. H. Harris, of Montgomery, died in 1880; Esther; Robert, a farmer in Crawford, on a part of the old homestead settled by his grandfather; Theron, resides on the homestead of his father; and Angeline, wife of Stansbury Gillespie, of Crawford. Leander, eldest son of Robert I. Crawford, was born Oct. 2, 1810. Being the eldest son of a large family of children, his opportunities for an education were limited to a few months at the district school, and his whole minority was spent in assisting his father on the farm. He married, Jan. 23, 1838, Nancy A., daughter of Samuel Barclay and Agnes McCurdy, of Crawford, and granddaughter of Robert McCurdy, of Crawford, who died Sept. 15, 1807, aged eighty-five years. Her father, Samuel Barclay, was in the commissary department in the Revolutionary war, and died April 17, 1814, aged seventy-six years. Her mother died Sept. 26, 1844, aged eighty years.

The Barkleys and McCurdys were farmers in the town of Crawford, prominent and influential citizens, and members of the Good-Will Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Crawford was born Jan. 9, 1808.

For one year after his marriage, Mr. Crawford resided on a farm at Searsville, and for twenty-one years following he was a farmer at Collabar, in his native town. In 1858, on account of ill health, he removed to Middletown, where he has since resided, and where he has been connected somewhat with the interests of the village. He was a director in the Walkkill Bank, from its organization until its close, and was trustee of the village for one term. He was a member and deacon of the Hopewell Presbyterian Church during his residence there for many years, and since his residence in Middletown he has been a liberal supporter of church and kindred interests, and has served some sixteen years as an elder in the Second Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Crawford has been often chosen as executor and guardian, and in the discharge of the varied duties of those positions his integrity remains unimpaired, and his duties have always been discharged with a conscientious desire to deal justly with all.

In his early manhood he took an active part in the training and drill of the militia, and his commission of lieutenant Twenty-eighth Regiment New York Infantry is signed by Governor Throop, and dated June 20, 1829.

His children are James B., born Nov. 2, 1838, was a lumber merchant in Chicago, where he died Oct.

24, 1866; Anna, is the wife of Alsop Purdy, a merchant of Middletown; and Ellen B., is the wife of Albert Bull, a druggist of Middletown.

ARCHIBALD R. TAYLOR.

John Taylor, the grandfather of the subject of this biography, was by birth a Scotchman, and first came to America as a British soldier, having served with the army at Quebec. He became impressed with the justice of the cause of the colonists, and enlisted in their ranks, having served with credit in several engagements. After peace was declared he repaired to Ulster County, N. Y., and conducted a tannery in the town of Shawangunk, where the remainder of his life was spent. He was married to Miss Jane Smedes, of the latter town, and had children,—John, William, Daniel, and Rachel, who became Mrs. Joseph Depeu. Of this number, John, the father of Archibald, was born in Shawangunk during the year 1789, where his early life was passed, having succeeded to the trade of his father. He was united in marriage to Miss Jane McBurney, of Crawford township, who was the mother of Archibald R., James, Ann (Mrs. N. W. Clearwater), and Oliver. Mr. Taylor's death occurred in Shawangunk during 1867, in his seventy-eighth year, his wife having died two years previous. The remains of both repose in the cemetery of the new Prospect Church.

Their son Archibald R. was born March 1, 1811, and remained during his boyhood at the home of his parents. He attended first the district school, and later the academy at New Paltz, N. Y., after which for a brief period he engaged in teaching. Soon after he determined to follow the profession of civil engineering, and assisted in 1835 in the survey of a portion of the Erie Railroad. In 1837, in company with a fellow-workman, he started for Chicago in the primitive conveyance known as a jumper, and having, after a tedious trip of forty days, reached his destination, planted the first railroad stake in that now prosperous city.

He returned in 1838, and engaged in preliminary surveys on the Erie Railroad. After a brief period spent in professional occupations, he returned to his native county, and in 1842 embarked in mercantile ventures at Ulsterville. In 1849 he removed to Pine Bush, Crawford township, and continued his business career. He purchased a large tract of land at this point, began the erection of buildings, and became largely identified with the prosperity of this village. He is still a considerable property-holder here, and associated with the business interests of Pine Bush and vicinity. Mr. Taylor was one of the projectors of the Newburgh and Ellenville plank-road, a very prominent thoroughfare, and gave much time and labor to its construction.

In politics he is a Democrat, and served as under-sheriff of the county in 1862. In religion his preference is for the creed and form of worship of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Taylor was married Feb. 16, 1856, to Miss Mary, daughter of John Colwell Rainey, of Crawford. Their children are Archibald, Hamilton R., Emily, Anne, and John C., all, with one exception, residing at home.

HORACE BULL.

William Bull, the great-grandfather of Horace Bull, was an early settler of Hamptonburgh. Among his children was Thomas, who married and became the father of Daniel, whose birth occurred in 1761.

Horace Bull

He was a man of much integrity and force of character, and wielded a considerable influence in the community of which he was a member. In politics he was a staunch Whig, the principles of the party being firmly maintained during his lifetime. In religion he was a Presbyterian, and a member of the church in the township, to whose erection in 1779 he was a generous contributor.

Mr. Bull was, in 1780, united in marriage to Miss Catherine Miller, who became the mother of thirteen children. Her death took place Oct. 1, 1841, in her seventy-seventh year, her husband, who died Nov. 14, 1849, having survived her. Among their children was Henry, whose birth occurred March 21, 1787, and who was married Jan. 4, 1810, to Miss Jane Stitt, who was born April 6, 1789. Their children were Horace (the subject of this biography), Celia (Mrs. Johannis M. Hunter), John S. (deceased), Elmer W. (deceased), Alpheus, Catherine A., Angeline (Mrs. John A. Stitt, deceased), Esther (Mrs. Charles M. Miller), Mary E. (Mrs. S. C. Duryea), William H. (deceased), Daniel K., Sarah L. (deceased), Albert (deceased), and Charles. Henry Bull followed farming occupations during his life, was a Republican in politics, a supporter of the Presbyterian Church, and filled a position of extended usefulness. His death occurred Dec. 1, 1863, and that of his wife Nov. 1, 1857. Their son Horace was born Oct. 17, 1810, and succeeded, partly by purchase and also by inheritance, to the paternal estate. He has during his lifetime been devoted to agricultural employments. He is a firm Republican in his political belief, and a supporter of the Presbyterian Church of his township. He is in no sense a politician, but devoted to the interests of his estate, which absorbs his time.

ELTING FRANCE.

His paternal ancestor, France, came from Germany. His father, John France, resided at Kingston, N. Y., and is said to have manufactured there the first nails made in this country. John France married Sarah, only child of Peter Elting and Sarah De Puy, Oct. 10, 1794. Her father was a large real estate and slave-owner in Ulster County, and died May 25, 1801. His wife, Sarah De Puy, died June 26, 1803, aged seventy-two years. John France died Jan. 21, 1811, and his wife died Nov. 16, 1823.

Elting, son of John France, born June 20, 1800, married Catherine, daughter of Henry Du Bois, a descendant of Louis Du Bois, a native of Artois, France, who came to America and settled in Hurley, Ulster Co., N. Y., in 1660, and was the first Protestant of the name in the New World. He was also a large slave-owner. The second wife of Elting France was Margaret Martin, of Inwood, N. J., whom he married March 17, 1869. Elting France was an active business man for forty-five years. He built and carried on a saw-mill, tannery, and scythe factory in what is now the town of Crawford, Orange County. He was eminently a practical man in his religion and politics, as well as in his business, and few men were more widely known in Ulster and Orange Counties during his time than he. He was earnest in his convictions, and while he sought to induce others to yield to the belief which he held, he had due respect for the opinions of others. He was a man of very temperate habits, and possessed more than ordinary intelligence, which he wielded with all the influence in his power for the good of his fellow-men. He died in the faith of Christ, May 12, 1872.

DANIEL BULL.

The progenitor of the Bull family in Crawford was William Bull, who located at Hamptonburgh. His son Thomas purchased an extensive tract of land embracing seven hundred and fifty acres in the township of Crawford, which was in an entirely unimproved state when acquired by him. His son Daniel, whose birth occurred in 1761, and who is the subject of this biographical sketch, became by inheritance the possessor of this land, having pledged himself to cultivate and improve it. He spent the early years of his life at the home of his parents, improving the limited advantages of the district school during the intervals not devoted to farm labor.

In 1780, when but nineteen years of age, he was united in marriage to Miss Catherine Miller, who was still his junior, the ceremony having been performed at Goshen by Rev. Mr. Carr, of the Protestant Episcopal Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Bull were born thirteen children,—Thomas, who married Sarah Mills; Hannah (Mrs. Alexander Thompson); Abner, married to Maria Brinson; David C., married to Maria Barkley; Keturah (Mrs. William Bull); Catherine (Mrs. James H. Crawford); Mary (Mrs. Rev. John Johnson); Henry, married to Jane Stitt; Milton, married to Esther Crawford; Sarah (Mrs. Denton Mills); Miller; Daniel, married to Sarah Thompson; and John, who died in early life.

Mr. Bull died Nov. 14, 1849, his wife's death having occurred Oct. 1, 1841, in her seventy-seventh year. During a long and well-improved life Daniel Bull maintained a marked character for integrity and probity, and by deeds which speak louder than words placed before his children a conspicuous example of the achievements won by energy and steadfast purpose. The land which he inherited—a vast tract of forest and brush—was, under the magic influence of his industry, made to bud and blossom as the rose.

He was also active and influential in all public enterprises. He was one of the originators of the Newburgh and Cohecton turnpike, and for nearly half a century a director of the organization. The political views of Mr. Bull were in sympathy with the platform of the old Whig party, and these principles found in him an eloquent expounder during his life. In 1779 he contributed generously towards the erection of the earliest Presbyterian church of the township, and was one of its most exemplary members. He was a man of generous impulses, and all deserving causes found in him a cordial helper.

His memory is still affectionately cherished by an extensive family of descendants, a number of whom contribute this portrait as a tribute of their regard.

August Thompson

MR. THOMPSON was one of the representative men of Crawford township, and contributed largely to its business and social development. His life was identified with the homestead at Thompson Ridge, where his birth occurred in 1816. Such advantages as were afforded by the public school of the district were improved by him, after which he decided upon the occupation of a farmer. In this, as in other enterprises which engaged his attention, all the energy and force of his nature were brought to bear. His mind was sound and practical, his judgment clear, and his conclusions rarely at fault.

These natural qualifications made Mr. Thompson invaluable as a counselor in the community and a safe guide in business perplexities. His integrity and capacity rendered his services much in demand in the settlement of estates, while his general and legal information were frequently made available in the drawing of contracts and the writing of wills.

The versatile gifts of Mr. Thompson shone no less conspicuously in public than in private life. He filled the offices both of bank and railroad director, and was one of the bonding commissioners of the township of Crawford until his death. In politics he was an ardent Democrat, though enjoying the confidence and esteem of all parties in an unusual degree. He was supervisor of his township during the years 1849 and 1850, and having been elected justice of the peace in 1865, filled the office during the remainder of his life.

Mr. Thompson was twice married,—first to Miss Hannah, daughter of Abner Bull, of Wallkill; and a second time, to Miss Catherine A. Hunter, of Crown Point. The children who survive him are Alexander, who occupies the homestead; George Hunter, editor of the Middletown Mercury; Augustus, located at the West; and three daughters.

The death of Augustus Thompson occurred Sept. 23, 1874, at the homestead, after a brief illness, in his fifty-eighth year. The following extract from a county paper conveys a just idea of his character and the universal esteem in which he was held:

“Those most intimately associated with him in the neighborly and domestic relations of life loved, honored, and confided in him to the fullest extent. His was the ‘larger and kindlier hand’ which never wearied in well-doing in their behalf. In business concerns, in trouble or sorrow, he was their chosen counselor, comforter, and friend. Here was his noblest work, and here his loss will be most deeply felt. He was a man of broad charities, and an active worker in the church with which he was connected, and as a sincere Christian exemplified in his daily walk the faith that was in him. A marked feature of his character was the sincerity, uprightness, and conscientiousness that ruled his whole life. Who shall fill his place?”

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

WALLKILL is a large and important town lying in the western part of the county. It is bounded north by Crawford and Montgomery, east by Hamptonburgh, south by Goshen, Wawayanda, and Mount Hope, west by Mount Hope and the county line. The area of Wallkill, as shown in the last supervisor's statement, is 40,030 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres. But this is only an approximation to the true area, for the exceptions made by the assessors are numerous, as highways, burial-places, villages, etc. There are no official documents from which to give the exact area of towns in the State of New York. When the present trigonometrical survey of the State shall be completed, if the Legislature will authorize its continuance, there will then be the data for determining many such questions with precision and accuracy.

The territory now embraced in the town of Wallkill was originally in two distinct portions,—one the Minisink Angle, the other a part of the John Evans Patent. In the repatenting of the latter the following tracts were granted :

Daniel Everett and James Stringham, Jan. 16, 1734, 3850 acres.
Joseph Sackett, Sept. 1, 1737, 618 acres.
Richard Gerard and Wm. Bull, Dec. 14, 1724, 1000 acres.
Richard Gerard and Wm. Bull, Dec. 14, 1724, 500 acres.
Thomas Noxon, Dec. 21, 1727, 2000 acres.
James Stringham, July 17, 1736, 1630 acres.
Jane and Alice Colden, Oct. 30, 1749, 1000 acres, near Scotchtown.
David Crawford, James Crawford, Samuel White, James White, May 13, 1761, 1055 acres.
Thomas Ellison and Lawrence Roome, Nov. 12, 1750, 1390 acres.
Jacobus Bruyn and George Murray, Sept. 26, 1750, 4000 acres.
Livingston & Provost, May 26, 1750, 3000 acres.
Thomas Ellison and Lawrence Roome, Nov. 12, 1750, 440 acres.
Daniel Horsmanden and others, 1130 acres (date not ascertained).
Jane and Alice Colden, Oct. 30, 1749, 3000 acres, on the south side of the Shawangunk Kill, opposite Bloomingburgh.
Thomas Ellison and Lawrence Roome, Nov. 12, 1750, 500 acres.
David Crawford, James Crawford, Samuel White, James White, May 13, 1761, 736 acres.

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

The northern and larger portion of this town lies between the Shawangunk River, which forms the boundary line on the northwest, and the Wallkill, which separates the town from Hamptonburgh on the southeast. A little east and north from Crawford Junction may be found the summit which divides between these "river systems." The southern portion of the town extends east of the Wallkill in the vicinity of Phillipsburgh, while on the west the town of Mount Hope extends east of the Shawangunk and takes from Wallkill a portion of that valley.

The surface of the town is undulating, rising at some points into hills of moderate elevation and at others including valuable alluvial lands along the water-courses.

The smaller streams are numerous. An important tributary of the Wallkill rising south of Crawford Junction drains a large tract and unites with the main stream at Phillipsburgh. Northeast of this are several other branches of the Wallkill. The Manyunk's Kill is mostly in this town, but unites with the Wallkill just below, within the town of Montgomery.

In the northwest are several branches of the Shawangunk. In the southwest part of the town are various streams that flow south and unite with the Wallkill beyond the limits of the town. One of these, the Monhagen Creek, is the source from which Middletown is supplied with water. Another forms one of the sources of Rutgers' Creek, a tributary of the Wallkill.

The scenery in this town has many of the attractions that belong to the mountain section of the State, combined however with the gentler features of finely cultivated farms, pleasant rural villages, and charming landscapes. If one wants pure water, clear air, and nature's invigorating breezes, they are all to be found here, while those desiring the wilder depths of the mountains can easily reach them from Middletown.

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The territory now included in Wallkill was not settled as early as that of other towns in the vicinity. The dates of the patents given above range from 1724 to 1761. It is doubtful whether there was any settlement upon them until near the close of that period. The lands were purchased perhaps more largely for speculative purposes, and not reduced to settlement as promptly as those in Montgomery. William Bull, of Goshen, procured a patent in this town, lying east and west, in a long strip on both sides of the Wallkill River, which he gave to his two sons, William and Thomas Bull. William was the ancestor of William, Moses, James, and Charles of a later generation; and Thomas, of Daniel, Cadwallader, and Absalom.

Though the patent was unequally divided by the stream,—there being about 300 acres on the west side and 200 on the east,—yet they divided their rights by the stream; William taking the western, and Thomas the eastern portion.

William built his first house nearly in the vicinity of the brick mansion of his grandson, William Bull, deceased, on the high bank of the Wallkill, and in later years occupied by his widow, Mrs. Keturah Bull.

Thomas built also near the stone house, known as the Cadwallader Bull house, on the road from Goshen to Montgomery.

He afterwards built that stone house. He was a mason by trade; and it is said that for several years previous to erecting it he was engaged in preparing the stone. He kept his hammer in the field, and when disengaged from other business would shape a few stones for the purpose, by which process, continued through several years, the materials were all prepared and ready for the building, so that in the process of erection the sound of a hammer was not heard on the building. The material is limestone, and the work as perfect now as when erected. These two brothers were in the town as early as 1767.

Further south there was an early settlement made by Mr. John McCord, the father of Andrew McCord, Esq., of a later generation, on the farm afterwards owned by Col. Wilbur. The building in which he lived, like that of almost all others at the time, was loopholed for musketry. This family was attacked one night by some Indians, but the neighbors hearing of it, came in time to drive them off and save the family. In the morning a track of blood was found leading in the direction of the high hill directly in the rear of the house, then covered with wood, and it was found that an Indian had been killed. The hill is called "Gerard's Hill," after the name of one of the early patentees.

On the farm owned in modern times by Stephen Harlow, Esq., on McCormick's Kill, there was an ancient flour-mill and an early settlement. At the organization of the town it was owned by Mr. John McNeal. He was connected with another old family by the name of Borland, who resided in that vicinity, the descendants of which were numerous and widely dispersed. Charles Borland, Esq., surrogate of the county, and Col. Charles Borland, of the army who served in Mexico, under Gen. Taylor, were of that family. The original settler was from Ireland. Israel Rogers and Daniel Butterfield lived in that vicinity also.

At the place now known as Phillipsburgh, on the Wallkill, there was an early settlement. The locality belonged to the Wisner family, ancestors of Jeffrey Wisner, Esq., of Warwick, and Henry G. Wisner, Esq., of Goshen. Mr. Moses Phillips married in the family, and received Phillipsburgh along with his wife as a portion of her estate.

The place was known as Hampton in 1806, but from the number of families of the name of Phillips at the location it became changed. It is most beautifully and romantically situated, and is a lovely spot for a country residence. It is on a small level piece of land, on the west bank of the stream, surrounded on all sides by hills and graceful knolls. Mr. Phillips had several sons,—George, Gabriel, William, and Moses,—all active and enterprising men, and engaged at the place in some one of the various departments of manufacture.

In the year 1776, Mr. Phillips and Henry Wisner had a contract with the government of the colony for the manufacture of powder at this place, where they made and furnished it to the satisfaction of the old Congress. On one occasion Mr. Wisner, corresponding with Congress on the subject of powder, said that he had 3000 pounds ready, and remarked that they must excuse his writing, as he had but two half-sheets of paper, and when they were gone he did not know where he could get another, and therefore could not afford to transcribe his letter. This excuse, doubtless, was satisfactory. The family is of German origin, very early in the country, and came from New Jersey into this county.

These two individuals were recommended to Congress as most worthy of the contract by the committee of Ulster County, while Messrs. Wisner and Carpenter were recommended by the committee from Orange. In the latter case, the business was to be conducted at Carpenter's saw-mill, at what is now Salisbury.

The settlement made near Middletown by Mr. Murray was quite early. This gentleman was a descendant of George Murray, of Inverness, Scotland, and came to Canada as an impressed soldier with the English troops to take Quebec, and drive out the French from the colony. In the assault on Quebec by Gen. Wolfe, in 1759, Murray nobly discharged the duty of an English soldier, and afterwards came and settled in this town, giving origin to numerous and respectable families. Mr. A. Spencer Murray, cashier of the Orange County Bank some years ago, is a descendant of this individual.

Another point of early settlement was in the vicinity of Scotchtown. The name of Scotchtown is appropriated to a small cluster of houses in the immediate vicinity of the Presbyterian church, and took its rise as near as we can ascertain from the building of the church. When this was erected and the congregation was organized, the question was asked, "What shall we call the church?" and as there was at that time a number of Scotch families residing in the neighborhood, it was proposed to call the place Scotchtown, and the church was named accordingly. The names of the families were McCarter, McVey, McWhorter, McInnis, McLaughlin, McCord, etc.

This place is on very elevated ground, being nearly 1000 feet above tide-water. A rise of ground upon the farm once owned by Rev. Mr. Baldwin commands a view in every direction of a large part of Orange County, and a portion of Dutchess, which is from twenty to thirty miles distant. The view embraces a perfect amphitheatre, and well repays the labor of a visit.

Of the McInnis family the following anecdote is preserved: Mrs. McInnis was a strong-minded, open-hearted young woman, free and pure as the mountain air of her native Highlands. It is said that after the marriage ceremony had been performed, and she became Mrs. McInnis, her husband informed the clergyman that he had thoughts of emigrating to America, who endeavored to dissuade him by all the off-hand arguments he was possessed of, but all to no purpose. Finding him fixed in his determination to leave the country, and withal a little vexed at his obstinacy and improper appreciation of argument, he turned from him, and addressing himself to Mrs. McInnis, said,—

“If your husband goes, as I fear he will, you ought not to go with him, but stay at home.”

To this she replied in fervent strains, dictated by her feelings fresh gushing from the heart,—“Sir, you have just united us for weal or woe and for life, and will you be the first to break the bonds yourself have made? I will follow him, sir, if he goes to the ends of the earth.”

The clergyman stood rebuked by the strong affection of the Scottish maid, and the argument closed. Though hard and trying to the feelings it may have been, yet this new-married couple soon left for America, and with others stamped the impress of their native land upon the hill-tops of this, never to be effaced.

Peter McLaughlin, one of the settlers mentioned above, died March 1, 1804, in the seventieth year of his age. In him society lost a valuable member, as he was a truly pious and honest man.

The White family, though early in the country, are not old settlers in this town. The ancestor, James White, who came to this country from Ireland, located in Montgomery as early as 1741, near the town line of Wallkill. Maj. John White, of this town, was a descendant, and removed here after the Revolution, when this part of the town was yet a wilderness. The first house erected was just east and south of the subsequent residence of Mr. Andrew White, on the north bank of Manyunk's Kill. This is a small stream that runs easterly through the farm and enters the Wallkill. It furnishes a small water-power at some points of its course.

There was also an early settlement made at Campbell Hall, on the Otter Kill. This was known by that name as early as 1767.

Adjoining Campbell Hall, and a little further down the road east, Samuel Watkins located at an early period and made an extensive settlement.* This gentleman was of English origin; the family—consisting of several brothers—emigrated to New England, and four of their children removed to this county. They were in this town in 1767. Their names were Samuel, Ephraim, Joseph, and Hezekiah. The Rev. Hezekiah Watkins, mentioned in the history of St. George's Church, Newburgh, was an uncle of these four brothers. A small portion of the original purchase is still in the possession of the family descendants.

Still further east the Faulkner family made an early settlement. From Campbell Hall down, including these settlements, the land is beautiful, and richly compensates the cultivator.

George F. Reeve, of this town, had the honor of inventing the dog power somewhere between 1820 and 1824. Though this is a small affair, yet it is a happy application of mechanical power to relieve household labor in the manufacture of butter. Had he lived in ancient times he would have been decreed a public benefactor, or the nation would have erected a monument to his memory. Services not half so valuable have deified many an individual, and sent him down to posterity as an immortal being.

Andrew McCord was a plain, unostentatious farmer, who, by a long course of honest industry, and intelligent discharge of private and public duties, endeared himself to all his fellow-citizens with whom he became acquainted. As the legitimate consequence of a virtuous private life, offices of honor and high trust were conferred upon him, which he discharged with fidelity and to the satisfaction of his constituents. Mr. McCord belonged to the Republican party in politics, and was elected to Congress in 1803. After his term was out, his political friends were so well pleased with his conduct that they elected him in 1805 to the State Legislature, and continued him in 1806 and 1807. The last year he served in that office he was elected speaker of the House,—no small compliment to his general character at that early day.

Isaac Mills was a prominent citizen of this town. He was a son of Ebenezer Mills, who came from Mills' Pond, L. I., to Orange County in 1787, coming up the river in a sloop to New Windsor and across the county on foot to Wallkill. The son, Isaac Mills, was born March 5, 1788, and married Clarissa Hulse in 1816. His son, Andrew J. Mills, was a member of the Legislature in 1854 and 1855.†

Israel Green was an early settler of Wallkill, and owned (as shown elsewhere) the principal part of Middletown along Main Street. One of the family is understood to have settled in Mount Hope during the Revolutionary war. The wife of Israel Green is said to have been carried in her mother's arms when a child in a flight across the Shawangunk Mountains, the Indians being in hot pursuit. The child cried very much, but being obliged to hide under a log which the Indians soon after passed, the child ceased to cry, and they were not discovered. Charles S. Green, Esq., married Mary Woodward, sister of Ambrose Woodward.

* Now Hamptonburgh.

† See Mount Hope.

David Moore was an early settler on the present place of Samuel Tryon, between Middletown and Phillipsburgh. He was there probably some years before the Revolution. Of his children, William settled in Mount Hope; David, Jr., died in early life; Wilmot (father of Emmet Moore, now residing in Middletown) settled in Dolsentown; Walter in Wallkill, on his father's homestead; and there were also four daughters,—Mrs. Wickham, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Treadwell, Mrs. Seeley.

A case of poetical talent at an early age is connected with the history of this family. Walter Moore, probably a brother of David Moore, Sr., died May 16, 1768, aged thirteen years, six months, and twelve days. The year before, during a time of mortality and sickness, he composed quite a number of poetical pieces of a religious character, the versification in many of them being of easy flow and of genuine poetic feeling. A collection of them in possession of Mr. Emmet Moore, Middletown, was printed in 1769, but the name of the publisher is not given.

Samuel Mapes was an early settler at what is now Howell's Depot. He was from Long Island, and undoubtedly settled here some years before the Revolution. He bought 650 acres. His children were Samuel, Jr., Smith, Seth, Enos, Erastus, Selah, Cyrus H., and Mrs. Jesse Carpenter. A son of Samuel, Jr., resides at Howell's, and Mr. N. B. Mapes, merchant and station agent, is a grandson of Enos. N. B. Mapes has in his possession two old deeds: one from George Duncan to Daniel and Samuel Mapes, bearing date Sept. 5, 1763; the other from Daniel Mapes and Samuel Mapes to John Brewster; each for the same tract of land,—240 acres,—but the bounds given have so little reference to natural features that it can scarcely be decided whether the tract was at Howell's or further east in Orange County; the precinct in which the parties lived is not stated. The homestead of Samuel Mapes, Sr., was the present place of Walter Tuttle.

The Moore tract mentioned above was bought in connection with the Wickham purchase. The whole included the present Samuel Tryon farm, the present George Wickham farm, and quite a portion of what is now Middletown village. The field notes of the original survey are in possession of Mr. George Wickham. The tract comprised about 1120 acres and was surveyed "Tuesday, the 13th of April, 1742," by "Mr. Clinton." At the close of the survey Mr. Clinton makes the following remark: "The chief fault yt can be found with all ye tract is the stoneyness of it." It was lot No. 35, in the Minisink Angle.

Samuel Wickham came from Southhold, L. I., and settled in East Division, Goshen, June, 1740. He was the first of the name in the county, but was soon followed by his nephew (among others), William Wickham, a long time judge in this county.

Samuel Wickham's children were Samuel (father of Israel H. Wickham, who was the father of S. S.

Wickham, of Middletown), and William (father of Mrs. David Reeve, and grandfather of O. P. Reeve and Mrs. B. W. Shaw). Some years before the Revolution he, in connection with David Moore, bought lot 35 of the Minisink Angle, settled three of his children upon it,—Samuel where Mrs. Babcock now lives (corner of Main Street and Academy Avenue), Israel where John Baird now lives (corner of Main Street and Grand Avenue), and Jerusha (Wells) where John Gardiner now lives.

Israel H. Wickham was born in 1741, and was a tailor by trade. His wife was Elizabeth Carpenter, of Goshen. The deed from his father is dated 1769, and it may be inferred he came to Middletown about that time. He served for a time when only sixteen years old in the French war, going to Fort Edward. He was the owner of several slaves, setting them free at the age of eighteen and twenty-one years. Among these was "Abel," who was well known and respected. Israel Wickham had two children,—Abigail, who died unmarried, and Israel, Jr., born September, 1773. The latter married Mary Moore, and settled first two miles north of Middletown, but five years later moved to Middletown, and bought a farm now occupied in part by the Monhagen Mills and Hillside Cemetery.

He died in 1821, leaving five children,—Benjamin C., Joseph, Israel H., George, and Abigail.

Israel H. was the father of George Wickham, now residing at Middletown.

When Samuel Wickham and wife commenced in Goshen they sawed all the boards used in the first house with a pit saw,—he on the log and she in the pit.

David Moore, who bought in connection with Samuel Wickham, came on to his land before the French war, and made a beginning where Thomas E. Hulse now lives, but was compelled to abandon it for a time.

Samuel Bull, Sr., settled on the homestead which Robert Boak now owns. He was a blacksmith, and is said to have been employed upon the chain used in the obstruction of the Hudson River during the Revolution. His children were Samuel, the well-known citizen of Circleville; Benjamin, who moved to Ohio; Oscar, who remained on the old farm for many years; and Phebe, who died unmarried.

Silas, son of Silas Horton, was born in Goshen, Aug. 24, 1756; married Mary Danes in 1777, and settled in Wallkill about 1780. His farm is near what is known as Rockville. The Wallkill Old-School Baptist church was built upon it. He, though young, like his father, was truly patriotic, and signed the pledge of independence for the colonies in 1775.

His children were Silas Danes, died in 1850; Barnabas, died in 1867; Hiram, died in 1840; Nelly, married Timothy Wheat; Molly, married Israel Moore, and afterwards Daniel Slauson; Mahala, married William Wheat, and is the only child now living (1880).

He died in 1816, but his wife lived many years after his death on the same farm with her son Barnabas. They, with some others, were buried upon the farm, which spot was always recognized as a burying-ground until this year. After Barnabas died the farm was sold to George E. Beakes, but it was owned by the Hortons about ninety years. Timothy W. Horton, a son of Barnabas, owns and lives upon the adjoining farm, known as the Vinson Clark farm.

At an early date two brothers, Thomas and Samuel Brinson, settled in the north part of the town. After many years Thomas sold his farm to Abner Bull, who had married his only daughter, Maria. It contained 244 acres, and was long known as the best farm in this section. Mr. Bull died in 1857, leaving his widow and the following children: Mrs. Charles Mills, of Millsburgh; Mrs. William D. Hurtin, of Circleville; Sarah, never married, died in 1860; Mrs. William Gale, of Rahway, N. J.; and one son, Thomas, who died in 1871. The farm is owned by Henry A. Shaw. Samuel's farm contained 318 acres. He sold it to Boltis Moore, of New York, who used it as a summer resort. At his death Mrs. Mary Hill bought it of his heirs. She divided it into two parts for her sons, William and Robert, reserving ten acres, upon which she built a stately mansion in 1856. Previous to this she had married Jacob M. Shorter. She spared neither money nor labor to make the place attractive, yet her poor health gave her but little opportunity to enjoy it. During her life she caused many marks of remembrance to be made. She built the first Methodist church and parsonage at Bullville at her own expense; also expended much upon the burying-ground adjoining her estate. While the house was being built the place received the name "Pierce Valley," and is known as such to some extent now. Mrs. Shorter died in 1872, leaving the beautiful home to her daughter Emma, who married Edwin Parmelee, of Newburgh. They occupy it now. William's farm is now owned by Mrs. Brinkerhoff. Henry L. Haight bought Robert's, and lives upon it. These farms are one and a half miles from Circleville.

Millsburgh is a ridge of land running from Scotchtown towards Bullville, and was bought by Jacob Mills, of Little Britain. This wild tract of land consisted of 1700 acres; his grandsons own the most of it now; he lived upon it many years, and built several houses for his sons.

His children were Jonathan, lived near Bloomingburgh; Samuel, lived where his son Albert now lives; Jacob, lived at Scotchtown; Hezekiah D., lived at Walkkill; Wickham, moved to Long Island; Charles, of Millsburgh, died from a fall; Mrs. Thomas Bull, whose husband owned and founded Bullville; Mrs. Jonathan Hawkins, of Hamptonburgh; Mrs. John Gale, of Milo; Catharine, never married; Mrs. Samuel White, Scotchtown.

The only survivor of this family is Hezekiah D., who is now eighty-seven years old. He has lived under every President; was a captain during the war of 1812; lives upon the farm he has owned over sixty years. His youngest son lives with him; his other children are Mrs. James White, of Scotchtown; Harrison, of Crawford; Nathan J., of Circleville; and Mrs. Ira H. Coleman, of Seneca Co., N. Y.

Not many years after Walkkill was formed Mr. Taylor, of New York City, bought a patent of 700 acres. James Morrison and Henry Patterson bought the greater part of this, and lived upon their farms many years. Morrison sold his farm to Phineas Hulse and moved West. Hulse sold it in 1849 to Nathan J. Mills, who owns and occupies it now. When Henry Patterson died his farm was bought by William D. Hurtin, and is now owned by his heirs.

These farms adjoin the "Honey Pot" farm, also the "Bush" farm, which is now Circleville.

Patterson's family is still represented in Orange County, as the following will show. His children were Mrs. David Linderman; Alexander, who never married; Mrs. Peter Sears, of Coldenham; Mrs. John B. Cox, of Middletown, who died Dec. 4, 1880, leaving two sons and two daughters in Middletown; John, married Arietta Bull, of Walkkill (he was killed by the cars); Sally, who never married; James M., who died in California; Henry, who married Catharine Harris, of Randall's Island (her grandfather owned the island). He lives in Harlem, and is seventy-nine years old, the youngest and last of the family.

Moses Bull married Dolly Moore, July 20, 1795, and soon after settled upon a farm in the eastern part of Walkkill. He had twelve children. Rev. Ralph Bull, of Westtown, was his son. His children were Mrs. Sophia Bell, of Geneva; Mrs. John Patterson, who died in 1866; Elijah and Elisha (twins), 1817-1870; Ralph, who died in 1877; Mrs. Marianne Cozzens, of Middletown; Mrs. Moses McMonagle, of Walkkill; Caroline and Katharine, twins (Katharine died 1829, aged twenty-one years; Caroline married Charles McMonagle); Mrs. Hezekiah Conner, who died in 1836; Mrs. Charles Conner, who died in 1880; and Mrs. John H. McWilliams, living near Circleville.

Marianne was a teacher nine years; in 1822 taught where Moses J. Winfield now lives. Moses Bull died in 1848, his wife in 1855; both were buried in the Scotchtown Cemetery. Harvey R. Roe now owns and lives upon the farm.

Mrs. Cozzens locates "Three-Mile Hill" as running south from near her father's place. It was an Indian path (so called), and was exactly three miles to the Walkkill River. She remembers having traversed the path many times, in quest of berries, when a child. It was a hard, well-beaten path. She also remembers that during the war of 1812 some "squatters" came upon a portion of land (three miles long and of various widths) lying between her father's and the neighbors' farms (no patent claimed it); they took out quit-claim deeds, and have always held it. Davis-town is upon a part of it.

The following additional memoranda were furnished by Miss Sarah E. Wilkison. Before the Revolution William Carpenter moved from Goshen to a farm near Van Burenville; only a small spot was cleared, and for miles east of it there was only a foot-path through the woods. He was in the war, and often his wife was obliged to bury her dishes and such articles as she valued, take her children, and flee to Goshen to escape the Indians. After the war he and his family usually attended meeting at Goshen, always going on foot, only nine miles. His children were William, died in 1875; Benjamin, now living in Wisconsin; Mrs. Jacob Mills, lived near Westtown; Mrs. Eber Mapes, died at Middletown, 1869; Eleanor, never married; William, lived upon the homestead, had twelve children, who married and settled near him. His son Joel now owns and lives upon the farm which has been owned by the Carpenters over one hundred and ten years.

Peter Hoyt, another early settler, married for his second wife Mrs. Mary Vail, the mother of Mrs. William Carpenter, Jr. He had the following children: John, Archibald, Peter, now living in New Jersey, Mrs. Jeremiah Cox, Mrs. Alex. Bell, and Joel, who retained the old farm and died in April, 1861, his wife living only two weeks longer. The farm is now owned and occupied by his only son, Samuel D. Hoyt.

Daniel Darby was born in Newburgh, May, 1799, came to Wallkill in 1823, married Julia, daughter of William Carpenter; he lives near Van Burenville. In 1841 he was town collector, had $3807.45 to collect, including his fees at three per cent. He went on horseback to every tax-payer; it took him seven weeks to collect the sum. This year (1881) the tax to be collected in Wallkill is $81,907.33.

Vinson Clark moved from Long Island upon a farm of 153 acres, now owned by Timothy W. Horton, about the same time that others spoken of came into this town. He built the house which T. W. Horton remodeled in 1872, about eighty years ago. He kept store and tavern over forty years. He made a great business of raising hemp and flax. Mrs. Clark braided straw for hats and sent it to New York. In this way she helped to accumulate a good fortune. As years passed on he had a blacksmith, wagon-maker, cooper, and shoemaker-shops. His place and business was much like Van Burenville. At his death, in 1839, he owned three or four other farms in this town. His children were William, died in 1832; John, died in 1872; Patience, married three times, now living in Wisconsin, and is the widow of the Rev. Mr. Clark; Oliver, died in 1845; Mrs. Lewis Bell, of Bull Hack, died in 1871; Thomas (deceased); Vinson J., died in Waymark, Pa.; Hector, died October, 1832, and was the first person buried in the family yard on the farm; James S. (deceased).

William and Daniel Clark, of Scotchtown, are sons of Oliver Clark, and grandsons of Vinson Clark.

Daniel Moore owned a farm about a mile west of Wallkill meeting-house; he built a hotel upon it, and sold the property to Isaac B. Everett, who had married his daughter Maria. Everett kept the first hotel, Joshua and Thomas Gale the first store, Marcus Hunter and Barnabas Masters the wagon-maker shop; William Moore, blacksmith-shop; Lewis Everett, shoemaker-shop. This was a great business place; teams from Sullivan County, loaded with lumber, hides, bark, etc., made it a stopping-place, often twenty-five remaining over-night. The stage passed through the place on its way to Bloomingburgh.

A post-office was established, and Christian Shons named the place "Van Burenville," it being just after Martin Van Buren was elected President. Isaac B. Everett was the first and only postmaster. This place is about three miles north of Howell's, and when the railroad reached that place the post-office was soon removed to Howell's.

The opening of the North plank-road was another blow to the place; the stage-route was changed, and business decreased very fast. Walter Gregory bought the whole property; kept the hotel only a short time, when it was given up. The buildings are entirely gone; a single farm-house and a school-house are all that is left to call Van Burenville.

Walter Gregory was murdered in his own house, Sept. 14, 1865, by Henderson, a man from Ohio, who had been selling pictures through the neighborhood and knew that Gregory drew a sum of money from the bank on that day. The murderer was hung at Goshen, and it is said this was the only murder ever committed in Wallkill. The farm is now owned by his son, William Gregory.

John Williams owned the farm adjoining the Horton and Clark farms, near the Wallkill meeting-house. He and some of his family were buried upon the farm over forty-five years ago; the farm has been sold several times, and the burial-spot is almost forgotten. James L. Carpenter now owns and lives upon the farm.

On the farm of Stephen Sayre, now owned by John Ralston, about one-half mile west of Van Burenville, is a neglected and almost forgotten burying-ground; about fifty children and a few adults were buried there. Isaac B. Everett, spoken of at Van Burenville, has ten children buried in this pasture-field. It has not been recognized as a graveyard in over forty years.

Elisha R. King owned a farm on the North plank-road, about four miles northwest of Middletown. In 1862 he built a hotel, and at the raising of the building Joseph Kernochan named the place "Fair Oaks," it being soon after that battle, and was a very appropriate name. Since then it has become a station upon the Midland Railroad. The hotel is now owned by M. S. Askew; through his efforts a post-office has been established, and his son Matthew is postmaster.

In 1787, James Houston, of Neelytown, a son of Rev. Joseph Houston, the first minister of Goodwill Church, near Montgomery, bought a tract of over 300 acres in the southeastern part of Wallkill, and settled his son George upon it. George cultivated the land and made as rapid improvements as possible, having slaves to assist him. He married Jane Hunter, of Dwaars Kill, Ulster Co., for his first wife. She died in 1801. In 1796 the church was organized at his house, and he gave three acres of land for the church and graveyard. A meeting-house was built this same year, and at the raising of the building Cornelius McLaughlin, who lived on the farm now owned by Thomas Nelson, named the place Scotchtown, because so many Scotch people were in the new congregation. Besides assisting to organize a church, giving the land, and donating liberally for the building, Mr. Houston aided the Rev. Methuselah Baldwin in buying a farm of 140 acres, now owned by George Wallace. Upon these conditions Mr. Baldwin accepted the call made him, and became the first pastor of the church. The reader can plainly see that George Houston was the first and real founder of the village now known as Scotchtown. The burial-place of slaves is the spot now occupied by the church-sheds. Mr. Houston engaged in many enterprises for public good, spending both time and money. He died in December, 1825, leaving fourteen children, viz.: Mrs. Samuel Brown (died near Scotchtown in 1854); John G., who remained upon the homestead; James, died in Montgomery; Robert H., born August, 1798, is now and has been a resident of Middletown since April, 1826. A portion of the village is built upon his farm; he has only one child, David D., who, with his family, lives at home. George, died in Middletown, was justice of the peace many years; Anthony and Jane (twins). Anthony died in Middletown. D. Crawford Houston, a graduate of West Point, is his son. Jane married Charles Heard; died in Hamptonburgh. Henry lived in Mechanictown many years; died there. Mrs. Hector Van Cleft lives in Middletown; is the mother of J. L. Van Cleft (postmaster). Samuel died in 1828, Theodore in 1837. Mrs. Orange H. Horton lives at White Plains, Westchester County. Mrs. William Church lives in Orange, N. J. Thomas died at Toledo, but was a resident of Cincinnati.

James Boak was born in 1772; married Achsah, a sister of Capt. John and a niece of Col. Wm. Faulkner. They lived at Keisertown, and he built what is now known as Crans' still-house. In 1802 he bought 50 acres of John Puff, where Amos H. Gillen now lives, near Fair Oaks. He lived in a small log house on the same spot where the dwelling-house now stands. It was surrounded by a dense forest of large trees, some one hundred feet high. Mrs. Boak being afraid the trees would blow down upon the house, had the tops of many of them tied together, thinking to lessen the danger. In 1804 he exchanged his 50 acres with Elias Bailey for 50 acres (now about one mile from Circleville), then bought more of Isaac Denman, having about 141 acres in all. In 1836 he moved to Scotchtown, leaving his son Robert upon the homestead. He occupies it now, having bought an adjoining farm of Oscar Bull in 1875; now owns 228 acres, extending from Guinea to Fair Oaks. James Boak died in May, 1852, his wife in 1860. He had the following nine children (five are now living): John, born in 1799, died in Scotchtown in 1836; Mrs. John E. Brewster, died in Scotchtown in 1870; Lettie (not married), died in 1825; Robert, born 1806, lives upon the homestead, has one son living,—one son died in the late war; Mrs. John Youngblood, near Franklin Square, died in 1877; Melinda (single), lives at Scotchtown; Lucinda (single), lives at Scotchtown; James, lives near Scotchtown, has two sons; Emily (single), lives at Scotchtown.

In 1780, Henry, son of Jacob Linderman, of the town of Montgomery, bought 120 acres in Wallkill of Gilbert Willett, paying one pound per acre. It was almost a wilderness, although two log houses were upon the place, each near a good spring. He married Sarah Shaw, and lived upon the farm many years; he cultivated the land, built buildings, and lived to see his farm become valuable. He was justice of the peace forty years. In 1836 his son, Henry S., bought the homestead, and occupies it now. His father, having married the second time, moved to Bloomingburgh, where he died in 1844, aged eighty years; his first wife died in 1831, aged sixty-four years. He had ten children, of whom four are now living, as follows: David, died in Sullivan Co. in 1866; John (physician), died in Pennsylvania in 1875,—he had three sons who filled prominent positions; Henry R., a director of the U. S. Mint many years, died in Washington; Garrett, now an extensive coal-dealer at Mauch Chunk, Pa., married a daughter of Asa Packer; Albert B., is now engaged in the project of draining the "Everglades" in Florida; Willett, a lawyer, was district attorney of Ulster County for thirteen years, dead; Peter, moved to Michigan in 1836 and died there; Mrs. Robert Thompson, dead; Mrs. Thomas J. Emmons, lives in New York City; Dolly, not married, lives in New York City; Henry S., lives upon the homestead, was born in 1807; James O., lived and died in Kingston, was county judge of Ulster County ten years; Sally Jane, not married, lives in New York City. This farm is about two miles northwest of Circleville.

Henry Weller was born in Germany; on his passage to America both his parents died; he was then about nine years old. When he landed in New York the German consul took charge of him and his property, put him out until he became of age, then gave him his property, and with it he came into what is now Crawford, and purchased about 300 acres of land, which is in part owned by his descendants. He married Elinor, youngest daughter of William Bull and Sarah Wells, who was born in 1745. They had six children,—Henry, William, Absalom, Hiram, Esther, and Catharine,—all are dead. There is only one of the third generation living (Mrs. Alice Robbins, of Windham, Conn.), except some of Absalom's children.

In the year 1800, Matthew Rowe, of Montgomery, purchased 100 acres of land from Frederick Traver, in the north part of Wallkill, now on the line of Crawford, and gave it to his daughter, Elizabeth, who had married Absalom Weller, and they settled upon the tract, it being then a wilderness. Mr. Weller rapidly improved his farm, and took several premiums on farm products at the agricultural fairs held in Goshen in 1820, 1821; and in 1822, "for best potatoes planted in rows, and measured 275 bushels per acre," he received eight dollars premium. He had twelve children, eight are now living: Leartus M., born January, 1801, lives upon the homestead; Milton, lives in Middletown; Mrs. Albert Dickinson, Middletown; Mrs. William Dickinson, lives in New Haven, Conn., and her daughter is the wife of ex-Governor Jewell, of Connecticut; Mrs. William Conkling, Middletown; Alpheus and Theodorus (twins); Alfred, lives in town of Crawford.

Mr. Weller died October, 1827; his wife, April, 1851. He had set apart a burial-ground upon his farm, to be known as the "Weller burying-ground." The first person buried in the yard was his daughter Margaret, May 21, 1813. The bodies lying there now are Absalom Weller, wife, four children, and two children of Leartus M. Weller. The yard is carefully kept up, and is designed as the resting-place for the family.

Before 1800, James Bingham came from Windham, Conn., and bought ten acres of Jonathan Coddington, in the northwestern part of the town of Wallkill. It is now owned by John Green. Bingham was a cooper, and he worked at his trade. His wife, Althea Parish, also came from Connecticut, and understood the care of the silk-worm and the manufacture of silk, so Mr. Bingham planted a mulberry-orchard, and procured some worms from Connecticut, and for some years gave it considerable attention. Mrs. Bingham spun the silk for use,—one year had over three hundred skeins. In 1822-24, James Bingham took the premium for "best sewing-silk" at the agricultural fair, Goshen, and received five dollars each year. Some of his neighbors attempted to keep the silk-worms, but found it too much care, so the business was wholly abandoned after a few years. James Bingham died June, 1844; his wife, August, 1854. They had only three children, now living, and all over seventy years of age. Anna married Benjamin Woodward; lives at Burlingham. B. C. Woodward, merchant in Middletown, Sullivan Co., is their son. Abigail P. married Lucius L. Woodward, both living, residents of Middletown many years. Margaret K., not married, lives with her sister in Burlingham.

On the line of Crawford, in Wallkill, Benjamin Creaderrick owned a farm of two hundred and thirty-four acres. He lived in a log house, and had a triphammer shop. About 1810 he sold his farm to Nathan, son of Birdsey Young, of Blooming-Grove. Mr. Young had to go to New York and get his money changed into gold and silver, as Creaderrick refused to take any paper money. He married Margaret Thompson, of Crawford. They had six children, of whom five are now living,—Mrs. William Cross, lives in Crawford, aged seventy-eight years; Andrew T., owns an adjoining farm of one hundred and twenty-two acres, but he lives in Circleville, aged seventy-six years; Elizabeth, not married, lives in Circleville; Isaac and Birdsey, twins (Birdsey died in 1841, aged thirty years; Isaac, M.D., lives in New York City); Mrs. Andrew Mills, lives in Englewood, N. J.

Mrs. Young died in 1845, after which he married Mrs. Tompkins and had three sons,—Nathan, Orville, and Birdsey. They live upon the farm now. Mr. Young was born in 1782, and died in 1855.

On the Vinson Clark farm, now owned by T. W. Horton, there was a block-house built for a protection from the Indians during the Revolutionary war.

McCorlin's Kill is a stream rising in Crawford, takes a southerly course, and empties into the Wallkill near W. Mackinson's. Harvey Roe's saw-mill is upon this stream. As early as 1760 John McNeal, who lived where John Harlow now lives, had a grist-mill upon it, and it is asserted that that was the first grist-mill in Wallkill.

Baldwin's Hill is on George Wallace's farm, west of his house and north of the Scotchtown parsonage; it took its name from Methuselah Baldwin, who once owned it. It is said to be the highest point of land in Orange County. The view from it is very grand. The visitor can look into six counties, two States, and upon many villages, besides a fine view of the Shawangunk Mountains.

The first real tavern in Scotchtown was kept by William Connor, but long before this Patrick Bodle kept one where J. Denton Mills lives, and another, by — Owens, on the road to Circleville, where J. Swezey lives.

Many years previous to the Revolutionary war — McCormick, the great-grandfather of Mrs. Daniel G. Gibb, of Circleville, purchased of Cadwallader Colden (through Brinson, his agent) a tract of land of 200 acres, wholly covered with dense forest, for the paltry sum of one shilling per acre. He built a log house and cleared some land; but after a time he sold it to John Smith, and he sold to Henry Smith, who made many improvements, building a stone house, also a cider- and still-house, which still remain and are well known. He must have sold some of his land to those owning the adjoining farms, as the farm now comprises only 140 acres. In 1847, Joseph Kernochan, of Crawford, bought the farm for $49 per acre; owns and occupies it now. It could not be bought to-day for $80 per acre. This farm is about one and one-quarter miles west of Circleville, on the direct road to Bloomingburgh.

RECOLLECTIONS OF JONATHAN WILKISON.*

The first that I can remember was when I was about eight years old. My father's name was Jonathan. He married Phibe Barber. They had ten children. I was the youngest son, so they called me after my father's name. They once lived in Rahway, N. J., and I think were born there. I was born near Bellvale, Warwick, July 20, 1783, and lived there until the fall after I was eight years old. My father was a miller, and in the fall of 1791 he and my mother came to visit my sister Polly, who married Robert Osborne. They lived in a log house, about a mile from where Mount Johnson stands. The Bloomingburgh mill was unoccupied,—it was then called Oliver's mill,—they being in custody at Kingston, charged with burning another mill, about three miles from theirs, and as court had just adjourned when the deed was committed, they had to wait until next term, which was one year. They offered the mill to my father, and he decided to take it, so they came home, and as soon as they could make arrangements for moving we started. I remember just how the country looked. We came through Goshen; below there the country was more settled than we found it on the west side, but it was nothing like it is now. Where you will now see fine buildings with beautiful surroundings, then there was a log house, standing in the woods, if there was a good spring there. In those days people were very particular in building to have a good spring of water near the door—wells were not thought of. We started very early in the morning. The first day we came as far as Squire Morrison's. He lived on the farm where Nathan J. Mills now lives, in a log house, close by the road, in front of that old house that they tore down last summer (1871). They were very kind-hearted people, but I suppose they are all dead. How well I remember about the fire. It was a cool, chilly day, and the great old-fashioned fireplace was full of good wood, as then wood was no object; the more they could use the better, as the country was so thickly wooded they wanted to clear the land.

The next morning we started on our journey. We were now to the end of the road. The next farm was Henry Patterson's. They lived in a log house, nearly half a mile from the main road. James Morrison built a frame house two years after, and in about two years more Henry Patterson built a frame house on the cross-road. Morrison's house was used until 1871. Patterson's is still used by Wm. D. Hurtin as a wagon-house.

For the next five miles we had to go by marked trees. After we had gone about a mile we thought we were wrong, and seeing a log house at a short distance, my sister Katie went to get a guide. We followed the guide and passed a few log houses, but I have forgotten who lived in them—not one of them is standing. We reached our home at Bloomingburgh nearly night. It was a log house, on the place where Thompson Sherer now lives. I can remember about my father tending the mill, and of seeing women come with their bags of grain on horseback, as wagons were very scarce, and the roads not fit for wagon traveling. In those days people went to meeting, mill, and market on horseback. We stayed at this mill only one year, then we moved where Jarvis Purdy now lives. My father built a new log house on that place, and it was considered rather a fine house. I remember hearing my father and the neighbors talk about the war, what hardships they endured, and of their going to Warwick when Washington was to pass through there. Everybody was anxious to bow to Washington, as he was looked upon as the best of the earth.

In those days stoves were not used, and people had to keep fire all night. They had no matches, so if the fire went out they would have to go perhaps a mile before they found some one who had fire. The first stove brought into the neighborhood caused as much excitement as an earthquake would in these days. James Wooden had the first stove I ever saw, and it would be considered quite a show if one of them could be seen now. The women were much opposed to using the new machine. They were sure they would never like them, as the old way was good enough. They knew they could get a meal much sooner by cooking the meat in a long-handled pan on some coals, and hang the old iron tea-kettle on the crane. As for baking, no better way could be found than to use the tin oven before a good fireplace.

I well remember when Washington was President. When he died in 1799 everybody mourned as if he had lost his best friend. When the paper came that announced his death, it was lent from neighbor to neighbor until all had read the account. I can now see how the paper looked,—it was much smaller than most papers are now, and had broad black lines drawn around the margin. Of course there was no such time as when any great man dies now, for there were not so many people, and very few newspapers. People had very little money, and they were obliged to waste no time, as they provided for their families by the hardest kind of labor. I remember distinctly when all the Presidents have been elected. My first vote was given when Thomas Jefferson was elected for the second term. I do not think I ever missed my vote until I was eighty-seven years old, then I was too feeble to go so far.

People worked hard in those days. Men cut wood, peeled bark, etc. The tan and currier business was a great trade, but people worked slower and better than now, for it took seven years to tan leather, and now that many hours will almost complete the work; but compare the leather and you will find a very different article,—not so good as in old times. We raised our flax; the women would have carding frolics, when probably all the women for miles would help each other; then they would put the flax in a pillow-case and some one would go around with it, each person taking enough to spin warp for a yard. A day would be appointed to bring it home, then they would have what was called a "spinning frolic;" a hundred might be present, have a good supper, dancing, and what was termed a good time. Cotton cloth was hardly used; only in calico and fine muslin. Every one wore linen clothes in summer, but they made woolen clothes for winter use. The whole work of manufacturing cloth from wool was done at home.

The great eclipse was in June; it was dark about two hours. The roosters crowed; the hens went to roost. We were hoeing corn. It was so cold during the time that we put on our coats and made up a good fire. It was in the forenoon. We had to light the candles, although many used pine-knots in place of candles; they gave a very brilliant light. Lamps would have been thought too dangerous for use.

I was married in 1805 in a frame house, but had never lived in one. That house is yet standing. John Ellis owns it now. An addition has been built to it, but the same old room is there, and it stands in the same place. After I was married we lived in a log house near Mount Johnson. The house is gone. Two pear-trees are living which stood near the door. The first frame house that I ever lived in is the house in which Jarvis Purdy lives (burned in 1880). It has been improved some in size and looks, but I built the main building. My parents were living in the log house that my father built when I was a small boy, on the same farm. The old log houses are all gone, only one. William Kirk lives in one I built and lived in about five years. When I built my first frame house the timber was all prepared from my own farm. I did all the work, with the help of my two eldest children, who were quite young; but in those days every child worked as soon as they were large enough. The old neighbors are all gone; not even the children are left in their parents' places. At one time in our neighborhood lived families by the names of Rumph, Stump, Jump, Quick, and Ketcham, in the order that I have named them.

Cattle-raising at one time was quite a business, although you could then buy a good cow for from eight to sixteen dollars, and yokes of oxen were sold for thirty to forty-five and fifty dollars. One day a man came to me and wished to buy a yoke of cattle I had for sale. I asked him forty-five dollars for them. He would not give it, so he went away. He came again in a few days, and I asked him fifty dollars for them. He went away as before, came again next day. I asked him fifty-five dollars. He again went as he came; came back the third time. I asked him sixty dollars. I told him if he wished them he better take them, as I should raise five dollars every time he came and went without them, so he took them at the last-named price. I received fifteen dollars more than my first price.

In my boyhood I attended meeting at the Old Hopewell Church, Jonathan Freeman pastor. We usually went on horseback, one horse often carrying two persons. In the year 1810 my wife and I united with the Scotchtown Church. Methuselah Baldwin was pastor. The parsonage was burned twice. The first time all the church records were lost in the fire, and the second time nearly all of those left were burned. The first time we returned our names, but the next time we lived in Goshen and neglected to do so. We afterwards united at Circleville.

In the cold summer of 1816 we had frost every month in the year. When we planted corn we would build up a fire of stumps to warm our fingers. We wore our great-coats to work in the hay. The swathes would be white in the morning with frost. There was no fruit nor berries. I knew of but one piece of corn that ripened. Winter grain was an excellent crop.

One of the saddest things in my remembrance was when the "Neptune" sank, November, 1824. Several of our neighbors were on board, and four were brought home dead,—Hugh Rush's wife (they lived on the farm where Andrew Moore now lives); John Watson's son John (he lived where Jonathan Miller now lives, in a log house); Mrs. Graham and her little niece, named Sarah, who was coming home with her aunt to make a visit (they lived where Charles Carson now lives). The women had been to New York to sell their butter. They were put in their coffins at Newburgh, and all brought to Mr. Graham's house, and there prepared for burial. They looked fresh; bore rather a flushed countenance. Mrs. Rush's face and one side of her cap was burned. The day of the funeral they turned four chairs in the yard and placed a coffin on each,—Mrs. Rush first (she being the eldest), then Mrs. Graham, John Watson, and lastly little Sarah, who had left her home for a visit in the country. The sermon was by Rev. Samuel Van Vechton, of Bloomingburgh. I never saw the sight but once,—four coffins inclosing their dead standing side by side; then all moved away to the same yard at Bloomingburgh. A hearse was unknown in those days. Any common wagon was used to carry the dead; people knew but little about burial expenses.

I knew Middletown when it contained but two or three houses; have often seen the first church that was built there. It stood where the Congregational church now stands, and was an old dilapidated building. From its poor appearance, some reckless fellow gave it the name of the "Lord's Barn." By that name it was familiarly known. I do not know exactly why it was called Middletown, because when I first knew it there was nothing there to call anything. I remember when there was no Circleville, Scotchtown, Bullville, nor any of these little places that now dot the country. I know when Goshen and Bloomingburgh turnpike was established, and one gate was where Richard Slee now lives, about a mile from Scotchtown. The father of Dr. James H. Smiley was the gate-keeper at one time. I have been to Newburgh when it was a very small place. People always went to New York by the way of Newburgh; drive there and leave their teams; go by the boat, and when they would return was very uncertain.

Schools were but little known. The first school-house in our district stood on the corner, near Joseph Kernochan's. My children went there. James McGowan taught. People did not prize education as they do now.

The first doctor I remember of coming to our house was Dr. Peter Mills-pangh, of Montgomery. He was then quite a young man, but it was very seldom that any one called a doctor. People did not seem to be sick as much as now. Mothers would cure their children with herbs from the garden, or something from the forest near the door.

I was in the war of 1812; was a member of the artillery under Capt. Mulliner, of Little Britain. I was second sergeant. We were called out on the 18th of August, 1813; went to Brooklyn Heights. The army laid there, with a company from Albany. The Wallkill Regiment went in about two weeks to Staten Island. The drafted men went with us, and then went to Harlem Heights. I was in poor health, and then lying on the ground and other hardships increased my sickness. I was there three weeks, scarcely fit for duty a single day. One of my neighbors coming to see his son, and finding me so miserable, said he would not go home without me. He soon found a substitute, an Irishman named Richard Johnson. He was a large, robust man. I gave him twenty dollars in cash, my uniform (worth about fifty dollars), and my pay during the time I was on duty. He went in his own name. I came home to my family fully satisfied with my war life.

I always preferred a quiet life, but many worthy events have escaped my memory. I am past eighty-eight years old, and my days are nearly spent.

JONATHAN WILKISON.

CIRCLEVILLE, 1872.

MANUMISSION OF SLAVES.

Under the act of March 29, 1799, for the gradual abolition of slavery, various citizens recorded their acts of freeing the negroes held by them.

The first entry is the following:

"I do hereby certify that I have manumitted and set free my negro slave Otis as fully and amply as I am authorized by an act of the Legislature entitled 'An act for the gradual abolition of slavery,' passed the 29th of March, 1799.

"Given under my hand and seal this first day of November, 1800.

"TAEETHA BORLAND."

Other similar acts of manumission appear by Jonathan Smith, 1801; Stephen Smith, November, 1806; Henry B. Wisner, John Wilkin, William Phillips, and Israel Wickham.

TAVERNS, ETC.

The licensed inn-keepers of 1824 were Ambrose Fairchild, Andrew Henderson, Sylvanus Jessup, Thomas Mills, Isaac B. Everett, John G. Houston, Charles Everson, Lebbeus L. Vail, Ansalet W. Hulse, Hiram Seward, Benjamin Woodward, Benjamin France (between Bloomingburgh and Bullville; Leartus Weller has the same place now), John Tears (where Mr. McWilliams now lives, between Circleville and Scotchtown), Henry Dunning, and Vinson Clark (between Bloomingburgh and Middletown, where T. W. Horton now lives).

"The Temperance Question" was agitated in Wallkill fifty years ago, as appears by the following resolution in the town-books:

"Whereas, Pauperism has increased in the town of Wallkill to an alarming extent; and whereas intemperance is one of the greatest procuring causes, inasmuch as more than three-fourths of the paupers emanate directly or indirectly from that source; and whereas tipping-houses, dram-shops, and groceries have a direct tendency to increase the evils; therefore,

"Resolved (as the sense of this town meeting), That the Board of Excise be requested to refuse granting license to those persons whose principal object is to retail intoxicating liquors and not having suitable accommodations for public entertainment.

"Resolved, That the foregoing be entered on the records of said town and published in the two papers printed in Goshen.

"Dated Wallkill, this 1st of April, 1828."

ASSESSMENT ROLL—1803.

In addition to the outline of early settlements thus far given, we are able to show the entire list of property-holders in the town about the beginning of this century by means of the following papers preserved in the office of the town clerk:

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

The precinct of Wallkill, of which the present town is the legal successor, was erected Dec. 17, 1743, by an act of the Colonial Legislature. It then comprised the territory now embraced in the three towns, Crawford, Montgomery, Wallkill, and portions of Mount Hope and Hamptonburgh. In 1772 the precinct of Hanover was erected, comprising the two present towns of Crawford and Montgomery and a portion of Hamptonburgh. Legally, Hanover was set off from the old precinct, and the statute directed that the rest of the territory should "remain" the precinct of Wallkill.

The popular impression has been that Wallkill was set off from Montgomery. This has a very good basis in the fact that the centre of population and the place of public business were both at Montgomery during the period 1743 to 1772, and that in every respect except the legal technical form the Wallkill of 1772 was a new organization.

Legally it was a continuance of the old, and was, evidently, entitled to the books and records. The Wallkill town officers of 1772, however, made no pretensions to the books, but opened a new record, which is fortunately preserved, and from which we are able to make liberal extracts.

At the time Mr. Eager prepared his history of the county the precinct records of Wallkill, from 1743 to 1767, were doubtless already lost, as he commences his quotations with the town-meeting of 1768.

He was, however, in error in regarding this as the first town-meeting of Montgomery (Hanover). It was about the twenty-fifth town-meeting of Wallkill precinct. The first town-meeting of Montgomery was four years later.

FIRST TOWN-MEETING OF WALLKILL AFTER THE DIVISION.

The first meeting after the division of the precinct, at the house of Samuel Watkins, April the 7th, 1772.

Chosen: William Dunn, clerk and supervisor; Benjamin Booth, James Wilkins, Elijah Reeve, commissioners for regulating and laying out public highways; Stephen Harlow, William Wilkins, David Moore, commissioners for laying out the money raised by act of Assembly on the highways; David Crawford, Moses Phillips, assessors; John McGarrah, John Patterson, constables and collectors; Abel Wells, George Booth, poor-masters; Jonathan Smith, Esq., Isaiah Vail, John Ketchum, Benjamin Vail, Jr., fence-viewers and damage appraisers.

Fences to be four and a half feet high, staked and ridged, five rails high or otherwise, equivalent as the fence-viewers shall judge.

The following record of general districts, three in number, and the fifteen road districts, with descriptions and path-masters' names, are of much value, as showing early names both of persons and places:

The precinct to be divided into three districts, viz.: the east side of the Wallkill one; the west side two, to be divided by the new northwest line.

Samuel Watkins, path-master for the east side of the Otterkill to the middle of Campbell's bridge.

John Monell, from the Widow McBride's corner to Thomas Simeril's, and thence along the road to Campbell's bridge.

William Bodle, from Esq. Smith's to the Minisink road, and from the school-house on the road to Hezekiah Gale's; from thence to John McGarrah's, and thence to the school-house; to work also on David Crawford's road to the bridge one day.

John Hill, from Esq. Smith's road along the Minisink road to the middle of Connor's bridge; also a piece of road leading from the Minisink bridge to Orange County.

James Rogers, Jr., from the precinct line to the Widow McCord's north gate.

Capt. William Faulkner, from his own house to Thomas Simeril's.

Henry Savage, from the Widow McCord's north gate to Arzuble McCurdy's house.

Daniel Tears, from the precinct line to John McHenry's house.

Edward Campbell, from John McHenry's to Arzuble McCurdy's.

Peter McLaughlin, from the corner of Edward McNeal's lot to Phillips' house.

Tilton Eastman, from Conner's bridge to the Pine Swamp.

Stacy Beakes, from Minisink road to Dunning's road that leads to the Pine Swamp.

George Smith, from the middle of the white-oak bridge to the top of the round hill beyond Corey's.

John Ketchum, from the top of the round hill to the west end of the precinct.

Abraham Taylor and John Daily, Jr., from the white-oak bridge by Elijah Reeve's to the precinct line.

Probably the following agreement has not continued to be observed to the present time:

"Agreed that the town-meetings for the future be held as follows, viz.: next year at the house of Moses Phillips, and the year after at the house of David Crawford, and to continue alternately."

The tax-payers of 1880 may compare the following appropriations with those of the present time:

The consent of the town of Wallkill to sell railroad stock was recorded in the office of the county clerk, bearing date Dec. 16, 1879, and by the terms of the instrument "the railroad commissioners of said town were authorized, empowered, and directed, for the benefit and use of said town, at such time or times, and in such mode or manner, at public or private sale, and at such price or prices as in their judgment shall be best for the interest of said town, to sell and dispose of the stock owned by the town in the New York and Oswego Midland Railroad."

V.-VILLAGES.

MIDDLETOWN

is situated in the south part of Wallkill, and is said to have received its name from the fact that the place is midway between Montgomery and Mount Hope. Middletown is six miles west of Goshen, the county-seat, and is pleasantly situated in an open, level, and fertile section of country. Its present extensive manufactures, its valuable trade, its multiplied churches, its superior institutions of learning, its large population, are all mostly a modern development. The construction of the Erie Railroad gave to Middletown its first decided impulse, and led to its rapid growth, to its stirring business activities, to its diversified institutions of charity, religion, and education. These results have not been wholly secured by fortunate circumstances. The leading citizens were men of far-seeing faith in the capabilities of the place, but they were also men of industry and enterprise, and knew that great results were not achieved by idly waiting on even the most favorable condition of affairs. They planned largely, they invented wisely, they looked to the future, but with steady industry they also toiled to execute their plans, to make their investments profitable, and render Middletown what they desired to have it.

Their success is written in the present populous, cultured, and enterprising village; in the numerous spacious churches, whose spires point upward from amid the marts of trade and the thoroughfares of business; in the splendid system of schools, which challenges comparison with any in the State; in these long and beautiful streets lined with pleasant residences; in the stores, banks, and manufactories, that show everywhere solidity, integrity, enterprise.

The following notice of one of the streets of Middletown recalls an era of speculation equal to any of modern times:

"Mulberry Street derived its name from the fact that years ago, before the street was laid out, a large number of mulberry-trees were planted in that neighborhood and the cultivation of silk-worms carried on to some extent. Among the earliest workers in that enterprise was Mrs. Christiana Cox, the mother of Mr. Henry A. Cox, who resided on that street till she died, at an advanced age, December, 1880."

Middletown village is situated on the Erie Railroad, sixty-seven miles from New York, and is the largest village in the county, Newburgh, incorporated as a city, alone exceeding it. Middletown is also central in location, or equidistant from the Hudson and Delaware Rivers. The precise time when the first settlement was made in the village is not determined, though it was doubtless a few years preceding the Revolutionary war.

John Green purchased about that time of DeLancey, a patentee under the crown of Great Britain, a tract of land, including that where the Congregational church now stands and the southern part of the village generally. It is a tradition that the name was agreed upon when the people assembled to raise the meeting-house. It was discussed something after this fashion: "What shall it be? There is Dolsentown on the south, Goshen on the east, Scotchtown on the north, and a place on the west called Shawangunk. We will call it Middletown, it being in the centre."

That portion of the village lying northeast of Robert Street is in lot No. 35 of the Minisink Angle, which lot was bought about 1755 or '56 by Samuel Wickham and Daniel Moore. A settlement then commenced was broken up by hostile Indians during the French war, but was resumed a few years later and just before the Revolution. On the division of this lot, David Moore took that portion lying northwest of High Street and northeast of the line that divided the farms owned in late years by P. H. Horton and Thomas E. Hulse; and Samuel Wickham the central portion between the aforesaid lines, the whole of which was divided among their children and settled by them respectively. Samuel Wickham conveyed his portion to his sons Samuel and Israel and his son-in-law, Nathaniel Wells. To Samuel he gave that portion nearest the centre of the village, to Israel the farms owned in late years by I. O. Beattie, Israel H. Wickham, and others, and to Nathaniel Wells the farm owned in modern times by P. H. Horton.

Samuel was the first settler, and lived where Mrs. Shaw resided in later years. He soon commenced keeping a house for the accommodation of travelers; the Minisink road being a favorite route for emigrants to the West, this early tavern was well patronized.

As early as 1742, Mr. Clinton, a surveyor employed in running out lot No. 35, mentions having crossed the "Minisink road" in several places while engaged in locating and subdividing the lot. The road is thus shown to be of considerable antiquity. A point on the road about a mile west of Middletown village was known as the White Oak bridge, from the fact that a bridge made of white oak poles was used for crossing the creek; this bridge was in existence probably as late as 1800.

The western portion of Middletown was included in lot No. 36, in the Minisink Angle, owned by De Lancy, and as he espoused the royal cause his land, except what was sold to Mr. Green before the Revolution, was confiscated by the State of New York. Three appraisers were appointed by the State to put a value on the land, two of whom were Israel Wickham and Henry Wisner. Mr. John N. Pronk, from whose account in the gazettes of 1857 these facts are derived, had learned from a witness to the appraisal that there was an earnest debate on the subject of valuation whether to call it six shillings or a dollar an acre. Wickham insisting that it would never be worth a dollar an acre, it was put down at six shillings. The land confiscated takes in the western part of the village, and consisted of about 200 acres.

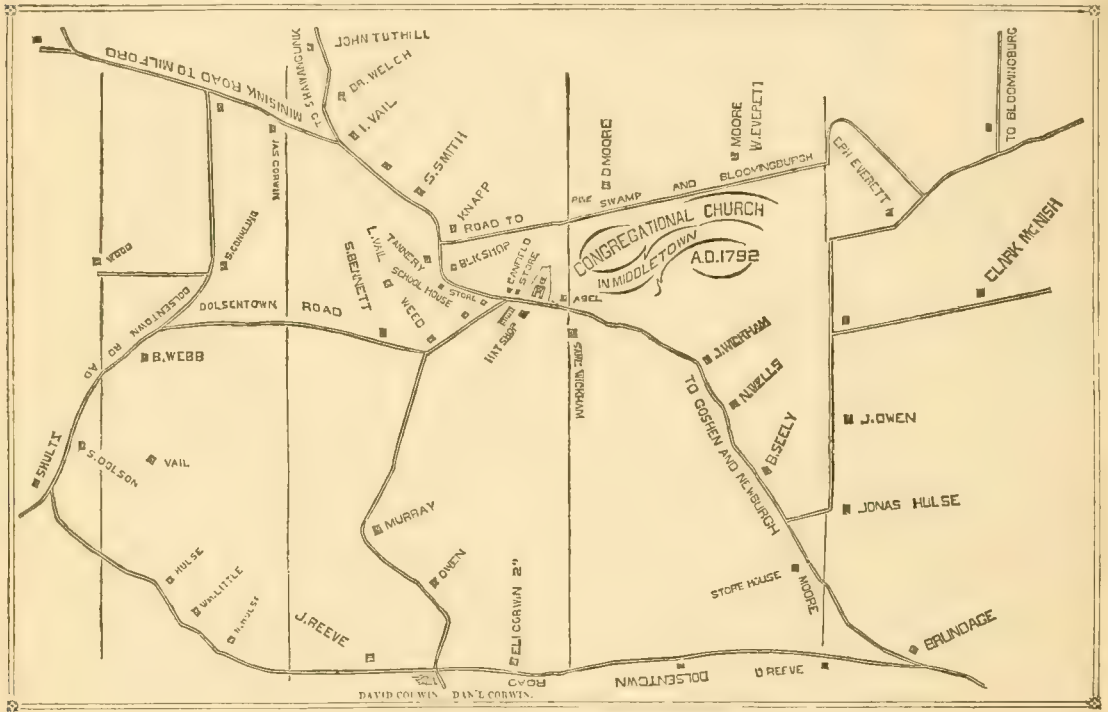

Other early settlers of Middletown were Capt. Jonathan Owen, Abel Woodhull, Daniel Wells and Nathaniel Wells, Joseph Baird, Wm. Baird, Henry B. Wisner, Matthias Keene, Daniel Corwin, Isaiah Vail, Dr. Hanford, Jesse Corwin, Elisha Corwin, Gabriel Wells, John Wells, Moses H. Corwin, and Stacey

Beakes, all of whom contributed more or less to its prosperity.

The first store was kept by Abel Woodhull.

Isaiah Vail also had an early store at Monhagen, opposite the White Oak bridge mentioned above. The following map, drawn by W. W. Reeve in 1876 from undoubted authorities, gives an excellent view

The first election was held April 20th. Under the same date Henry S. Beakes, Israel H. Wickham, and William H. Reeve certify to the county judge that they presided as inspectors of election at a meeting held at the house of Joseph Monell on that day; that the proposition to incorporate the village of Middletown was adopted by a vote of one hundred and of Middletown in 1792. It is taken from the Manual of the First Congregational Church of Middletown.

It appears from a census taken in 1807 that the village of Middletown then consisted of nine families: those of Obadiah Vail, Matthias Keene, Ralph Keeler, Jesse Corwin, Samuel Canfield, Robert Thompson, William Owen, Nathaniel Penny, Susan Dunning, and the population was forty-five.

It will be noticed that a greater number of names than these appear on the above map of 1792. But the census applied only to a small portion of the territory embraced on the map.

INCORPORATION.—At a Court of Sessions held at the court-house in Newburgh, Feb. 10, 1848, present David W. Bate, county judge, Samuel W. Eager, Frederick A. Hoyt, justices of sessions, Stacey Beakes, John B. Hanford, Lewis Vail, Israel O. Beattie, and E. M. Madden made application to have Middletown incorporated.

The court appointed Henry S. Beakes, Israel H. Wickham, and W. W. Reeve to call a meeting of citizens to vote "no" or "yes." The election was held at the house of Joseph Monell, March 25, 1848.

twenty-three in the affirmative and seventy-seven in the negative.

The publication of the required number of notices was verified by the affidavit of J. S. Brown. The proceedings were approved by Judge D. W. Bate, and recorded April 7, 1848.

The first officers other than trustees and clerk were Nathan H. Corwin, Wm. M. Graham, and Edward M. Madden, assessors; Wm. M. Graham, treasurer; Hiram V. King, collector; and Courtland S. Hulse, pound-master.

The first meeting of the trustees was held at the shop of C. S. Hulse, on North Street. Stacey Beakes was appointed president. Messrs. Beattie, Hoyt, and Dusenberre were named as a committee to ascertain the expense of procuring the incorporation, the purchase of the necessary blank books, the probable cost of an engine-house, and to select a proper location for the same; to confer with the owners of Protection Fire Engine, No. 2, now in this village, as to the terms on which said engine can be procured. At a subsequent meeting the committee reported the expenses of incorporation as follows:

John C. Dimmick, Esq., professional services.....	$2.00
Israel O. Beattie, services.....	4.50
Wm. W. Reeve, Esq., surveyor.....	8.14
Isaac H. Wickham, inspector of election.....	2.62 ¹ / ₂
John S. Brown, printing.....	12.65
	<hr/> $29.92

Other claims were added afterwards (see below).

The committee reported with reference to "Protection Fire Engine Company, No. 2," that the owners of the engine had been represented before the board by Henry P. Roberts and Henry S. Horton, who had offered to sell at a "fair and reasonable price." In the matter of an engine-house the committee reported that Richard Van Horn, builder, had calculated the expense at $350; that the Congregational Church had expressed a willingness to lease the ground occupied by the old engine-house for the erection of a new house.

The trustees voted to submit to the electors resolutions to raise

For stationery.....	$15.00
Oil and fuel.....	10.00
Keeping engine in repair.....	15.00
	<hr/> $40.00
Expense of incorporation.....	45.00
Total.....	<hr/> $85.00

THE POST-OFFICE of Middletown was established on the 22d of October, 1816. Stacey Beakes was appointed the first postmaster, and continued in office until Feb. 1, 1826, when he was succeeded by his son, Henry S. Beakes.

On June 23, 1829, the name of the office was changed to South Middletown. Lewis Vail was appointed postmaster Feb. 3, 1842, and Dec. 14, 1844, he was succeeded by William Hoyt. March 24, 1849, Oliver P. Coleman was appointed, and on Sept. 10, 1849, the name of the office was again changed to Middletown. Dec. 21, 1853, Hiram V. King was appointed to succeed Mr. Coleman. His successor was James B. Hallock for about eighteen years. The present postmaster, Joseph L. Cleft, was appointed the 1st of April, 1879.

The receipts of the first quarter in 1817, rendered by Stacey Beakes, were 69 cents. In 1826 the receipts had risen to $16.12 a quarter; in 1854, to $257.79.

MIDDLETOWN LYCEUM.—This association was organized at a meeting held at the Methodist Episcopal church, Dec. 6, 1841. Rev. Daniel T. Wood was chosen chairman, and James N. Pronk secretary. A committee, consisting of James N. Pronk, Edward M. Madden, Joseph D. Friend, and Robert Jackaway, was appointed to prepare a constitution and by-laws. The committee reported on the 13th, and the officers elected were George Little, president; Morgan L. Sproat, vice-president; James N. Pronk, secretary; Isaac Bannister, treasurer; J. Manning Finch and Nathaniel Conkling, associate executive committee. The introductory lecture was delivered by Rev. D. T. Wood, Dec. 20, 1841, succeeded that year by Rev. Dr. McCartee, J. W. Gott, Prof. Wm. Bross, Moses Swezey, Rev. J. McReynolds, Rev. James Arbuckle, and Rev. Z. N. Lewis. Regular debates were also held during the winter and the following spring.

Measures were taken in January, 1842, to establish a library, and a collection of some 300 volumes was then obtained; but the Lyceum Hall being destroyed by fire in the autumn of 1845, the books and records were in part destroyed.

This hall was on Main Street, and was fitted up by Dill & Houston. Another hall was fitted up on the same street by Henry E. Horton, in which its meetings were afterwards held. In 1851 Gothic Hall was erected, and the meetings of the lyceum transferred to that place. The first and third anniversaries of the formation of the lyceum were celebrated by a collation and appropriate literary exercises. At the first Rev. James Arbuckle delivered the address, and at the third James N. Pronk.

Its lecture courses, especially in the earlier years, were of unusual interest and eminently successful. The most noted platform orators in the country came to Middletown at the call of the lyceum.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.—John W. Hasbrouck's "Directory of Middletown," 1858, says of the Fire Department:

"The village is provided with two fire engines,—one called Middletown, and the other Protection No. 2, and also a good supply of hooks and ladders; also an engine-house located on Main Street, adjoining the Congregational church. There have been several fire company organizations, but none acting as such at present. The corporation authorities hire a person to keep the engine and other fire apparatus in good working order. It is expected that measures will be taken for the purchase of another fire engine during the present season. There are also eleven public cisterns and wells located in different parts of the village, to be used only in case of fire."

To this account of Middletown we have the pleasure of adding the following article, written by Miss Sarah Wilkinson:

RECOLLECTIONS OF SAMUEL DENTON,* MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.

I was born in Connecticut; came to Orange County for the first time in 1817, but did not move here until 1818. I spent four weeks at Chester, then I succeeded Abijah Middlebrooks at the "Outlet," now called Denton. I occupied the store-house which T. B. Denton had removed, and upon the same ground built the house now occupied by his son, Theodore J. Denton. In the spring of 1820 I moved to Mechanictown, and continued the same business for one year. Then Mechanictown was quite a lively place, now it is like some place forsaken. April 1, 1821, I moved to Middletown, and opened a store in a building which stood on Main Street, where Albert Bull & Co. keep store. Then Middletown consisted of three streets, Main, North, and South. North Street was a narrow street, mostly filled with lumber, which was Stacey Beakes' principal article of traffic. Where Depot and King Streets are, and the buildings upon them, was a pond, which was a favorite place of resort for boys to skate upon in winter. The edifice which stood on the Congregational church ground was the only place of worship. Rev. William Blain was the minister who presided at that time, but was not a settled pastor. The school-house stood where the building familiarly known as the "Old Bank" stands, now owned by J. Davis' heirs. Two brothers, Gabriel and John Wells, kept store where J. T. King's drug-store is now, but during this year they dissolved, and Gabriel went to New Windsor. Stacey Beakes kept another store on the corner, now known as Denton's corner. Dr. David Handford (father of John B. Handford) was the only physician for this place and vicinity. He lived in the house which stood on the same site where my house now stands. I bought of him and removed the old building. Then the land, now lying in the very centre of Middletown, could be bought for $56 per acre, and that thought to be a good price. John B. Cox (father of H. Cox, Mrs. Edwin Jessup, and Mrs. J. T. King) was a harness-maker, and lived on South Street where Mrs. J. M. Matthews now lives. There is not a person living in Middletown now who lived here when I came here, except two or three who were mere infants.

The first hotel was kept by — Smith, which Seth Holden owned, now Kearney's; there is scarcely a building now used for a hotel in Middletown that was built for that purpose. In 1822 I purchased the corner (now known as Denton's corner) of Stacey Beakes and I. Prall, of New York. I continued the mercantile business up to 1856, and think I kept store more years than any man ever has in Middletown. B. W. Shaw is next. Not a place of business is occupied by a descendant of the old firms. In my early days of store-keeping the inconvenience of getting the goods from New York can better be imagined than described. I usually spent a week in making my purchases. Merchants did not go so often as now, so they were obliged to buy goods enough to last about half a year; going to New York twice a year was about all they could do. I had to go by Newburgh. I would leave home very early Monday morning, and then if I was fortunate enough to meet a boat I would go directly to New York, there spend the week up to Friday night in buying such articles as my memorandum called for; then I would take a boat, if possible, for home, spending a night and day on the road, often being until the late hours of Saturday night before I reached home. Traveling by water was a very slow and uncertain way of getting from place to place,—many times would be delayed two or three days waiting for a boat to come. After the goods were brought to Newburgh by water, then the remaining twenty miles they must be carried in wagons. I think I can truly say I have traveled over the road from here to Newburgh every hour in the day and night, and every day in the year and all kinds of weather. How many merchants would think they could undergo what I have passed through when I was building up my business, and thereby doing all that lay in my power for the benefit and improvement of the now flourishing village of Middletown.

* Samuel Denton, born May 10, 1794, near Wilton, Conn., married Pauline Darling, of Amenia, Dutchess Co. Has resided over fifty years at his present home, on South Street, Middletown. The children all reside in Middletown, and are Mrs. Mary D. Graham, George L., and Frank B.

Most of the old buildings have been removed, and better and larger ones taken their places. The first brick building was built by George S. Corwin, on South Street, where Mrs. Joseph King now lives; that was in 1837.

When I came to Middletown the post-office was established, but only a few years old. It was kept in a secretary on Denton's corner. Stacey Beakes was postmaster. The mail was carried by post-riders, and only received twice a week. Many things differ from now. In summer, beef was a luxury reserved for a feast on Fourth of July; one year a cow or ox would be killed in Middletown, and half of it sent to Goshen, and the next year the Goshen people would do the killing and send half to Middletown. Such was the case for a few years.

Hector Van Cleft (father of Lewis H. Van Cleft, the present postmaster) opened the first meat-market here, where Samuel Ayres now keeps grocery; others killed and brought it here and sold from the wagon, but he kept a market where different kinds of meat could be found at all times. One day a customer coming into the market and seeing so much meat hanging up, said to Van Cleft, "Do you kill a whole beef at a time?" What would that same person say now to see how many are killed and brought into Middletown every day in the year? Mrs. Lydia Smith kept a boarding-house near where J. N. Kellogg is now. I boarded with her.

Sarah, daughter of Hezekiah Watkins, taught a private school on South Street. I think Zina Kellogg opened the first grocery, where his son John keeps. Others kept dry-goods and groceries; he kept only groceries.

John H. Corwin, now of Newburgh, built the first Presbyterian meeting-house, in 1829. He bought the orchard facing on North Street, opened the street, and called it Orchard Street, from the fact it was through his orchard. He also built the first house upon that street. I have assisted twice to build a house upon the present site of the First Presbyterian church.

Mrs. Lina Dolson, a most estimable woman, kept the first milliner-shop, on East Main Street, a few doors above Pronk's drug-store. James Little came from Hampton, bought land, built the house, and lived where Dr. Dorrance now lives. He opened James Street and named it for himself. He also built a house on Mulberry Street for his brother-in-law, Dr. Pronk; it is now occupied by his son, James N. Pronk. In 1838 he built the parsonage for the First Presbyterian Church at his own expense (costing $1500), on grounds belonging to the congregation. Rev. Daniel T. Wood was the first occupant. Dr. John B. McMunn came from Scotchtown, and was a noted physician in the early days of Middletown. William F. Sharp was the first lawyer of the place; he remained only a short time, when he went to Goshen, where he is at present. His brother taught school on North Street. E. M. Madden opened the first tin-shop, on Main Street nearly opposite Canal Street. After a few years he entered in partnership with E. P. Wheeler, and opened the foundry where A. L. Vail is now. Previous to this two brothers, Hiram and Stringham Dunning, built what is now known as "Tandy Block," and opened a foundry, but continued only a short time. After the Erie Railroad was built as far as Goshen, and the road graded to Middletown, the company were obliged to leave it so on account of insufficient means to complete the work. Joseph Davis, myself, and some twenty-five others (whom I cannot mention) furnished the means to buy the rails, thus completing the road to this place, and on June 12, 1843, we had the great pleasure of witnessing the arrival of the first cars in Middletown. John Bailey built the depot and was the first agent.

I helped to organize the first bank in 1839, kept on Main Street, where Daniel H. Bailey now lives.

The Bloomingburgh plank-road, opened in 1850, was a great benefit to Middletown. I aided in its building, and was the first president; remained so for many years.

The Wallkill Academy, organized in 1841, was a good mark for a small village. As on other occasions, I was present and gave my assistance; was also the first president of this institution.

I never held a public office, only town clerk for two or three years; preferred always to attend to private affairs.

I have seen the place increase from less than 100 people to about 8000; witnessed many great changes; have seen all the noted buildings of this place during their erection and completion; have outlived many worthy persons of my early years, seen them pass one by one until I am the last to relate these facts.

The old dwelling on West Main Street, belonging to Moses Wright, which was torn down this year, was built in 1841. It was in its day considered quite a pretentious dwelling. The brick block consisted of three buildings; they were all built at one time by the late David Clark, upon the site of a tannery owned and operated by Robert Houston and Charles Dill. Mr. Wright's house was built directly over the old tannery vats, and the builder, not thinking a good foundation of much importance, simply threw a quantity of loose dirt and stones into the vat-holes, and upon this flimsy foundation erected his brick wall. The building began to settle the following year, and continued to settle until at last it was considered unsafe and ordered removed.

In the building next door, now occupied by L. L. Purdy, was located the first hat-factory established in Middletown. It was started by Judd & Johnson, two Connecticut men, and run for some years. They gave employment to half a dozen men, and turned out from twelve to fifteen dozen hats per day. All the work was done at that time by hand. The hat business now amounts to eight hundred dozen per day. A story is told of Judd, a member of the above firm, which is very timely just now, showing that Dr. Tanner is not the only faster. Middletown had one in earlier time. Judd attended the Methodist Church, and during a revival season was converted. For some time religion was his only thought, and he became a regular religious enthusiast. While in this condition, he one day announced to his friends that he had received a revelation from God, instructing him to fast and pray for forty days as a penance for his many sins. He at once began his fast, which lasted just four days, when, as he said, the Lord, but, as the irreverent said, his stomach, told him to go to eating again. He was as ready to accept the second revelation as he had been the first, and so, abandoning fasting, he resumed the manufacture of hats.

is situated on high ground, the section of country being about one thousand feet above tide-water. It undoubtedly took its name from the nationality of the early settlers. McVey, McWhorter, McInnis, McLaughlin, McCord, are names sufficiently proving the origin of Scotchtown.

George Houston gave three acres of land for the churchyard and burying-ground; the first person buried there was a child of Benjamin Simons; in a few weeks after Mrs. Patrick Bodle and Mrs. George Houston were buried the same day; this was in the fall of 1801.

The first store was opened in 1803, by Robert Sterritt, in the house where Dickinson lives.

John Brown was the first postmaster; the post-office was in a building on the northeast corner of the village.

The business at the present time consists of the store of Mr. Coleman, who is also postmaster; Sloats' wagon-shop, and Clark's blacksmith-shop.

MECHANICTOWN

is a village about two miles east of Middletown, which sprang up many years ago around the forge and trip-hammer works of Messrs. Otis & Miller. Other manufactories followed. The place now comprises but few business places. The old woolen-factory, which was located here, was destroyed by fire a year ago.

The old hotel was also burned and two old landmarks disappeared. There is a small new hotel, kept by Roberts & Co.; a glove manufactory and a feed-mill, in the same building, by Mr. Dewsknapp; blanket-weaving by John Oldroy.

The large factory and the hotel that were burned belonged, in late years, to the Newsomes.

is about half-way between Scotchtown and Bloomingburgh, on the old turnpike from Goshen to Bloomingburgh. Its post-office furnishes mail facilities for something of a "circle" of country roundabout. Mr. Samuel Bull was for many years the leading man of the place. After the division of the Presbyterian Church in the United States into Old School and New, 1837, a church was organized at Circleville in the interest of the New School denomination, and their house of worship was erected on the property of Mr. Bull.

This place is now a station on the Crawford Railroad. Mr. Harrison Bull is the agent in charge. He is also postmaster, the office being kept at the store of John Bull. Circleville post-office was established in 1850. Daniel Bull was postmaster until 1855, when he resigned, and his brother Harrison was appointed, who is the present postmaster. The other business of the place comprises the stores of G. T. Bull and of John Bull; blacksmith-shops by George B. Wallace and by W. H. Odell; wagon-shops by L. C. Terwilliger and by A. A. Foster; shoe-shops by James Moore and by Joseph Ogden; two creameries, one by the Circleville Milk Association, the other by D. W. Berry, who is a large operator in this line, having another creamery, known as the Rockville, and one also in Goshen; H. S. Wilkison, a little out from the village, does miscellaneous wood-work, and also operates a cider-mill.

The village is very pleasantly situated, with a rich agricultural region around it. Many comfortable and even elegant residences give ample proof of the industrious and well-to-do character of the people.

Of this village Miss Sarah E. Wilkison wrote a few years since:

"Circleville is a small but pleasantly-situated village in the town of Walkkill (now on the line of the Crawford Railroad). It has a population of about 100 inhabitants. Its growth has been slow, as it has no water privilege, and until 1871 was five miles from a railroad. Previous to 1791 but little is known of it, as at that time it was a thick forest, with a single log house, occupied by Mr. Coddington, near where the village now stands. Not even a road, only as travelers were guided by marked trees. The road leading from Goshen to Bloomingburgh reached within a mile at that time, and in about two years it passed through what is now Circleville, although much unlike the road of the present time. The road was made by simply cutting down the trees and digging out the largest rocks. By this process it was made very crooked, and remained so for many years, notwithstanding the great inconvenience of traveling a roundabout way to get a short distance. For the next five years nothing occurred worthy of note, only they cleared more of the land each year, but no further building took place until the year 1800, when George Niver, who lived on Col. Newkirk's farm (which is now Circleville and vicinity), built a small frame house as a payment for his rent, and a portion of that building may yet be seen in a barn now owned by Alexander Jordan. Col. Newkirk was then quite an old man, and in about ten years he died, when his farm was purchased by the brothers, Simeon and William Bush, William having 30 acres, and Simeon the remainder. Until this time only three or four farm-houses had been built, and three of them are yet standing on their original sites.

"The country around was thinly settled; churches, schools, and shops were at a distance. No business was carried on for miles around, except a pottery, which was erected by David Mandeville, and was operated by him for many years, it being then one of the most extensive branches of business in the country. He was unfortunate in having his buildings burned three times, and after the third loss he moved his family to Waverly, and the business was never re-established. Samuel Bull purchased the farm of the brothers Bush in 1831, and built the stone house which yet occupies a prominent site in Circleville. Nothing unusual transpired for the next ten years. There were a few changes and some improvements. In the year 1841 the inhabitants of the territory long known as Bull Hack felt the need of having divine service more accessible than it had been, and accordingly invited the Rev. Daniel T. Wood, of Middletown, to meet and advise with them respecting the propriety of an organization." (See "Churches.") "After establishing a church it was thought proper to give the place some name; accordingly, at a meeting held Nov. 20, 1841, at the house of Samuel Bull, it was decided that it should be called Circleville merely as a matter of choice."*

lies east of Middletown, on the Walkkill. Across the river there is an elevation known as Hopper Hill, so named because somebody fancied that the topography of the hill, or a depression in the rear, resembled the hopper of a grist-mill.

Further east is Mount Joy, said to have been named by a company of men who were lost for a time in the wilderness, but having climbed this eminence they saw the Walkkill, and instantly knew their location. In their "gushing" joy they christened the mountain with a perpetual memorial of their feelings.

Phillipsburgh is an old point of settlement, and a place of great expectations. With its magnificent water-power, with its government contracts for powder during the war of the Revolution, with the noted men who settled there, and the fine farming country around it, it had every prospect of advanced growth. It was a place of trade, and the people from the vicinity of what is now Middletown went to Phillipsburgh to do their shopping.

The change of public routes, the growth of Middletown as an important railway village, dwarfed Phillipsburgh. There are now no stores or business places there except the grist-mills, one on the northwest side of the stream, owned by H. B. Hulse, and run by George M. White, the other on the opposite side of the stream, owned by T. & J. Marsh. There is a blacksmith-shop by Charles L. White. The Hulse mill was originally a fulling-mill, and the old stone dye-house still stands near it. The old powder-magazine of 1776 is said to have been at the present Slauson place. T. & J. Marsh also run a distillery.

* It was proposed by Mrs. Mary Bull, who thought Circleville, of Ohio, a very pleasant name. It was immediately assented to by the others present.

We add the following article, as giving many items on several of the villages of Wallkill.

RECOLLECTIONS OF HALF A CENTURY.

"About half a century ago Middletown stood precisely where it stands now, with its surroundings of hills and valleys and water-courses and highways and by-ways, but the inhabitants have changed very much. It had one meeting-house, the Congregational, which stood nearly where the new one is building. Abel Jackson was the preacher, and Isaiah Vail was the chorister. The village had a school-house, standing where Emmet Moore's house stands now, on South Street. The writer of this article was the teacher, with about forty-five scholars, gathered from the whole village and its suburbs. Middletown, all told, contained thirty families and about one hundred and fifty inhabitants, viz.: Sam. Bennett, Charles Weed, Alex. Murray, Abigail Howell, Robert Kelly, Moses Corwin, Stacey Beakes, Elisha Corwin, Sam. Canfield, Ob. Vail, Josiah Vail, Luther Vail, Abel Darby (colored), Mary Wickham, Ralph Keeler, Nat. Penny, Jesse Corwin, Jane Knapp, James Smith, Saml. Denton, Lydia Smith, John Wells, Gabriel Wells, Daniel Hulse, Peter Hulse, Shelden Ensign, Temperance Brown, Susan Hill, William Owen, and John Cox.

"Henry Winsor and Isaiah Vail, justices of the peace at different periods; Elijah Welch, counselor and attorney; Ralph Keeler, constable. Ob. Vail and Stephen Smith kept public-house; John Cox, tanner and currier (Robt. Houston and Charles Dill will be remembered in this connection later); S. Canfield, shoemaker; Francis Drake, harness-maker; Isaiah Smith and Shelden Ensign, blacksmiths; Peter Hulse, wagon-maker; Eliad Tryon, cooper; Silas Hulse made whisky, and Abel Darby corn-brooms; David Hanford, physician; Jesse Corwin made fanning-mills; Gabriel Wells, Stacey Beakes, and Sam. Denton, merchants, furnished dry-goods, hardware, and, if they followed the custom of the times, rum and tobacco; Lydia Smith sold ginger-cake and beer; Nat Penny made hats; and Charles Weed, spinning-wheels.

"To the best of the writer's recollection, the little borough on the stream supplying Houston's mill, a mile or so above town, was called White-Oak Bridge, and afterward 'Monhagen.' It once boasted a small grist- and saw-mill, and a store and tavern, kept by Isaac Vail.

"Obviously, a man looking at the village of fifty years ago, and then at the Middletown of to-day, must exclaim, 'What hath time wrought!'

In those days Phillipsburgh did a thriving business. Dr. Phillips carried on the grist-mill now owned by Mr. Marsh, also the carding-mill near,—now not used,—and built the blacksmith-shop; also built and conducted the cider and distillery establishments, these on the south side of Wallkill River. Opposite, Col. Moses Phillips and son Moses did an extensive mercantile business, while William fullled and manufactured wool quite largely where Hulse's mill stands now, and afterwards built the Mechanicstown mills. Another son of Col. Phillips, George, carried on grist- and fulling-mills farther up on the Wallkill, the history of which is still fresh in the memory of the elderly and middle-aged. The old plot near Phillipsburgh used for burying is very old; dates back of your correspondent's memory.

"One thing might confidently be claimed in behalf of the village for situation, viz.: travel far as the reader please, he could scarce find another so quiet and beautiful valley and delightful stream as the locality at Phillipsburgh.

"Lastly, I will only trouble you with one locality more,—a kind of little 'city set on a hill.' Fifty years ago Scotchtown had its Presbyterian Church, with Mathuselah Baldwin for pastor. The community came honestly by its name. Among the early settlers might be mentioned the McWilliamses, McCarters, McWhorter, McVey, McGinnis, McLaughlin, McNeal, McClure, with others of less Scotch in name, but none the less in composition. Not far on the Middletown road stood, and still stands, now unoccupied, probably the oldest residence in the town of Wallkill, built of stone in 1791 by Caleb Goldsmith, Sr. Dr. Joshua Hornbeck was then the practicing physician. The village had its store,—the first by Robt. Sterritt, then by Everson; its tavern by Elijah Seeley, afterwards by Jno. G. Houston; also a blacksmith- and wagon-shop, the latter by Thos. Bell. David Slauson (father of Charles Slauson) was a thoroughgoing carpenter of the neighborhood. The buryingground opposite the church had been in use already a long period for the purpose. The first church edifice was constructed too far back for the writer's knowledge. It was not seated and finished, however, until 1806. The place had no post-office till years later. Mail matter was received at an office known as 'Wallkill,' kept by Monell, about a mile south of Stony Ford Bridge. Here also election was held for some years, though not the town-meetings.

"Scotchtown occupies one of the most elevated and slightly situations in Orange County. An incident: On receipt of the news of the favorable termination of the battle of New Orleans, and conclusion of the treaty of peace after the war of 1812, the staid inhabitants resolved on a public rejoicing and church illumination, which proved a decided success, the illumination attracting general attention and remark through a large extent of country commonly known as the valley of the Wallkill. But, better still, its moral light was never hid, since it has nearly uniformly, and justly too, enjoyed the reputation of being one of the most solid, sober, and religious communities to be found.

"OLD SCHOOLMASTER.

is a station on the Erie Railroad next northwest from Middletown, and is near the line of Mount Hope. The post-office was established about 1846. Samuel C. Howell, after whom the place is named, was the first postmaster, and served about ten years. His successors have been Judson Horton, two years; H. Bevans, six years; J. T. Roe, eight years; Samuel Bull, two years; T. M. Walter, five years; and, since the last named, L. Coleman, the present incumbent.

The present business of Howell's Depot comprises the freighting and general traffic of the Erie Railroad at this point, stores, general merchandise, by H. Bevans and B. Mapes; drug-store, Dr. S. E. Putney; hardware-store and tin-shop, by L. Coleman, who is also postmaster; a hotel, by S. H. Case; blacksmith-shops, by Henry Beyea and by Ira Lockwood; wagon-shop, by Joseph G. Sharp; meat-market, by George Lansing; shoemaker-shops, by Milton Crist and James H. St. John.

The village is finely situated, commanding an extensive view of a rich agricultural section, bounded to the north and west by the Shawangunk Mountains. The Congregational church is one of the finest houses of worship that can be found in a rural village of this size. Its interior is peculiarly neat and convenient, the excellent proportions, the modest yet beautiful frescoing, the superior arrangement of the desk and recess for the choir, all prove that taste and refinement do not depend on wealth or on the culture of a large city.

is the name bestowed upon a village west of Crawford Junction, and near the northeast angle of the town of Mount Hope. It arose from the establishment of a post-office there forty or fifty years ago by that name, given no doubt in honor of President Martin Van Buren. It was formerly a place of considerable business on the old stage-route from Middletown to Bloomingburgh, in Sullivan County.

The opening of the plank-road by a shorter line left Van Burenville away from routes of much travel and its business disappeared. The post-office facilities were transferred to Howell's, on the Erie Railroad.

SAND STATION

is a stopping-place on the Oswego Midland, a mile or more north of Middletown.

FAIR OAKS

has a post-office, and it is also a station upon the Midland Railroad, now known as the New York, Ontario and Western.

It was established May 14, 1872. Matthew S. Askew was appointed postmaster, and has retained the office to the present time (1880). Mr. Askew is also station-agent and proprietor of the hotel. The latter was built and opened for business the day the battle of Fair Oaks, Va., was fought in the late war. In a conversation that day over the name, Fair Oaks, then in everybody's mind, was suggested and speedily adopted.

CRAWFORD JUNCTION

is the point at which the Branch Crawford Railroad diverges from the main line of the New York, Ontario and Western Railway.

The traveler will look in vain for any village. The diverging point is in a swamp; a single switchman's hut and a milk-platform comprise the railroad structures.

PURDY'S STATION

is a stopping-place on the New York, Ontario and Western Railway, in the northwest part of the town, and not far from the line of Sullivan County. It is mostly a milk-station, and there is no business there except as connected with the railroad.

LOCKWOOD'S

is also a station on the same railroad, and both are of considerable convenience to the people of those neighborhoods.

ROCKVILLE

is south of Bull Hack. The name is derived from a huge rock that lies on the slope of the hill near by. It has been blasted away somewhat, and is therefore not as prominent an object as formerly. The farm was formerly that of Samuel Wilkison. It is now owned by William Startup.

There is a creamery located near the Four Corners.

MILLSBURGH

was an early name for a neighborhood settled, among others, by Jacob Mills, whose descendants were numerous and constituted the prominent families of the district.

STONY FORD

was so called as early as 1767. It was a fording-place over the Wallkill from Montgomery into this town, a mile west of Lagrange. There is a rift across the stream at this point literally paved with cobble-stones, firm and hard. Of course this primitive method of crossing was long ago substituted by a bridge.

BRIMSTONE HILL,

in the north part of the town, is so named from the story told of a drinking spree at the old log tavern of early times. Being short of glasses, an extra one was brought in from another room that had been used in mixing up some brimstone, and a quantity was left in. In the hurry of the occasion, or the darkness of the evening, it was not perceived, and the man who was fortunate enough to get that whisky of extra strength rushed into the street, shouting, "Brimstone! brimstone!" And so the place was named as the tradition runs.

MICHIGAN

was the name applied to a cluster of houses on Three-Mile Hill, and is still preserved in the name of the school district. Mr. Eager's solution of the origin is that a citizen who was somewhat in debt undertook to make the people believe that in a temporary absence from town he had been to Michigan. And when he afterwards opened a tavern here they rather contemptuously called the place Michigan.

LAGRANGE.

The first post-office in this town was at Lagrange. It was called "Wallkill," and was kept by John Monell. The building is yet standing. Another post-office was a large, hollow white-oak tree, near Patrick Bodle's, now J. Denton Mills'. Any person being at the Wallkill post-office, and finding letters for the neighbors in the vicinity of Scotchtown, would bring them up and deposit them in this tree; then, as the neighbors passed, they would call and examine the contents of this office; finding anything for themselves, they would take it and leave what belonged to others.

DAVISTOWN

was an old name for a neighborhood in the east part of the town, arising from the Davis families, which were numerous in that section.

HONEY-POT.

This is the mellifluous name bestowed many years ago upon an excellent spring of water a mile or more from Circleville. The farm and the district were also known to some extent by the same term. The property was originally owned by Richard Gale. He sold it to Jonathan Hawkins, who moved to Orange County from Long Island, and married the daughter of Jacob Mills. Mills Hawkins, a son, was the next owner, who sold to George McNish. In 1843 it was divided into two farms,—one sold to Hiram S. Wilkison, and the other subsequently to Oscar Shaw, and the latter is now owned by David W. Shaw. There are various traditions as to the reason for the name, but none of them are of definite authority. Whether it was because of the sweetness and purity of the water that flowed from the spring, whether a "bee-tree" with its rich deposit of honey once stood by the spring, whether stolen honey was once hidden there, must be left to future investigation.

GUINEA

is an old name applied to a settlement made by colored people, east of the Honey-Pot farm. They had been the slaves of Col. McLaughry, of New Windsor, and were freed by him, 1825 to 1828. The three heads of the old families were John, Thomas, and William. They were industrious, useful citizens, and highly respected by their white neighbors. The land was given to them by Col. McLaughry, consisting of a ridge running north and south, some of it rough, but mostly good land.

BULL HACK

is an old name applied to a section of this town lying about a mile south of Circleville and a half-mile or more in breadth. It is proper here to correct the statement of a previous writer that this land is "high, stony, rough, and hard to subdue." On the contrary, quite a portion consists of low, valuable, alluvial flats, and other parts are rich uplands, comprising some of the best farms in town. Doubtless the name originated from the fact that some of William Bull's descendants settled in this section at an early day, and in the dense forest then to be cleared "hacking" away for a living was doubtless a necessity; but this epithet Bull Hack was not understood to be derogatory either to the soil or to the people who lived there.

PIERCE VALLEY

was a name applied to the beautiful Parmalee estate about the time that Franklin Pierce, of New Hampshire, was elected to the Presidency. It has remained one of the local terms in use to some extent at the present time.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

At the annual meeting April 6, 1813, the necessary steps were taken to comply with the statute of 1812 for the organization of the common-school system of the State. The commissioners elected were William Hurtin, Jacob Dunning, and Benjamin Woodward. Others, serving one or more years each, during the period 1813 to 1844, were Walter Everett, William Booth, Elijah Welch, Henry B. Wisner, Joseph Chattle, Samuel Millspaugh, John Brown, Jr., William Finn, Jonathan B. Webb, Stephen Ingersoll, George Little, Israel H. Wickham, Shubael B. Denton, Lear-tus M. Weller, Jacob Mills, Jr., John B. McMunn, Samuel W. Brown, Robert H. Houston, Stephen Harlow, Nathaniel Conklin, Charles Dill, James F. Houston, William Hoyt, James M. Finch, Abraham Vail, Jr., John M. Cash. Several of these served for many years, particularly William Hurtin, who was an incumbent of the office a large share of the thirty years.

During the same period inspectors of schools were chosen, and served one or more years each, as follows: Rev. Abel Jackson, Rev. Methuselah Baldwin, Joseph Chattle, Gabriel N. Phillips, William Bodle, Isaiah Vail, Joshua Hornbeck, Dr. David Hanford, Dr. Benjamin B. Newkirk, Benjamin Dodge, Dr. Eusebius

Austin, Henry B. Wisner, Nathan Stark, Rev. William Blain, Stephen Ingersoll, Benjamin Woodward, Thomas W. Gilbert, Thomas Royce, John B. McMunn, George Houston, Isaiah S. Hulse, Daniel C. Wisner, Ira Moore, Ambrose Hulse, Harvey Everett, James W. Finch, Alfred Hurtin, John W. Cash, Coe G. Bradner, Jonathan M. Vail, Wilmot Moore.

Several of these citizens decided on the qualification of teachers for many years. Especially should it be mentioned that Rev. Mr. Baldwin served twenty-five or more of the thirty years that this system prevailed. Joshua Hornbeck also served about the same length of time.

The system of supervision by town superintendents was inaugurated in 1844. The incumbents of that office in Wallkill were as follows:

Elected annually: 1844, John G. Wilkin; 1845, Hiram Shons; 1846, Hiram Shons; 1847, Harvey Everett. Elected biennially: 1848, Harvey Everett; 1850, Harvey Everett; 1852, Harvey Everett; 1854, Alexander T. Bull; 1855, Harvey Everett (to fill vacancy); 1856, Henry S. Mosher. This last-named incumbent was legislated out of office, or rather prevented from qualifying, by the act creating district commissioners. At this date all control of the schools by the town authorities ceased. If the new system had any advantages, there was nevertheless a serious loss of town leadership and town enthusiasm that in many cases has never been recovered. Twenty-five years of the Assembly district system have failed to show its superiority to "local, home control." The proposition occasionally mentioned, even in official reports at Albany, to re-establish a Board of Education in each town, is an indication of this fact, and to it sooner or later the State will undoubtedly return.

A partial school report on file for April 1, 1815, shows the following facts:

District No. 1.—Alsop Vail and others, trustees; 91 children between five and fifteen; entitled to $41.17.

District No. 6.—Wm. Bull, Jr., and others, trustees; 62 children, and entitled to $28.05.

District No. 7.—John Savage, trustee; the same.

District No. 8.—John Fowler, trustee; 68 children, and entitled to $30.77.

District No. 9.—John McWilliams, trustee; 84 children; entitled to $38.00.

District No. 10.—Simeon Slauson, trustee; 107 children; entitled to $48.40.

District No. 11.—William Phillips, trustee; 92 children; entitled to $41.62.

District No. 12.—Abraham Crane, trustee; 61 children; entitled to $27.60.

District No. 13.—Thomas Thompson, trustee; the same.

District No. 14.—Absalom Weller; 69 children, and entitled to $31.22.

District No. 16.—Peter Hoyt, trustee; 68 children, and entitled to $30.77.

District No. 17.—Elisha Reeve, Jr., trustee; 60 children; entitled to $27.15.

District No. 18.—William Finn, trustee; 57 children; entitled to $25.50.

District No. 19.—James Morrison, Jr., trustee; 54 children; entitled to $24.43.

District No. 20.—Philip Miller; 31 children; entitled to $14.03.

Part District No. 5 (Gosheun).—28 children; entitled to $12.67.

A school at Middletown, prior to the law of 1812, had undoubtedly been maintained by private liberality, as the records show that after the legal organization in 1813 a proposition was made to buy the school-house of the owners thereof.

The first meeting of the district as then organized was held at the house of Obadiah Vail, on the 30th of June, 1813. Stacey Beakes had called the meeting by personally serving a notice on each voter.

Ephraim Everett was chosen chairman, after which the regular officers were elected: Henry D. Wisner, clerk; Isaiah Vail, William Murray, and Isaac Little, trustees; Samuel Bennett, collector.

It was voted to have a school kept in the school-house at Middletown.

At an adjourned meeting in September, held at the same place, it was voted to raise a tax of $60 to purchase a stove and repair the school-house.

One dollar was voted to buy a book for the records, —the book from which the writer makes these notes, sixty-seven years afterwards. They again adjourned to November, but the record of the meeting by the clerk is brief: "It being very rainy no person met at the school-house."

At a meeting held a few days later the trustees exhibited an account of expenses incurred in repairs amounting to $37.75, which the meeting responded to by voting a tax of $20.

It was voted to have an assistant teacher employed. William Murray and Henry B. Wisner were named as a committee to see about purchasing the school-house.

At an adjourned meeting in February, Jesse Corwin was chosen moderator. The committee on school-house reported in part.

At a meeting April 4, 1814, Isaiah Vail was moderator. The negotiation with the owners of the school-house does not seem to have progressed favorably, for it was moved "that we abandon the present school-house as district property," and this was carried. The next motion was, "Shall we be contented with the present school-house until we are ordered out by the proprietors?" and they voted "No." The next vote was on the question, "Is it necessary to have a new school-house?" and it was voted in the affirmative. Moses H. Corwin, Eusebius Austin, and Henry B. Wisner were appointed a committee on location, price, etc. In June the committee reported that lands could be obtained of George W. Vail or of Obadiah Vail.

Meanwhile, whether "contented" with the old house or not, they evidently used it, as we find them voting, in October, the sum of $35 "for the school-house."

March 6, 1815, Elisha Reeve was chosen moderator; Henry B. Wisner, Isaiah Vail, and Samuel Bennett were appointed a committee to draw up and present a plan for the future benefit of the district. March 20th the committee reported they could recommend the purchase of no land they could find at present.

Frequent meetings were held without result. Oct.

24, 1865, the clerk, somewhat disgusted, records the following: "Talked and conversed about a month of things of no moment and adjourned."

Oct. 31, 1815, $40 was voted to purchase wood.

At the annual meeting June 29, 1816, Henry B. Wisner was chosen clerk; Samuel Bennett, Elisha Reeve, and Eusebius Austin, trustees; Gabriel Wells, collector.

June 28, 1817, the trustees chosen were Walter Everett, Elijah Welch, Jr., and Cornelius Shons. A committee, consisting of Isaac Vail, Isaac Little, and Gabriel Wells, were again appointed to report upon a suitable site for a school-house and the probable expense of building.

July 12th the committee reported that "Brundage & Smith would sell a corner on the west side of the road for $40; Luther Vail, on the same side, for $50; Luther Reeve, adjoining the turnpike, for $50."

It was then voted that the trustees buy of either Luther Vail or of Brundage & Smith, and they adjourned to September.

The adjourned meeting is reported by the clerk as follows: "Being sick, did not attend at the school-house; understood there was no meeting and no adjournment."

At a special meeting, Jan. 8, 1818, it was voted to buy a site of Luther Vail, on the west side of the road leading to the turnpike. It was further voted to raise a tax of $500 for purchasing the site and building. Isaac Little, Stephen Sayre, and David Warren were appointed a committee to make a draft and estimate, also the probable expense of buying the old school-house and moving it.

At the same meeting they voted that the wood should be furnished by each family in proportion to scholars sent; and if any one failed to furnish the same after three days' notice from the teacher, then Elijah Welch was to furnish for all delinquents at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents per load.

Jan. 22, 1818, the committee reported a plan for a school-house 36 feet by 22, and the estimated expense at $400; that the expense of removing the old house would be $25, and "would save from the expense of building a new one the sum of one hundred and fifteen dollars besides the expenses of moving."

This business grew onerous and difficult for the trustees to manage alone, and an advisory committee to aid them was named, consisting of Samuel Bennett and Isaac Little.

At last the house was built, though the meeting at which it was voted to build seems to be omitted from the records; but at the annual meeting June 7, 1818, the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That the trustees be authorized to appropriate the surplus money they may have in their hands, arising from the tax levied on the 4th of April last (for the purpose of building a new school-house), towards putting another story on said house."

Dec. 3, 1818, it was voted to purchase a "ten-plate stove" for the new school-house.

Feb. 2, 1819, it was voted to sell at public auction the land granted to this district by Abel Woodhull.

In 1814, James Young, of Neelytown, taught school in Scotchtown; he was afterwards a missionary to the Seneca Indians.

Dolly Jane Corwin, daughter of Jason Corwin, of Scotchtown, taught school (private) in Scotchtown about 1840. She died a few years ago, having taught forty-seven years.

About 1828 two small districts were united, and, No. 12 being formed, the building known as the "White School-house" was built upon the southwest corner of James Morrison's farm, now owned by Nathan J. Mills. Morrison gave the land; Bradner Little had the contract for building the house for $300; Samuel Bull did the mason-work. It was long used for religious purposes; in it Circleville Church was organized, and the first communion service administered by the Rev. Daniel T. Wood. For many years it was used by different denominations for regular Sunday afternoon service. Forty-eight persons have held the position of teacher; of these, Henry Crane taught eight years in succession. Sarah E. Wilkison (present teacher) has taught five and one-half years, but at different times. John A. Stitt, near Bloomingburgh, and D. Kerr Bull, of Brooklyn, were among the early teachers; as far as the writer knows, one is a minister in Massachusetts, two are doctors, one a lawyer, seven are dead, and only five are following the profession of teaching. The school-house is just one mile from Circleville.

WALLKILL ACADEMY.

The first meeting to initiate the work of founding this institution was held Jan. 30, 1841. The amount of stock subscribed was $3656.75. The stockholders numbered 115, and the shares were five dollars each. The stockholders met Feb. 27, 1841. Israel H. Wickham was chairman of the meeting, and Ira Moore secretary.

Application having been made to the Legislature for incorporation, the necessary act was passed in the following May. The first board of trustees consisted of the following persons: Israel H. Wickham, Alex. W. Shaw, George Houston, Col. C. Bradner, Stacey Beakes, William S. Webb, Charles Dill, Harvey Everett, Samuel Denton, David Hanford, Calvin Carmichael, Alex. Wright.

The building committee consisted of James Little, Robert H. Houston, and Henry S. Beakes.

The stockholders met March 10, 1841, to decide the location, and a majority voted in favor of a lot on Orchard Street, offered by Stacey Beakes. A lot offered by Dill & Houston was the one upon which the building was finally erected. David Clark was the contractor. The building was commenced in August, 1841, and accepted as completed by the trustees in October, 1842.

The first teacher was Rev. Phineas Robinson, who opened the first session soon after the building was completed, and remained two years.

His successor was Patrick McGregor, who taught five years, and who was succeeded by Henry Freeman. He also taught five years, when he was succeeded by Rev. P. Teller Babbitt. The latter remained a year and a half, when D. Kerr Bull was appointed principal.

The academy as thus erected was a very convenient building, three stories high, with a basement. The principal and his family occupied the second floor and the rooms of the basement.

On the first floor was the school-room, with two recitation-rooms attached. The third floor was divided into eleven rooms, for students who boarded in the institution.

The teachers of the public schools of Middletown for 1880-81 are as follows:

School No. 1 (Cottage Street).—Ellen Wickham, principal; Mary J. Barlow and Isabella McBurney.

School No. 2 (High Street).—Florence Dennison, principal; Annie Gray, Elizabeth Corwin, Fannie Corwin, Sarah B. Russell, and Helen M. Dorrance.

School No. 3 (Bennett Hill).—Mrs. S. R. Baird, principal; S. Louise King, Anna Friend, and Lottie L. Boyd.

School No. 4 (Beattie Hill).—Eugenia DeKay, principal; Rebecca J. Worcester and Carrie Harding.

School No. 5 (Orchard Street).—Sarah E. Darbee, principal; Hattie Bull and Evie Brett.

Primary, No. 6 (South Street).—Mary L. Burroughs, principal; E. Katie Sease.

Academy.—Senior Department, Lydia J. Van Housen; Intermediate Department, Ira L. Case; Junior Department, Anna B. Dunning; Teacher of English Grammar, Sarah E. Igo; Arithmetic, Nettie B. Cooper; Geography, Annice M. Parsons.

THE STATE HOMŒOPATHIC ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE AT MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.

This institution was originated in 1869, through the exertions of George F. Foote, M.D., and of certain public-spirited citizens, both in Orange County and in other sections of the State, who were desirous of applying the principles of the homœopathic school of medicine to the care and relief of the insane.

In January, 1870, a bill was placed in the hands of William M. Graham (who was then representing this district in the Senate of this State) for the purpose of obtaining, through the action of the Legislature, an act incorporating the above-named institution. To the surprise and regret of many of the warm and ardent friends of the project, the bill upon its third reading received but five or six affirmative votes in the State Senate.

The cause of the bill receiving so few affirmative votes in the Senate was owing to the fact that Dr. Foote and the friends of the proposed institution were desirous of making it a private asylum, and obtaining State aid to the amount of $150,000, or, in other words, of obtaining an appropriation from the State of that amount for a private institution.

After an examination of the subject by those who felt a deep interest in the establishing of the institution, it was apparent that an act of that character, if passed by the Legislature, would conflict with the strict construction of the constitution, and would therefore be declared by the courts as unconstitutional.

The friends of the project feeling so deep an interest in their undertaking, and so anxious for its success, were perfectly willing to comply with whatever means were necessary for the fulfillment and accomplishment of the object so dear to them.

The senator of this district was authorized and requested to prepare and perfect a bill that would meet the requirement of the constitution, as well as the earnest wishes and desires of the numerous friends of the new project. Accordingly, a bill was thus prepared, and presented to the Senate for their consideration some time in the month of February, 1870, and, after the usual course all bills presented to the Senate have to take, it received their unanimous assent,—not a negative vote against the measure.

The bill then took its usual course in the Assembly chamber, and after a thorough discussion of the merits and demerits of the proposed measure, it received the unanimous assent of the members of the Assembly (as in the case of the Senate), not a negative vote being cast. The act was passed April 28, 1870, and received the signature of Governor John T. Hoffman, on the day of its final passage by the Legislature.

The first section of the act provided: "There shall be established at Middletown, in the county of Orange, a State lunatic asylum for the care and treatment of the insane and inebriate, upon the principles of medicine known by the homœopathic, and it shall be known by the name of the State Homœopathic Asylum for the Insane at Middletown. There shall be twenty-one trustees to manage said institution," and George F. Foote, Thomas Hitchcock, Frederick A. Conkling, William M. Graham were appointed as such trustees.

It was required of the trustees at their first meeting to draw lots in order to divide themselves into seven classes of three each, which chosen should hold office one, two, three, four, five, six, and seven years respectively. The treasurer of the State was directed to pay, on the warrant of the comptroller, to the trustees named in the act such sum or sums of money as might be required for the building of said asylum, such sum or sums of money in the aggregate not to exceed $150,000; but that said sum or sums of money should not be paid until it was proven to the satisfaction of the comptroller that $150,000 had been subscribed by private persons, and actually paid in cash, to be applied to the purchase of a site and the construction and maintenance of the asylum.

In January, 1871, a bill was presented to the Senate, entitled an act to amend an act passed April 28, 1870, "to establish a State lunatic asylum upon the principles of the homœopathic, in Middletown, county of Orange," and became a law March 31, 1871, having passed both houses of the Legislature and received the signature of the Governor.

This amendment made it the duty of the treasurer of the State to pay, on the warrant of the comptroller, to the trustees named in the act, whenever it was proven to the satisfaction of the comptroller that they (the trustees) had selected a suitable site for the location of the institution and paid for the same, and that a good and warranty deed had been made out to the State, the sum of twenty thousand dollars for every ten thousand dollars subscribed by private persons or municipalities, and actually paid in cash, and having been used for the purchase of a site and the construction and maintenance of said asylum. Such sum or sums of money in the aggregate not to exceed $150,000.

A site was chosen for the asylum on a farm of 150 acres, located about a mile to the westward of the village of Middletown,—a spot which commends its selection by the beauty of the views which it commands, its excellent and healthful surroundings, its admirable facilities for drainage, supply of water, and ease of access.

The site chosen was secured by the trustees, and paid for by private subscriptions, and the Legislature has made from time to time such appropriations as were necessary for the erection of suitable buildings for the purposes of the asylum, and for beauti-ifying the grounds.

The main building accommodates all the administrative officers and ninety patients. It is 166 feet long by 62 feet deep, and four stories high, exclusive of attic and basement, each floor affording an area of 12,000 square feet. Its architecture is of the Rhenish

Very Truly Yours.
Edw. H. Falcott.

style, combining an appearance of strength with a certain lightness and cheerfulness of effect, which is in marked contrast to the sombre heaviness not infrequently observable in asylum buildings. The edifice is of the best brick, with Ohio stone dressings, and from its front a boldly projecting tower furnishes a porte-cochere to the principal entrance, gives additional space to the elegant music-room on the second floor and the chapel on the third floor, and rises to a height of ninety feet from the ground.

This building was completed and opened to receive patients on the 20th day of April, 1874. Dr. George F. Foote having resigned the position, Henry R. Stiles, M.D., was appointed medical superintendent.

The following were the officers: Fletcher Harper, president; Grinnell Burt, vice-president; Peter S. Hoe, treasurer; M. D. Stivers, secretary.

Trustees, Drs. T. F. Allen, Joshua Draper, John F. Gray, D. C. Jayne, E. D. Jones, E. M. Kellogg, J. W. Ostrom, H. M. Paine, William E. Watson; A. B. Conger, John Cowdry, James G. Graham, H. R. Low, D. D. T. Marshall, Daniel Thompson, Salem H. Wales, E. P. Wheeler.

The first asylum staff was as follows: Henry R. Stiles, M.D., medical superintendent; William M. Butler, M.D., first assistant physician; John Cochran, steward.

Pavilion No. 1, as it is designated for convenience, was opened for the reception of patients in 1876, and is devoted entirely to that purpose. It is 204 feet in length, and three stories in height above the basement, with wing on the southerly end 65 feet deep, and on the northerly end a wing 70 feet deep, and is built of brick and half-timbered work, so constructed as to give it the appearance of three distinct villas, slightly connected by balconies and glass-covered galleries, thus avoiding the prison-like style generally followed in similar institutions.

Externally, this pavilion is considered even more attractive than the main building. Charming, however, as its exterior is to the eye, the interior arrangement is still more graceful and home-like; indeed, the "home-like" has been, and will be, a sine qua non in the planning of all the building of the asylum.

By an act of the Legislature passed June 21, 1875, the board was changed both as to its numbers and composition. The number of trustees thereafter were to be thirteen, and Fletcher Harper, Jr., and Egbert Guernsey, of New York; Grinnell Burt, of Warwick; Joshua Draper, Nathaniel W. Vail, Uzal T. Hayes, James B. Hulse, James H. Norton, Moses D. Stivers, of Middletown; James G. Graham, of Newburgh; Daniel Thompson, of Thompson's Ridge; H. M. Paine, of Albany; and William H. Watson, of Utica, were the persons named as trustees.

At the first meeting of said trustees they shall draw by lots in order to divide themselves as nearly as may be into three equal classes; one class of five shall hold office for two years, and one class of four shall hold office for three years, and one class of four shall hold office for four years respectively.

Feb. 9, 1877, Dr. Henry R. Stiles resigned his position as medical superintendent of the asylum, and in the month of April following Dr. Selden H. Talcott, the newly-elected medical superintendent, assumed charge of the institution, and continues in this capacity.

Pavilion No. 2 is now nearing its completion. It is built with a view of great stability and convenience, being about the same dimensions, similar in architecture, and built of like material as pavilion No. 1. To the eye it appears grand and beautiful. It is built in a substantial and workmanlike manner in every particular. The turrets are somewhat different in form, size, and design from those on pavilion No. 1, which adds very much to the general appearance, gracefulness, and beauty of the structure.

It may also be considered as a building of four stories, the fourth, or attic story (unlike pavilion No. 1), being finished into pleasant, well-ventilated, cheerful rooms for greater convenience, and for the accommodation of a larger number of patients.

Externally this pavilion, when completed, in its grand, majestic appearance, will be considered the peer of its associates.

The interior arrangements are somewhat different from pavilion No. 1, having been arranged with a view to greater convenience, and will be considered, if possible, more graceful, more convenient, and more home-like than its predecessor. It will be completed for the reception of patients in the early part of the coming summer.

The present management of the asylum is as follows:

Trustees: Fletcher Harper, president; Grinnell Burt, vice-president; M. D. Stivers, secretary; Uzal T. Hayes, treasurer; Egbert Guernsey, M.D., Daniel Thompson, James H. Norton, Hon. John G. Wilkin, Joshua Draper, M.D., Hon. James G. Graham, Hon. William Herring, William Vanamee, Hiram J. Sibley, Jr. Officers of the asylum: Selden H. Talcott, A.M., M.D., medical superintendent; Wm. M. Butler, A.M., M.D., first assistant physician; C. Spencer Kinney, M.D., second assistant physician; Miss Georgie Horton, lady assistant; John Cochran, steward.

SELDEN H. TALCOTT, A.M., M.D., was born in Rome, N. Y., July 7, 1842. He was brought up on a farm, and received the ordinary common-school and academic education, such as is usually accorded to farmers' sons. In 1863 he attended the commencement exercises at Hamilton College, Clinton, N. Y., and from that time determined to acquire a collegiate education. In one year he prepared for and entered college. Shortly after this he enlisted in the Fifteenth New York Volunteers, engineers, and served in the Union army for about one year, receiving at the close of the war an honorable discharge. On returning from the South, in 1865, he re-entered college, and graduated in the class of 1869. During his academic course he took prizes in English composition and declamation. During his college course he received appointments as prize speaker and Clark prize orator. During his senior year at college he was one of the editors of the Hamilton Campus, a college weekly. After graduating from Hamilton College he began the study of medicine with Dr. E. A. Munger, Waterville, N. Y. After pursuing the required three years' course of study, and having taken two courses of medical lectures at the New York Homœopathic Medical College, he graduated from that institution in 1872 with the highest standing in a class of thirty-six. During his last course of lectures he was elected president of the College Quiz Society, and was also at the close of the term unanimously chosen valedictorian of the class. After graduating he returned to Waterville, N. Y., and formed a partnership with Dr. Munger, with whom he practiced medicine for about three and a half years. In September, 1875, Dr. Talcott was appointed chief of staff of the Homœopathic Charity Hospital, located at Ward's Island, N. Y. He remained in charge of that institution, performing the duties of medical superintendent in the New York City Asylum for Inebriates, and in the Soldiers' Retreat at New York, until April 24, 1877. Then he resigned to accept the position of medical superintendent of the New York State Homœopathic Asylum for the Insane, which latter position had been tendered him by an unanimous vote of the board of trustees of that institution. Since that time he has been, and still is, in charge of the above-named asylum. Under his management the institution has become self-sustaining, and the percentage of recoveries shows in a most favorable light the efficacy of homœopathic treatment for the insane.

In public affairs Dr. Talcott has always taken an active interest. During the campaigns of 1868 and 1872 he made stump speeches in behalf of the Republican cause in the county of Oneida. He served at various times as delegate to county and district conventions. Since assuming charge of public institutions he has refrained from active political work, whilst cherishing an abiding interest in the fortunes of the Republican party. Dr. Talcott is a member of various medical societies. At present he is president of the New York State Homœopathic Medical Society, and of the Orange County Homœopathic Medical Society. In 1875 he was president of the Oneida County Homœopathic Medical Society. In 1876 he was elected a member of the New York County Homœopathic Medical Society; he is also a member of the American Institute of Homœopathy, a national organization, and is also corresponding fellow of the New York Medico-Chirurgical Society. In 1879 he was appointed a member of the State Board of Medical Examiners by the regents of the University of New York. Dr. Talcott has been for some years known to the public as a writer and a speaker. He has delivered lectures to the general public and before various societies and literary organizations. Among the medical topics upon which he has written, some of which have been published in pamphlet form, are the following: "Prognosis in Insanity," "General Paresis," "Medical Notes on the Treatment of the Insane," "Mania, its Causes, Course, and Treatment," "Melancholia with Stupor," "Phimos in its Relations to Insanity," "Delusions of the Insane," "The Insane Diathesis," and "Sleep without Narcotics."

VII.—CHURCHES.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

This church was organized June 10, 1785. It then consisted of a few members from the scattered population (who were chiefly emigrants from Long Island), gathered into a church relation by the Rev. Charles Seeley, who came to this place from Newton, N. J. In 1792, the seventh year of its history, there were 36 members; the original deacons were James Reeve and Eli Corwin.

The society was incorporated Aug. 12, 1786, under the title of the "First Congregational Church of Middletown, in the precinct of Wallkill and county of Ulster." The original trustees, chosen at that date, were James Reeve, Jonathan Owen, Nathaniel Wells, Samuel Wickham, Wm. Carpenter, and Eli Corwin. Nathaniel Landon was chosen clerk, and Nathaniel Wells treasurer.

The same year the first house of worship erected in Middletown was built by the Congregational Society, on land provided by John Green in his will,[†] dated Dec. 12, 1784, for the sum of £3, which sum was paid to said Green's executors, who confirmed the same to the society by deed bearing date April 10, 1786, giving title to one-half acre of land, to which was added fifteen and one-fifth square rods of land by deed from Jonathan Owen for the sum of five shillings, bearing date July 12, 1786. Some portion of each of the above-named purchases was used for the highway. The house was enclosed that year but not finished, and continued to be used for worship in an unfinished state about ten years.

Feb. 12, 1796, an inventory of the society's property was taken by the trustees and recorded as follows: "One-half acre of land and meeting-house thereon, valued at £150. Voted that £10 be raised to move the house back from the street, and also voted to finish the interior of the same and sell the seats to pay the expense." A second inventory was taken and recorded Feb. 27, 1799, of property belonging to the First Congregational Society of Middletown, in the words following, to wit: "One-half acre of land

* Furnished by the officers of the church.

† The language of the will might be interpreted as implying that the church was constituted some two years earlier (or at least one year) than June 10, 1785, but the officers give the usual statement of the manual.

and meeting-house thereon, finished, valued at £200, certified according to law, Jacob Dunning, clerk."

This was the only house of worship in Middletown for more than forty years.

The society was prosperous; additions were frequently made to the church, particularly in 1815, when, as the result of a revival, 120 were received to its communion.

In 1825 the membership of the church was 267, of whom more than 100 were males. At this time it had been the custom for the society to vote from time to time, granting to other denominations the use of the house for worship when not occupied by themselves. This gave rise and created a desire in some of its members to change the church polity from Congregational to Presbyterian.

Under the ministrations of the Rev. George Stebbins, a Presbyterian minister, a proposition was made in meeting, Aug. 25, 1825, to change the church order and adopt the Presbyterian platform, and after repeated and persistent attempts to accomplish the same, meetings being adjourned from time to time, Sept. 29, 1825, a vote of fifteen out of the whole membership was obtained in favor of said change. Only nine of those opposed being present to vote against the measure, entered their protest against the proceedings as being unwarranted and illegal.

The society continued to worship in the same house, under the ministrations of the Rev. George Stebbins, until March 19, 1827, and still further, under Rev. Donald McIntosh, until September, 1829, and also under Rev. Daniel T. Wood, until May, 1830, when those of the Presbyterian order commenced to worship in their new house, located on Orchard Street.

As a result of this separation, however, the old Congregational meeting-house was illegally demolished by the Presbyterians, July 26, 1833, and on August 3d following a prosecution was commenced by the Congregationalists against the trespassers. On the 28th of the same month the Congregational society voted to build a new house of worship, 50 by 40 feet, upon the site of the former one, and to finish the same with a gallery.

April 26, 1834, the whole matter of dispute between the two societies was settled by articles of agreement, in which the Presbyterian society acknowledged their trespass and made reparation.

The new meeting-house was erected in 1834, but not finished. John T. Ludlum and Thomas Van Horn were the builders, at a cost of $1260. In 1836 the interior of the house was finished by contract with Isaac Mills for $800, to which a bell was subsequently added, and the house was dedicated July 14, 1836. The sermon on the occasion was delivered by the Rev. Joseph Harrison, of Broadway Tabernacle, New York City, and on the following Sabbath, July 17th, the house was occupied for worship, when the church-members renewed their covenant in a solemn manner and the Lord's Supper was administered.

This house continued to be occupied by the society until 1871, when it was removed to make way for the present edifice, which was erected during that and the following year, the dimensions of which are 100 by 60 feet, besides abutments, with a lecture-room attached 70 by 30 feet, the whole in Gothic style, requiring 600,000 bricks, with Syracuse stone trimming, covered with a slate roof and ornamented with a spire 185 feet high. The corner-stone, which is of the Syracuse variety, with a cavity containing an airtight copper box, in which some documents were placed, was, on Thursday, May 16, 1872, laid in the foundation at the southeast corner of the building, in a conspicuous position, with appropriate ceremonies, the Rev. Dr. Taylor, of the Broadway Tabernacle, of New York City, officiating on the occasion.

The architect was I. G. Perry, of Binghamton, N. Y., and Peter H. Terhune, of the same place, was the contractor. Building committee, Wickham C. McNish, Selah R. Corwin, Stephen S. Conkling, John M. Hanford, and Oliver P. Reeve.

This house, with its appointments, not including grounds, cost the large sum of $49,900, which has been nearly all paid. A small amount still remaining unpaid is mostly provided for by subscriptions. The church was dedicated Oct. 22, 1873; the sermon on the occasion was delivered by the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, of Brooklyn, N. Y. The present officers are as follows: Pastor, Rev. Frederick R. Marvin; Deacons, Daniel Ogden, elected 1840; Selah R. Corwin, 1850; Menander Sands, 1850; Samuel C. Mapes, 1868; Gilbert L. Parsons, 1877; Oliver P. Reeve, 1877. Trustees, John M. Hanford, Wickham C. McNish, Selah R. Corwin, Oliver P. Reeve, James B. Crawford, Samuel C. Mapes, and Frederick W. Lowe. Treasurer, Oliver P. Reeve.

The number of members, as per manual, is 238, males 90, females 148, quite a number of whom are absent; number of families, about 100. There is also a flourishing Sabbath-school connected with the church numbering 212 pupils, O. Clark Crawford, superintendent.

The church edifice has a commanding and elegant appearance, being centrally located on rising ground near the centre of the town, convenient of access, thereby exhibiting the wisdom and forethought of the early settlers in its location.

The following is a list of the ministers employed by the society from its commencement to the present time:

June 10, 1785, to June 10, 1797, Rev. Charles Seeley; Nov. 27, 1797, to Aug. 4, 1803, Rev. Wm. M. Smith; Jan. 1, 1805, to June 7, 1807, Rev. Wm. Bull; Aug. 28, 1807, to Aug. 26, 1812, Rev. Allen Blair; Sept. 12, 1812, to June 9, 1819, Rev. Abel Jackson; April 15, 1820, to April 20, 1822, Rev. William Blain; Feb. 1, 1824, to Sept. 29, 1825, Rev. Geo. Stebbins; Nov. 1, 1836, to Oct. 1, 1837, John Fishpool; Dec. 1, 1837, to Oct. 8, 1838, Rev. Michael La Cost; Nov. 2, 1838, to April 3, 1841, Rev. Charles Machin; May 26, 1842, to June 26, 1845, Rev. Harris Righter; June 26, 1845, to July 30, 1846, John C. Terrett; Nov. 12, 1846, to June 26, 1851, Rev. Lewis C. Lockwood; Oct. 5, 1851, to Aug. 31, 1854, Samuel Y. Lum; Aug. 31, 1854, to May 1, 1855, Rev. Geo. W. Timlow; Oct. 1, 1855, to Nov. 13, 1859, Rev. Daniel Lancaster; April 1, 1860, to Sept. 1, 1868, Rev. Jonathan Crane; Dec. 24, 1868, to July 1, 1875, Rev. Charles A. Harvey; Oct. 1, 1875, Jonathan Crane, died Dec. 25, 1877; April 18, 1878, F. R. Marvin, present pastor.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF HOWELL'S DEPOT.

For the dates of incorporation of this society see chapter upon Mount Hope, as it was located within that town down to about 1847.

This organization is said to be the second Congregational Church formed in the State of New York, the first being upon Long Island. The earliest book of records is a valuable memorial not only of this one church, but of the usages of Congregational Churches one hundred years ago. Upon its venerable, time-stained pages is recorded a full confession of faith, and a covenant to which the first members not only assented in solemn public form, but affixed their signatures to the engrossed copy. The record is simple, the foundation of a visible church of Jesus Christ being entered in these few words:

"Memorandum of the proceedings of the church begun in New Shawangunk, July 3, 1782.

"Messrs. Eliab Farnaham, Enos Woodward, Sr., and wife, Joseph Smith and wife, Elijah Reeve, Jr., unite and agree that a church meeting be held the first Wednesday in every succeeding month."

August 7th it is recorded that the conference opened by prayer, and it was agreed that an orderly freedom be given to exhort, provided they be judged of sound principles and good morals, in the absence of a minister.

Discussion ensued on the usefulness of reading. It was agreed that at all times it may be profitable to meet on the Sabbath-day to perform acts of divine worship, as prayer, praise, etc., and to read the works of pious authors approved as orthodox; this to be done in the absence of a minister. Discussion ensued on the profitableness of exhortation after a minister's conclusion; not granted to be generally useful, but if done, to be done orderly, forbearing any enlargement or comment upon the minister's discourse. Appointments were also made as follows: Mr. Eliab Farnaham to be moderator, to open meeting, etc., and to be chorister; Mr. Enos Woodward, vice-chorister; Thomas White, schoolmaster, to be reader in the absence of a minister, and to give out the psalms; Mr. Joseph Smith, vice do.; these persons being nominated to be offered to the first full meeting of the congregation for choice.

Oct. 2, 1782.—It was decided that only members of the church should be present when candidates were examined. This question, however, caused much subsequent discussion.

Feb. 12, 1783, Frances, daughter of Elijah and Mary Reeve, was baptized. This indicates that some minister was with them on this occasion. Mr. Timothy Coleman was examined, and having subscribed to the articles was admitted a member.

Elizabeth Ames was also examined, but being un-baptized was continued as a candidate. Thomas White was examined; "present Mr. Seale;" this doubtless implied that he was a minister.

Wednesday, April 2, 1783.—Inquired into the propriety of female members "having or not a voice in church debates." Deferred for future consideration.

Aug. 6, 1783.—Departed this life, Mary, wife of Elijah Reeve, a member of this church, remarkable for patience, piety, and resignation.

Considerable discussion was had with reference to the obtaining of a pastor. These few Christians in the wilderness, faithful to the traditions of their fathers and the freedom of the New England Church, had instituted a church of their own without priest or prelate, owing allegiance to no head save Jesus Christ the only Lord of the conscience.

April 18, 1784.—Mr. Constant preached as a candidate; highly approved.

May 2.—Mr. Shepherd preached; esteemed as a promising gospel minister, but Mr. Constant bears the greatest sway in the minds of the people. About this time a part desired to settle a Baptist minister, one Mr. West.

Oct. 2, 1784.—Received as members Thomas White, Eliz White, Job Smith, Kezia Skinner. Rev. Mr. Lewis preached the sermon this day.

Oct. 13, 1784.—Mr. Mapes (first name not given) was admitted an occasional communicant at the Lord's Supper, which was celebrated.

The same day there was baptized Eliab, Stephen, Joshua, children of Eliab Farnaham, and Jane, a daughter of Timothy Coleman.

The record adds, "This was the first time the Lord's Supper had ever been administered in these parts." After sermon all the members stood up and assented to the confession and covenant. Mr. Joseph Corwin was received as a member.

Jan. 28, 1785.—Mr. John St. John was received. In 1791, Nov. 8th, a vote was taken authorizing Rev. B. Bradner to request of Morris County Presbytery for a minister, viz., for Mr. Abel Jackson. There are some evidences that this church was either for a part of the earlier years Presbyterian or perhaps simply had close fraternal relations with Presbyterian Churches, and acted to a certain extent with Morris County Presbytery.*

It is difficult to determine from the records much about the succession of pastors. Rev. Mr. Lewis seems to have preached at various times, but he was probably the pastor of some neighboring church.

The early roll of members did not fill up rapidly. It comprised, previous to 1803, only the following:

Joseph Smith, Mary Smith, Elijah Reeve, Enos Woodward, Mary Woodward, Eliab Farnaham, 1782; Timothy Coleman, 1783; Thos. White, Eliz White, Job Smith, Joshua Corwin, Sr., 1784; Moses Smith, Mrs. Moses Smith, Samuel Mapes, Jr., 1785; Kezia Mapes, Mary Mapes, Selah Mapes, Mary Shaw, Kezia Skinner, 1786; Wm. Penny, Sr., 1790; Martha Vail, Mary Kelly, 1803.

* See First Presbyterian Church of Mount Hope.

Possibly the church may have been partially associated with the old Presbyterian Church of Pine Plains, now Mount Hope village.

March 23, 1796, it was voted "to unite with the church and society at Middletown to obtain Mr. Smith for one year (as he had for one quarter) to preach to us."

It is probable the "old yellow meeting-house" at Mapestown was built in 1809 or 1810. Most of the meetings are recorded as having been held at the school-house, but about that time the meeting-house is mentioned.

In 1810, David Corwin and Erastus Mapes were deacons; David Corwin, Selah Mapes, Jonathan Coleman, trustees. The removal of the society to Howell's, and the building of a new house of worship at the latter place, occurred about 1847. The house has been kept in excellent repair.

The pastors during the later years of the church have been Rev. George Turner, for several years; Rev. Azel Downs; Rev. Moses H. Wilder, four years or more; Rev. George J. Means, for thirteen years, his service being terminated by his death. The last pastor was Rev. Coles R. Wilkin, who also died after nearly three years of service. The pulpit is now vacant. The present officers (December, 1880) are C. H. Mapes, clerk; W. H. Mapes, chorister; Benjamin Mapes, S. W. Waller, standing committee; G. Otis, superintendent of the Sunday-school; J. T. Mapes, assistant; S. E. Mapes, Amzi Mapes, and Wm. E. Mapes, deacons; Herbert Dolsen, S. S. Mapes, Asa Mapes, G. E. Putney, Andrew T. Bertholf, trustees.

There must have been an early parsonage at Mapestown, as in the records of 1784-85 relating to the proposed settlement of a Baptist minister, one party charges the other with being about "to seize the parsonage." In later years, before the removal to Howell's, there was a parsonage, which was sold and the proceeds used to buy one here. The present parsonage was built in 1863 or 1864, at a cost of about $3000.

THE PRIMITIVE BAPTIST CHURCH, MIDDLETOWN, was incorporated May 29, 1871. The certificate was signed by Gilbert Beebe and Benton Jenkins. The trustees named were Hiram Horton, William Inman, Harrison Thompson, Benton L. Beebe, G. A. Emory, and Benton Jenkins.

This was a legal step, seeming to be necessary at the time of building the new house of worship in the village of Middletown, but the society is venerable in years, as shown in the following notice, written by Elder Gilbert Beebe. Of this aged Christian laborer we desire to add a remark from his letter accompanying the history furnished. He says,—

"I have held the pastoral care at New Vernon* fifty-four years last May. My predecessor, Elder Montayne, and myself more than eighty-seven years. I have also supplied the Middletown and Wallkill Church fifty-one years, and I am now in the eightieth year of my age."

* See chapter on Mount Hope.

This length of service in one pastorate is probably without a parallel in the county. Father Beebe is the senior pastor in all this section. His vigor in Christian work, and his interest in everything pertaining to the church, is shown by the fact that he was one of the first to respond to our circular asking for church histories, and promptly sent, in the tremulous handwriting of age, a well-written notice of both the Middletown and New Vernon Churches. A man of firm convictions and positive character, he nevertheless commands the respect of the entire community.

The Old-School or Primitive Baptist Church of Middletown and Wallkill was constituted at Middletown, Oct. 4, 1792. The constituent members were John Green, Daniel Green, Martin L. Corwin, John Cook, Silas Brown, Uriah Hulse, Ezra Witter, Cornelius Brewster, James Springsted, Isaac Kimmy, Silas Hulse, Joseph Brundage, Elihu Caney, Sarah Cook, Sarah Brown, Abigail Hulse, Chloe Green, Sarah Green, Patience Witter, Louis Preston, Phebe Davis, Mariam Brisinten, Mary Hoyt, Jeremiah Thomas, Phebe Springsted, Margaret Hulse, Margaret Remmey, Martha Brundage, Sorberah Rich, Abigail Corwin, John Finch, Enos Finch, 30 in all.

The first deacons were Silas Hulse and John Green. This church continued to hold meetings stately in the free meeting-house in Middletown, in which they had a joint interest with the Congregationalists, until about 1820, when, to accommodate members living north of the village, they built a frame meeting-house about two and three-quarter miles north of Middletown, at what is now called Rockville, which house is still standing as a part of the property of the church, but at present unoccupied, the church having, in 1871, erected a new brick house for public worship on the corner of Roberts and Cottage Streets, in Middletown, where all the stated meetings are now held. This house is 65 by 45, with front gallery and basement, and cost about $11,000.

Elder Thomas P. Terry was pastor until his death, which occurred about fifty years ago. The church has been supplied since that time with the pastoral labors of Elder Gilbert Beebe, who still supplies the pulpit every Sunday at three o'clock P.M., conjointly with his appointments at ten A.M. on the same days at New Vernon. The present number of communicants is 105. The present officers are: Deacons, Hiram Horton and William Inman; Elder Benton Jenkins, clerk. The present board of trustees are Deacon Hiram Horton, president; John L. Hait, secretary; Benton L. Beebe, treasurer; Dr. G. A. Emery, Harrison Thompson, Deacon William Inman.

At the time of the erection of the Wallkill church in the Rockville neighborhood the Primitive Baptists filed a new certificate of incorporation, dated Dec. 10, 1821. The proceedings were signed by Thomas P. Terry and Silas D. Horton, as inspectors of the election, and the trustees chosen were David Reynolds, Nathan Slauson, Hiram Horton, Elihu Cary, Daniel

W. Moore, and Christian Shons. The meeting was held at the school-house of No. 16.*

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF SCOTCHTOWN.

The inhabitants of this neighborhood, moved by a desire to secure the means of grace, provided themselves with a house of worship some time before a church was organized. In answer to a public call, a large number of people assembled at the house of George Houston on Dec. 24, 1795.

Col. Wm. Faulkner was appointed chairman of the meeting, and it was resolved that a subscription be opened for building a meeting-house at the corner of the roads above the house of George Houston. It was also resolved that the new congregation should be under the care of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church.

The first trustees were Jacob Mills, Patice Bodle, Samuel Dunning, Edward McNeil, John McCarter, Peter McLaughlin, and George Houston. This board was appointed at the house of George Houston in January, 1796. They employed Mr. Daniel Denton to inclose and paint a meeting-house, and he began his work June 1, 1797.

The house was raised July 1, 1797, and inclosed and painted by September 12th following.

In this condition it remained—without plastering, without pews, without pulpit, and without stoves—until 1806. In September, 1806, the trustees agreed with Daniel Denton to finish the inside of the meeting-house for the sum of $515.

After standing for a period of fifty-seven years, the old church was succeeded by the present one. On Jan. 24, 1854, the board of trustees contracted with Mr. T. H. Lukey to build the present edifice.

The precise date of the organization of the church is not known. On April 19, 1798, Messrs. Jacob Mills and George Houston appeared before Presbytery as commissioners from a Presbyterian Church in the town of Wallkill, and requested that said church be taken under the care of Presbytery, and that supplies might be appointed them.

At the same meeting Rev. Nathan Kerr, of Goshen, Mr. Johns, of Florida, and Mr. King, of Goodwill, were appointed to supply the pulpit one Sabbath each. Mr. Kerr, of Goshen, preached the first sermon in the old church.

April 17, 1799, Rev. Methuselah Baldwin was appointed to preach as a supply for one-third of his time. This he did until April 20, 1803, when he received a call from the church, and was installed June 30, 1803. Rev. Mr. Freeman preached and gave charge to people, and Mr. Kerr the charge to the pastor. On the same day the following persons were elected to the office of ruling elder: John White, Peter McLaughlin, David R. Arnell, and George Houston, who, with Ephraim Everett, Adam Mills-paugh, and Enos Ayers, were ordained on June 16, 1804.

Several revivals occurred during the ministry of Mr. Baldwin. The most marked periods of special religious interest were in 1815, 1820, and 1830. In the fall of 1838 he was laid aside from public labors by the increasing infirmities of old age, and died Feb. 27, 1847.

On March 21, 1839, a call was given to Mr. E. D. G. Prime, who remained in charge of the church until Dec. 15, 1851. On Nov. 4, 1852, Mr. David Beattie, having accepted a call from the church, was ordained and installed as pastor by the Presbytery of Hudson. Rev. John Johnston, of Newburgh, opened the service with prayer. Dr. Snodgrass, of Goshen, preached the sermon. The constitutional questions were proposed by Rev. D. N. Freeland, of Monroe. The ordinary prayer was offered by Rev. J. H. Leggat, of Hope-well. The charge to the pastor was given by Rev. R. H. Beattie, and the charge to the people by Rev. E. D. G. Prime.

The elders who have served since the original session have passed away are Stephen Harlow, Sr., James Boak, Samuel Millsbaugh, John McWilliams, Jason Corwin, Joshua Hornbeck, Joseph Slaughter, James McWilliams, Archibald Slaughter, Stephen Harlow, Chas. Conner, Alanson Slaughter, Morris Lee, Gilbert Corwin, and George Wallace.

THE CONGREGATION OF UNION CHURCH AT NEW SHAWANGUNK effected a legal organization Sept. 23, 1799. The certificate was signed by Joseph Crawford and Samuel Faulkner, two of the elders of said church, and the trustees named in this instrument were Daniel Stringham, John Newkirk, Thomas Burns, Isaiah Vail, Jr., Robert Smith, John Still, William Stubbs, John Weed, and John Puff.

This society executed a new certificate March 16, 1801. The paper was signed by John Stitt and William Douglass, inspectors of election, and the trustees named therein were John Newkirk, Benjamin Simons, William Morrison, William Stubbs, Daniel Stringham, and Robert Crawford.

This neighborhood was south of the Newburgh and Cochection turnpike, between Fair Oaks and Bloomingburgh about half-way, near where Prosperous Valley Creamery is now situated.

This church had a house of worship, known as the "old Union House," on the present Shearer place, near the Bloomingburgh Mills. The cemetery still indicates the site of the early meeting-house.

THE SECOND METHODIST EPISCOPAL, BETTER KNOWN AS MOUNT JOHNSON CHURCH.†

A small band of people in the vicinity of Circleville wishing to establish a Methodist Church near them, met April 16, 1846, and incorporated themselves

* Since this was written, Elder Beebe has been added to the list of those who "were but are not." He died in the spring of 1881.

† By Miss Sarah E. Wilkison.

in a body, electing Enos Ayers, Augustus M. Winters, James White, Charles Scott, and John Redfield as trustees of this "Methodist Episcopal Church." The land was given by Mrs. Mary Johnson, and as the building sat upon a hill, they named the church Mount Johnson. It was one mile west of Circleville, on the direct road to Bloomingburgh. The house was built by H. S. Wilkison for $100, the congregation finding all the material. William Griffith preached for them for some time, but he was followed by other ministers, who were sent by Conference. After the Bullville church was built, the congregation being so small, it was thought best to abandon this church; some went to Bloomingburgh, others to Bullville. The last sermon was preached by Rev. G. Bohlman, after which the building was sold at public auction and has been removed.

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF MIDDLETOWN

effected a legal organization March 31, 1828. The proceedings were signed by Thomas Houston and James Little, as inspectors of election. The trustees chosen were John Corwin, Jacob Dunning, Israel H. Wickham, Nathaniel Bailey, Gabriel Little, Nathan H. Corwin. With reference to the history of this church the following statement is condensed from a historical sermon delivered by Rev. Augustus Seward, D.D., July 2, 1876.

If in any respect it conflicts with the article upon the Congregational Church, we can only say that it seems to be a case where "good men differ" in their views of the facts of early times; and as in another similar case, we deem it proper to give both these accounts as believed by their respective adherents. Possibly candid inquiries may discover by comparison the exact facts of the case.

Each society claims in a certain sense to be the true and only legitimate heir of the one church of June 10, 1785.

"The First Presbyterian Church and congregation of Middletown became such by transformation, deliberately and cautiously made in the year 1825. Previously to that they had existed as a Congregational Church and Society since June 10, 1785, the date of the organization, which was two years prior to the adoption of the Federal Constitution. Rightly, therefore, our history reaches to within less than a decade of the beginning of the century whose close the nation now is celebrating. Records are extant, and have been carefully consulted by the speaker, which go back to within seven years of the organization, and three years prior to the erection of the Presbytery of Hudson, with which the church early became, and still is, connected; and with the exception of an interval of two years (1803-5), these records are continuous and full.

"The first minute represents the church as 'being met according to adjournment,' Sept. 22, 1792, in which year the Primitive Baptist Church in this place was constituted, ours having been for some years previously the only religious organization in the village. It is an interesting fact that the special business transacted at the first recorded meeting was the reception of fourteen persons as candidates for admission to the church, and the taking of five others 'under the watch' of the church.

"In the month following, October, 1792, the church sought Presbyterian connection and supervision. It chose John Dunning deacon, and commissioned him to 'go as a Delegate to the Presbytery of Morris County.' For a time it sent delegates frequently, if not regularly, to that Presbytery; but subsequently, upon the organization of the Presbytery of Westchester, it formed a connection with the latter, upon whose roll of membership occur the names of several who first preached here. Both of these Presbyteries, which were styled 'Independent' and 'Associate,' were formed by ministers who withdrew from the Presbytery of New York and adopted a platform which has been described as 'Presbyterian in form but Congregational in fact.' From one or the other of these Presbyteries the church received counsel and obtained supplies from time to time, as the pulpit was vacant, until, by the dissolution of the Presbytery of Westchester, it was left without ecclesiastical connection. It then sent Deacon Eli Corwin to the Presbytery of Hudson, April 20, 1824, with a request for connection with that body. The request was granted, and Deacon Corwin was received as the first representative of this church in the Presbytery, with which, in the year following, it sought again connection upon a different basis.

"The succession of ministers was as follows:

"Rev. Charles Seeley, from the beginning, perhaps, to 1796, who divided his labors with the church at 'Shawangunk,' as the records have it, afterwards known as the 'Plains,' near Mount Hope.

"Rev. Zenas Smith, who, after having preached for a time on trial, seems to have been chosen permanent supply, and was ordained here in 1798, yet not installed.

"Rev. William Bull, from 1805 to 1807.

"Rev. Allen Blair, from 1808 to 1812, who divided his labors with the church at Ridgebury, preaching here during a part of his engagement on every third Sabbath.

"Rev. Abel Jackson, from 1812 to 1819.

"Rev. Abner (?) Brundage.

"Rev. — Boughton.

"Rev. William Blain, for three years from 1820.

"Rev. Daniel Young, in 1823.

"Rev. George Stebbins, in 1824.

"Of these ministers two only were pastors. The first pastor was Rev. Abel Jackson, who was installed in June, 1814, and dismissed in May, 1819.

"Under Mr. Jackson's ministry occurred what is denominated 'the great revival,' which still is remembered by some among us as a precious season of marked and wide-spread religious interest. As the fruit of this work, 85 individuals were received on one occasion into the communion of the church; and, in all, 123 were added in a few months, while others also were propounded as candidates for church fellowship,—numbers these whose significance can only be appreciated by remembering how sparse was the population then as compared with the present; for the town of Wallkill had then been organized but twenty-seven years, while not until a year later than these events was a post-office established at Middletown, with receipts, as returned for the first quarter, of only sixty-nine cents.

"At this time (in 1815) was instituted a weekly Wednesday evening meeting for social worship, among the most efficient supporters of which was one 'colored Abel,' whose name abides until this day among the most grateful recollections of the past. The meeting, perpetuated for now more than sixty years, is still held on the same evening of the week.

"A year later than the institution of this meeting a Sabbath-school was organized on the borders of the congregations of Middletown, Goshen, and Ridgebury, the children being collected from the families of these three societies and others living in the vicinity of the 'Outlet.' From this movement came the organization of a Sabbath-school in the village of Middletown prior to 1824, while with this pioneer Sabbath-school enterprise will ever deserve to be associated the name of that mother in Israel, Mrs. Lina Dolson.

"Besides Mr. Jackson, the Rev. George Stebbins was settled as pastor. Coming to serve the church as a licentiate of the Presbytery of Hudson, he was doubtless instrumental in forming the connection which the church soon sought with that Presbytery. Having been called to the pastorate, he was ordained and installed June 9, 1824.

"Various reasons led to a change from Congregationalism to Presbyterianism. But the change was made with great deliberation. A committee of influential names was appointed 'to take into consideration the state of the church with regard to the mode of doing business, and to propose a different mode.'

"The matter thus intrusted to them this committee held under advisement for two months, being found unprepared to report at a regular meeting convened during the interval. And when at length they reported 'that in their opinion it is expedient for this church to adopt the Presbyterian mode of doing business in full, or, in other words, to change our order to that of the Presbyterian,' action upon the report was deferred for another month; when finally the question was taken by ballot, and the report adopted by a vote of fifteen for and nine against it,—a small vote indeed, yet giving a large majority of those who cared to be present and to vote at all, and at the same time revealing a decided purpose on the part of the absentees to offer neither protest nor opposition. The recommendation having been adopted, it was further voted to connect with the Presbytery of Hudson.

"Yet another month elapsed before the change was consummated. The church being met 'agreeable to adjournment,' Nov. 3, 1825, proceeded to 'organize under the Presbyterian order,' and chose 'ten persons to serve as elders to the church.' This action was taken in November; in the following March five of the ten who had been elected having signified their acceptance of the trust, were solemnly ordained, and 'were declared the regularly constituted elders of this church.'

"The number of church-members at this time, or as reported to Presbytery at the meeting in April preceding, was 202, of whom 34 on profession of their faith and 5 by certificates from other churches had been added during the year.

"The change in church organization required a corresponding change for the incorporation of the congregation, and the resolution to effect the latter was passed Jan. 22, 1828, the title then assumed being 'The First Presbyterian Church and Congregation of Middletown.' Two months later, March 31, 1828, the first board of trustees was elected, consisting of John Corwin, Jacob Dunning, Israel H. Wickham, Nathaniel Bailey, Gabriel Little, and Nathan H. Corwin.

"The change of which I have been speaking occurred during the second pastorate,—that of Mr. Stebbins. To him succeeded Rev. Donald McIntosh, whom the congregation, after some months' experience of his ministry, voted to call as their pastor on April 15, 1828. The pastoral relation, however, in this instance was of short continuance. Mr. McIntosh, being in feeble health, sent back his resignation from the State of Florida, whither he had gone for change of climate, and where he died soon after.

"During the absence of Mr. McIntosh the pulpit had been supplied by the Rev. Daniel Thompson Wood, who was licensed April 18, 1828, and was ordained at Florida, in this county, October 23d of the same year. So acceptable his services had proved that, on the same day on which the congregation voted to concur in the request for a dissolution of the pastoral relation, they chose Mr. Wood as the successor. He was installed June 9, 1830, and his pastorate extended through nearly thirty years, terminating with his decease, Aug. 18, 1859.

"Mr. Wood's pastorate was early distinguished by manifest tokens of divine favor, for at the autumnal sacramental service in the year following his installation 51 candidates were admitted to the ordinances of the church on profession of their faith in Christ, while an aggregate of 87 members was similarly added in a single year but shortly afterwards.

"That his pastorate throughout was eminently successful is attested still by the grateful recollection in which his memory is cherished by a large portion of this community, which, while it witnessed his daily life, felt too the moulding influence of his generous sympathy, his wise counsels, and his efficient labors. The memorial tablet which 'sincere affection' raised to his name reminds us, and certifies to all who enter this building, that 'as Friend, Citizen, and Minister he was greatly beloved, eminently useful, universally lamented.'

"In a few months after Mr. Wood's decease the congregation voted to call the fifth pastor,* and the present incumbent was installed Nov. 29, 1859.

"The bench of elders, as at first constituted in 1826 (just fifty years, or half a century ago), consisted of James Little, Thomas Houston, David Hanford, George Little, and Jonathan B. Webb, of whom the last named alone survives; and he, after protracted absence, returned a few years since to dwell among us, and still abides to 'rehearse,' with faculties scarce impaired, 'the righteous acts of the Lord towards the inhabitants of His villages in Israel.'

"The following have since been added to the eldership, viz.: Josiah Howell, Enoch Reeve, John H. Corwin, and Nathaniel Bailey, elected in 1832; Joseph Little, William S. Webb, and Henry Dunning, elected in 1836; Daniel C. Wisner, Hiram S. Dunning, and Henry Little, elected in 1846, the last of whom still remains in office; William Little, Abraham P. Howell, Charles Stewart, William E. Millsapough, Jirah I. Foote, and George J. King, elected in 1864; J. Milton Tuthill, Samuel W. Tryon, and Daniel Corwin, elected in 1872; and in 1879, Luther Sayer and Geo. A. Swalm.

"Four years ago (December, 1872) the church unanimously adopted what is popularly styled the rotary system, or the limited term of ruling eldership, and the change was quietly effected by the voluntary resignation of their positions for such purpose of all except the two senior elders. Under this arrangement three members retire from the Session every three years, when an election is held to fill the vacancies so occasioned.

"The first building erected by the congregation for public worship, and which was the only house of public worship in Middletown for the space of forty years, occupied the site where stands the present Congregational church edifice. It is said to have been raised and inclosed and immediately occupied in 1786, and it is mentioned in the records of 1792. Its erection must have proved a formidable undertaking; for full ten years after it is said to have been raised, and quite four years after the first mention of it in the records, at a parish meeting 'It was put to vote whether or no the church did not think it duty, in their present situation, to petition the Legislature of this State for an act to make a lottery for the purpose of finishing our meeting-house and purchasing a parsonage.' The minute adds, 'It was thought by the majority to be duty.'

"But two years later still, the ordination services of Mr. Smith were conditioned upon 'the carpenter-work being sufficiently advanced.' The house was probably finished during that season, the summer of 1798, having been twelve years in building. The manner of the disposition of the pews is indicated by a minute which has reference to the adjustment of a difficulty between two members respecting the ownership of seats 'in the Middletown meeting-house which they had bid off at vendue.'

"The society, from time to time, voted permission to other denominations to use the house of worship when not occupied by themselves. Its erection, as we have seen, had drawn heavily upon the means of the congregation; but they were more than compensated by the blessings which thence flowed to them. That house was the central point to which the religious interest of the fathers tended. During the 'great revival' especially its seats were the birthplace of souls, and its walls witnessed the registering of solemn vows. There the earlier pastors—Jackson, and Stebbins, and McIntosh in his infirmities—broke to the people the bread of life and administered the holy sacraments. And there, too, the lamented Wood began his long and successful ministry.

"But presently the quarters became too strait, the accommodations proved inadequate. It was determined to build again, and also to change the location.

"The second church edifice stood on this ground where we are now assembled. It was built by subscription begun in 1828, and with a rapidity in striking contrast with the former enterprise. It was solemnly dedicated Jan. 20, 1830, the dedicatory sermon being preached, in the absence of the pastor, Mr. McIntosh, by the Rev. Ezra Fisk, D.D., of Goshen.†

"The old house of worship, when it thus was vacated, was of little value, and soon began to decay. Having for a time 'served the public as a storage place for lumber, and becoming incapable of being refitted for any useful purpose,' it was taken down by direction of a meeting held in July, 1833, and which ordered that the materials of which it was composed should be used for fencing the burying-ground adjacent.

"Thereupon sudden and unexpected opposition was manifested on the part of a few who either had not voted in 1825 to adopt the Presbyterian form of government, or who, having voted against the change, were unwilling to be ruled by the majority. They charged that the Presbyterians had defrauded the Congregationalists of their rights, and had demolished their fathers' house of worship. A suit at law was instituted against the committee who had been appointed to take down the building; but during the session of the court, and before the cause was reached, the suit was discontinued, the costs being paid by the party who had commenced the proceeding. Finally, by written agreement, made April 26, 1834, the whole controversy was adjusted on terms indicative of cordial concurrence by both parties.

"The growth of the village and the corresponding necessities of the congregation compelled to the erection of this third house of worship, which was begun in the spring of 1866, was first occupied in July of the next year, and was formally dedicated on the 24th of October following.‡

† These items are furnished from memoranda made at the time by Elder George Little, and preserved by his family.

‡ The building stands on Orchard Street, at its junction with North. It is built of brick, with brownstone trimmings, and has one spire 156 feet in height. The dimensions are 74 feet front, and 140 feet deep, with lecture-room and pastor's study in the rear. The capacity of the main audience-room is estimated at 750 sittings, exclusive of the gallery.

In 1880 an addition was built to the lecture-room, for the better accommodation of the Sunday-school, at a cost of $1000. The church is entirely free from debt.

"The bell which for nearly twenty years has summoned us to worship was procured in 1857, chiefly through the liberality of Thomas King, who deceased shortly after.

"At the time of erecting the first house of worship the project of building a parsonage was entertained, but seems to have fallen through, possibly because the 'lottery' proved less successful than was anticipated. But in 1838, Elder James Little built at his own expense, on grounds belonging to the congregation, a parsonage, which was occupied until after the completion of this sanctuary; but the location becoming undesirable, in consequence of the diversion and increase of business through newly-created channels, the property was then sold, and the proceeds were appropriated to the extinguishment of our building debt."

The Ladies' Aid Society of this church was organized in January, 1878,—President, Mrs. Richard Decker; Vice-President, Mrs. Geo. Swalm; Secretary, Miss Mary Van Keuren; Treasurer, Miss Helen King. Officers for 1879: President, Mrs. Geo. Swalm; Vice-President, Mrs. Chas. J. Boyd; Secretary and Treasurer, Miss Lizzie Elmer. Officers for 1880: President, Mrs. Geo. Swalm; Vice-President, Mrs. Dr. Boyd; Secretary and Treasurer, Miss Lizzie Elmer.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF CIRCLEVILLE was incorporated Jan. 4, 1842. The proceedings were signed by Josiah Crane and Samuel Bull. The trustees chosen were Oscar Bull, Robert Boak, John Gillen, Samuel Sands, and Bevier Depuy.

This church was organized at a meeting held at the "White School-house," one mile from the village, Nov. 4, 1841. A delegation from Hudson Presbytery was present, viz.: Rev. Daniel T. Wood and Rev. O. M. Johnson. The church was constituted with the following members: Josiah Crane, John Gillen, Samuel Bull, Keziah S. Crane, Maria Miller, from the Reformed Church of Bloomingburgh; John P. Howell, Mary Howell, from the Presbyterian Church of Bethlehem; and John Johnston, Mrs. Mary Bull, Mrs. Fanny Miller, Mrs. Celia Kerr, received upon confession of their faith.

The elders chosen were Samuel Bull, Josiah Crane, John Gillen. Soon after the formation of this church Benjamin Thompson and Joseph Little were received as members.

Feb. 13, 1842, a committee to draft a plan for building a house of worship was appointed, consisting of Joseph Little, Samuel Bull, Hiram S. Wilkison.

A house to be built of wood, 40 by 54, was decided upon at a subsequent meeting. The contractor for the carpenter-work was Daniel Bush, who erected the house for the sum of $425. The sum seems small at the present time, but there was a liberal donation of five acres of land by Samuel Bull. There was considerable labor freely given in preparing the ground and in subsequent grading, in various improvements and in the erection of sheds, so that the actual value of the property was very much more than the contract price for erecting the building.

The timber was given and delivered on the ground by the people of the neighborhood. Lumber was drawn from Sullivan County free of expense to the society, and the mason-work, under the direction of Mr. Samuel Bull, was mostly a donation by himself and others.

The parsonage was not built until 1845, when the present comfortable and convenient house was erected at a cost of $800, not far from the church, and upon the land donated by Mr. Samuel Bull.

Previous to the building of the parsonage, Mr. Bull had given to the ministers the use of a dwelling-house owned by him. The first communion service was held in the "White School-house."

The ministers who have served the church as pastors or supplies are the following:

Rev. P. J. Burnham, from November, 1842, to March, 1844; Rev. Nathaniel Elmer, from November, 1844, to September, 1847; Rev. Albert Worthington, from December, 1847, to September, 1849; Rev. A. O. Peloubet, from June, 1850, to June, 1857; Rev. Henry Osborn, from December, 1858, to April, 1867; Rev. John N. Boyd, from December, 1867, to April, 1871; Rev. C. H. Park, from April, 1871,* to April, 1881.

The present members number 86. The superintendent of the Sunday-school is George Foster. The elders at present are Leartus M. Weller, John Bull, Daniel Bull, Henry S. Linderman, Joseph E. Little, J. J. Duryea, A. Hosier; Deacon, Robert Boak, Sr.; Trustees, Joseph E. Little, J. J. Duryea, David W. Shaw, A. H. Gillone, Alfred Hosier, and Peter Weller; Clerk of Trustees, Harrison Bull, from Jan. 1, 1856, to the present time.

To Mr. Samuel Bull the community is largely indebted for the founding of this church. He gave to the enterprise freely of time, labor, and money. He had a high appreciation of the value of gospel institutions, believing that the true welfare of any community depends upon their establishment and preservation. His name and memory are cherished by his neighbors among whom he lived. He rests from his labors, but this pleasant rural church remains as a memorial of his energy and his Christian integrity.

THE SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF MIDDLETOWN

executed a certificate of incorporation Dec. 5, 1854. The proceedings were signed by Hiram Brink and Samuel A. Monell. The trustees chosen were Israel C. Beattie, Lewis Little, Henry S. Beakes, John E. Corwin, David C. Winfield, Samuel A. Monell. The church was organized by the Presbytery of Hudson, Sept. 22, 1854, with 26 members. The first Session consisted of William W. Robertson, John H. Mills-paugh, Hiram Brink, and D. C. Wesner.

The first pastor was the Rev. John H. Leggett, who began his official labors Jan. 1, 1856, and continued them with faithfulness and success until Jan. 1, 1864.

The first church edifice was dedicated March 13, 1856; was enlarged in 1865. The present pastor is the Rev. Charles Beattie, who was installed Oct. 6, 1864. The present membership of the church is 360, of the Sabbath-school 400. The Session consists of John H. Mills-paugh, G. M. Newman, Leander Crawford,

* Mr. Park was away at Ridgely from April 1, 1872, to May 1, 1873.

William Evans; the board of trustees, A. S. Vail, H. B. Dill, John D. Crawford, John Bradley, Ira M. Corwin, Moses Crist. The superintendent of the Sunday-school is William L. Graham. In connection with the church is a ladies' aid society. A missionary society was organized in 1878, a temperance society in 1877.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF SOUTH MIDDLETOWN

executed a certificate of incorporation Oct. 29, 1842. The proceedings were signed by John King and Thomas Newcomb. The trustees chosen were David Clark, Thomas Van Hone, and John Stephens. The meeting was held at the house of Francis Wickham.

The following additional particulars are furnished by the present pastor:

"At the beginning of the year 1840, Thomas Van Hone was a resident of the then small village of Middletown. An earnest Christian, and a thorough Baptist, he was led to pray fervently that God would open the way for the establishment of a church of his faith and order in the rising community. Looking about him and finding that there were a few of the residents who had adopted Baptist principles, he conferred with these, encouraged them to hope for the future establishment of a Baptist church, and led them, by means of his courageous and faithful leadership, to the successful inauguration of the struggling enterprise.

"This brother and his faithful co-workers were thoroughly imbued with that axiomatic principle, 'There is room everywhere for a Baptist church.' Believing this truth with all their hearts, they met together, and with prayer, and song, and Scripture reading, they formed themselves into a regular Baptist Church. Humanly speaking, their act was fraught with little or no encouragement. True, Baptist sentiments, in part, had not been without their witnesses in the village and its surrounding country. The little band proclaimed the universal authority of that great commission of the Lord Jesus which instructed His followers to 'disciple all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' The founders of the youthful church were few and poor. The work which they had to do was one demanding large faith, strong courage, true hearts. They brought all these to their task; they wrought fast and wrought well.

"The little church was constituted Oct. 21, 1840. Its constituent membership numbered 17, of whom 14 were sisters. At the present writing only two of these are known to be alive,—Thomas Van Hone and his wife, Margaret. The recognition services were held in the old edifice of the Congregational Church. The records of the church have preserved for us the exercises of that memorable day: Scripture Reading, by Elder S. White, of the Staten Island Church; Prayer, by Rev. Mr. Bennett, of the Orange Church, Unionville; Sermon, by Rev. Zelotes Grenell, of the Cannon Street Church, New York City; Hand of Fellowship, by Elder Fay, of Wantage Church, New Jersey; Charge to the Church, by Rev. Mr. White; Prayer, by the Rev. John Wellslayer, of the Cornwall Church; Benediction, by Rev. Henry Ball, of Middletown.

"Shortly after the constitution of the church its first business meeting was held, at which time a call was extended to Rev. Henry Ball to become the first pastor. For a period which probably covered two years and six months the church met from house to house. Oct. 15, 1842, it was resolved that immediate steps be taken looking toward the erection of a house of worship. Then followed directly a period of self-sacrifice and self-denial seldom, if ever, surpassed in the history of kindred enterprises. Every effort was put forth to gather together the means necessary to provide an humble church-home wherein the devoted few might worship God, and as soon as possible their struggles were rewarded with success. A plain, unpretentious meeting-house was erected, services being meanwhile held in the building then known as Lyceum Hall, and at the residences of the members. It seems that during the interim the pastor tendered his resignation (May 28, 1843) on account of old age and failing health. Difficult as the work of maintaining the preaching of the gospel must have been at that critical period, many were the tokens of the Divine Blessing given to cheer the feeble band. During the first three years of the church's life nine rejoicing converts had been buried with Christ in baptism, so that at the close of Elder Ball's pastorate the membership of the church had increased to 46. After a short interval a call was extended to Rev. Joseph Houghout, and he accepted, entering upon his duties in March, 1844. In June following the church occupied its own building.

"Our survey of succeeding years, with their many and not always very cheerful vicissitudes, must of necessity be exceedingly brief. The coming of the second pastor found the church well established, with a humble but comfortable building and a fair outlook. If from this period on there seems not to have been the steady growth for which the founders prayed and toiled, let not the lack of prosperity be attributed to them. Preceding words of praise for them have been in no way too strong.

"The duration of Elder Houghout's period of service was only thirteen months. After his connection with the church had been withdrawn there was no pastorate of any considerable length until the coming of Rev. Samuel L. Barrett, who for the second time took charge in May, 1848, and remained with the church until only a short period previous to his death, or until April, 1853. During his two pastoral terms 18 were baptized, and 25 were added to the church by letter and experience. His brief work was of that order which can be most truthfully termed abiding. A man of gentle, kindly demeanor, a faithful preacher, a genial, warm-hearted friend, he did much to further the cause of God in the field where Providence had placed him. He is remembered with tender regard by the few living members of the church who sat under his ministry. Another short pastorate of thirteen months succeeded, followed in its turn by the coming of Rev. Levi O. Grenelle, now of Princeton, N. J. The numerical accessions of his pastorate were encouraging. Fifty-four were added to the membership during the two years and five months of his stay, 36 of whom received baptism at his hands. He was succeeded by the Rev. N. A. Reed, whose strong, vigorous preaching forthwith resulted in increased congregations at public worship, and the inauguration of whose pastorate was so bright as to awaken hope in every heart that his earnest work would be permanent, and he remain to enjoy its fruitage. We learn from the church records that he was greatly beloved by his people, and it was with feelings of the keenest sorrow that they, at his own request, with great reluctance, accepted his resignation after the brief pastorate of one year and a half. Then followed a dark period in the history of Zion, a period of depression and gloom, which lasted for three years. In only one of these was the church favored with the ministrations of an Under-Shepherd. It is with gladness, however, that we record the fact that the stated preaching of the gospel was maintained, and that many faithful members, without making any formal bond, resolved, before God, to hold fast that which they had, and to 'strengthen the things that remained, and which were ready to die.' More than one praying sister,—and of these, in all the history of the forty years, there have been not a few,—in the quiet of her own home, and amid its humble but honored ministries, found time to kneel at the blessed mercy-seat and ask God to mercifully favor His people. These pleadings were not in vain. The God of all grace set before His servants an open door. An enthusiastic brother from another State, coming to the village to settle and engage in business, and finding the struggling church without a minister, wrote to his own pastor, the Rev. Charles A. Fox, asking him to come and supply the vacant pulpit at Middletown. The result of his coming was the giving to him of a call to become the pastor of the church. He entered upon his duties in October, 1864. During his pastoral term there was an extensive religious interest pervading the church and its outside congregation. Evangelistic help was obtained to aid the pastor in his work; a series of meetings was held, which increased in intensity and power; baptisms were frequent; and 151 were added to the church during the continuance of his pastorate.

"It was likewise during the pastorate of Mr. Fox that the church edifice was enlarged and improved. It seemed wise to enter upon the work of remodeling the house of God, and accordingly, on April 9, 1868, the beautified audience-room was rededicated. The Rev. Dr. Lyman Wright, then pastor of the church at Newburgh, preached an impressive sermon on the occasion. It was a day of gladness and joy, and the week that followed was one of prayer and praise. Others were added to the church, and thankfulness filled every heart. The pastor resigned Jan. 1, 1869. He was succeeded successively by Rev. Florence McCarthy, Rev. J. H. Gunning, M.D., and Rev. Frank Fletcher, whose combined periods of service reached nine years. The history of the society during this time is not marked by any great or noted progress. There were some accessions by baptism, and during the pastorate of Dr. Gunning there was considerable religious interest in the other churches of the village, fostered by the preaching of the well-known evangelist, Rev. A. B. Earle. In the results of the ingathering of souls the Baptist Church shared. The present incumbent of the pastorate entered upon his work May 26, 1878.

"During the past two years a little has been done for the extension of the Redeemer's cause outside of her own bounds. The great drawback to her prosperity at the present time is the existence of the bonded debt, incurred through the renovation of the house of worship in 1867-68. Her record in the past as regards the channels of our denominational benevolent enterprises has been good, and her record will be better if it pleases God to prosper her in the future. The forty years have been years of trial and anxiety, but the present period is one of peaceful and quiet and permanent growth.

Bromley, Isaac Crans, W. H. Wood; Clerk and Treasurer, John H. M. Little; Sunday-school Superintendent, Hiram Tate."

The house of worship is a plain, unpretentious structure, standing on Mulberry Street, in the village of Middletown, cruciform in shape. The interior is handsomely frescoed, and the windows are of rich stained glass. A beautiful organ occupies the space back of the pulpit. The communion emblems—a cluster of grapes and bread—are painted on the ceiling above the pulpit, and back of these a dove, representing the Holy Spirit.

The seating capacity of the building is 600.

GRACE CHURCH OF SOUTH MIDDLETOWN (EPISCOPAL)

executed a certificate of incorporation, Feb. 18, 1845. The proceedings were signed by Rev. John Brown, Rev. William P. Page, of Goshen, and D. C. Dusenbury. The wardens named in the instrument were James Stryker and Elisha P. Wheeler; the vestrymen, James G. Swazey, John G. Wilkin, William N. Phillips, John Bailey, Edward M. Madden, P. Manning Stryker, Charles Dill, and Anthony Houston.

Previous to the date of the incorporation of the church services were held occasionally in the village hall on North Street, the Rev. John Brown, D.D., of St. George's Church, Newburgh, the Rev. G. W. Timlow, and others officiating. Of these services no record was kept.

Part of the land on which the church building stands was purchased of Henry E. Horton in 1845. The building was begun in 1846, finished in 1847, and consecrated by the Right Rev. W. H. De Lancey, D.D., LL.D., Sept. 12, 1848. A small addition was made to it in the year 1863. In 1866 the south transept was built by E. P. Wheeler, and he added the north transept in the following year. The spire was built principally by the efforts of J. M. Matthews, E. M. Madden, and Charles Horton, in 1868 or '69. This spire contains the town clock. The church throughout is of solid stone masonry, and will now seat about 700. In 1878-79 extensive repairs were made, a Sunday-school room was fitted up in the basement, the exterior and interior of the church improved and decorated. It is impossible to compute the cost of the building and the improvements made from time to time with any certainty. There is a parsonage on Broad Street belonging to the church.

The Rev. George W. Timlow was the first rector of the parish, and held the first services after its incorporation. He resigned in 1851 on account of ill-health. He was succeeded by the Rev. J. Selden Spencer, who resigned the rectorship in the spring of 1853. In the same year the Rev. P. Teller Babbitt was called, December 5th. He accepted the call and served the parish till July 14, 1862, the date of his resignation. The Rev. Alexander Capron next took charge of the parish on the second Sunday in Advent, 1862, resigning Oct. 1, 1877, at which time the Rev. George D. Silliman took charge, and is at the present time rector. The salary of the rectors has ranged from $600 to $1500. They seem, without exception, to have discharged their duties honorably and well.

The first record in the parish register is a list of 25 communicants, in the year 1854. The present list numbers 250. Four hundred and eighty-nine names of communicants are upon the rolls. The parish seems to have grown uniformly with the growth of the town.

The present officers of the parish are J. B. Swalm, senior warden; L. Armstrong, junior warden; A. C. Fuller, G. B. Fuller, E. H. Purdy, S. S. Draper, H. W. Wiggins, Hon. J. G. Wilkin, W. H. Rogers, J. T. Cockayne, vestrymen; J. B. Swalm is treasurer; J. T. Cockayne is musical director; A. H. Ten Broeck, organist; J. B. Swalm, superintendent of the Sunday-school; Mrs. Lydia A. Swazey, president of the Ladies' Aid Society; Miss Cordelia Wheeler, president of the Altar Society; and Mrs. H. H. Hunt, president of the sewing-school for little girls.

The seats in the church are all free, and the services supported by the voluntary offerings of the people, as part of their worship. The total amount contributed for the year ending Sept. 1, 1880, was $2920.12, or an average of $56.16 per Sunday. During the same year there were baptisms, 24; admitted to holy communion, 11; marriages, 12; burials, 24.

May God in His goodness bless and prosper this church of the English-speaking people, which has provided for all who speak the language a universally accepted translation of the Holy Bible, and worships God according to the ritual observed for hundreds of years.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF MIDDLETOWN.

This society effected a legal organization July 11, 1838. The meeting was held at the house of John M. Tuthill, and the proceedings were signed by John H. Little and John M. Tuthill. The trustees chosen were Isaac Denton, John H. Little, Ebenezer Mills, William Dann, and Alfred Goodale.

Upon the earlier history of this church, the following extract from the "Middletown Directory for 1857-58, by John W. Hasbrouck," gives a few items:

"For a number of years previous to the time of a permanent organization of this society, there had been kept up a series of appointments for preaching, which were filled alternately by those preachers who were received into what was then the A. S. W. M. Society. The meetings were then held in the old district school-house, located where the Middletown Bank building now stands, the former having, some thirteen years since, been consumed by fire. In the fall of 1838 the project of building a suitable edifice for the use of the then somewhat augmented membership, although still few in numbers and feeble in purse, was conceived, and under the auspices of Rev. Valentine Brock, assisted by his colleague, Rev. David Webster, the work was begun and successfully prosecuted to its end. The lot upon which the edifice was erected and new stands was purchased of William Andrew Sears, at a cost of $100. The architecture of the building (which was creditable for the times) reflected considerable praise upon the builder, Wm. L. Dann, and cost, including price of lot, $200. Its dimensions were only 41 feet.

"In the spring of 1839 the edifice was completed, and dedicated in May by Rev. John Kennedy, D. D. A society was then permanently organized, and a board of trustees elected.

"The preachers in charge at that time were Revs. George Brown, David Buck, and Sanford. Succeeding these for the next two years were Revs. John Green and Bonney.

"A change was made in the circuit by the next Annual Conference, severing Middletown from Montgomery Circuit, and connecting Middletown and Ridgebury together as a charge, under the pastoral charge of Rev. Z. N. Lewis. Then followed successively the following preachers in charge: John G. Smith, Matthew Van Dusen, Morris D. C. Crawford, Henry Lounsbury, J. H. Romer, Charles Isham, John K. Still, Charles S. Brown, Jacob C. Washburn, John K. Wardle, Silas Fitch.

"On the completion of the church there remained against it a debt of some $600, which was permitted to rest undischarged, accumulating in amount by unpaid interest until in 1847 it had increased to between $1100 and $1200.

"The aspect of affairs now seemed threatening enough, when, providentially as it seemed, that indefatigable worker, Morris D. C. Crawford, was sent to take the pastoral charge. Entering upon his work, seeing the depressed state of affairs, spiritually and temporally, in the short space of six weeks from the time of commencing the entire debt was wiped out. From that time forward, with few intermissions, the prosperity of the church has been apparent. The increase of membership, proportionate with the increase of population and rapid growth of the village, seemed to demand increased space in the church building. Accordingly, in the fall of 1854, an addition of fifteen feet was made to the length of the building, adding materially to its accommodation and its appearance externally and internally, at a cost of $700.

"The house was reopened on Feb. 27, 1855, by Revs. Jesse T. Peck, D. D., and Morris D. C. Crawford. To Rev. J. C. Washburn, then pastor in charge, high praise is due for the commendatory manner in which he labored for the prosecution of this work."

Revs. Richard Wheatley, Luther Peck, Alex. McLean, and J. G. Oakley were successively appointed to the charge; the latter in 1868.

During the first year of Mr. Oakley's pastorate a large addition was made to the membership of the church. This led to the building of a new edifice and the sale of the old one. This work was undertaken in 1870. The board of trustees, composed of John C. Owen, president; John H. Kellogg, secretary; Ira L. Stoddard, Wm. J. Groo, N. M. Thompson, Wm. Budd, and Thomas P. Pitts, constituting the building committee, purchased a lot on the corner of Main and Mulberry Streets of Joseph Lemon, at a cost of $9000, upon which a brick and slate-roof building 100 by 80 feet, with a transept on the south 100 by 37 feet, embracing a basement under transept, with lecture-room over the same, ladies' parlor, and classrooms. The auditorium has a seating capacity of 700, and is handsomely furnished. The lecture-room was first occupied May 7, 1871; the completed building was dedicated Nov. 1, 1871. The entire cost of lot and building was $60,000.

Mr. Oakley was succeeded by Rev. George H. Corey, for two years; Rev. D. L. Marks followed, for three years; he was succeeded by Rev. John K. Wardle, and the latter by Rev. Elias S. Osbon, who is now (1881) in charge.

Though for a time embarrassed by the debt incurred in constructing its edifice, the church is now in a prosperous condition, and has a flourishing Sabbath-school.

ST. JOSEPH'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

St. Joseph's parish was established in 1866, and the first pastor was Rev. Father Andrew O'Reiley, now at Yonkers, N. Y., whose pastorate covered nine years. He was beloved by his people, and won many warm friends in the village outside of his church. He was succeeded by Rev. Father Richard O'Gorman as temporary pastor, who is now at St. Rose's Church, New York. The present pastor, who built the new church, is Rev. P. J. Prendergast, who came here from Ellenville some years ago. He has an able assistant in the person of Rev. Father J. P. McClancy. The parish includes Otisville, which was formerly attached to Port Jervis, and whose church was built by Rev. Father Richard Brennan, now of St. Rose's Church, New York.

Soon after being organized the parish began the erection of the church on Division Street, laying the foundation of what was afterwards completed by others and was called Slauson Hall. The Catholics sold the Division Street property because there was not sufficient room there for a pastoral residence and burial-ground. Their present fine property on Cottage Street, embracing about thirteen acres of land, was bought at a cost of $7000. The frame church which for a time accommodated the parish was built at a cost of $7000 more, and the house on the property was remodeled into a parsonage at a cost of $2500.

The corner-stone of the new church was laid July 27, 1879, by Bishop O'Hara, of Scranton, Pa., with impressive ceremonies. The address was made by Rev. J. P. McClancy. The contract price for the church was $18,500, but the furnishing increased the cost to $26,000. The following persons or firms were engaged upon the work: masons, Harrison & McNeale, of Newburgh; carpenter, James Thompson, of Staten Island; Ohio stone trimmings, McGill & Binnil, of Brooklyn; stained glass, Aickin & Goodwin, of Philadelphia; heaters, Sayer, of Montrose, Pa.; gas fixtures, Mitchell & Vance, of New York; altar, Van Buren, of Jersey City.

The Stuart organ, from the old church, was repaired by the builder and placed in the gallery of the new church.

The building committee, who had charge of raising the money and constructing the church, were Rev. P. J. Prendergast, John Bradley, John Bartley, John Curtis, Patrick Dougherty, Timothy Cohalen.

The church is built of brick ornamented with trimmings of Ohio sandstone. It is 130 feet long and 62 feet wide, and it will seat 900 people, aside from the choir gallery, which will seat about 100 more. An exterior view of the church presents a nave, clere-story, and aisle arrangement, with the sanctuary strongly marked, and all the various details and divisions treated in a bold and vigorous manner.

The audience-room has seating capacity for 900 people, clear of columns or other obstructions, having an opened timber roof, richly ornamented with mouldings and tracery, apparently very light in construction, and yet sustaining without columns or tie-beams a clere-story. The sanctuary is very spacious and ornate, having a vaulted ceiling ornamented with moulded ribs, and on either side is a small chapel opening into it and fronting the aisles, and intended to contain altars dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and St. Joseph. The windows are all filled with stained glass very rich in design and color, the main side windows being all memorials, containing ecclesiastical emblems and inscribed with the names of the donors. The main altar, which extends across the end of the sanctuary, is a very rich and beautiful piece of art work.

We regret that a more complete history of the parish has not been furnished for this work.

THE SEPARATE AMERICAN METHODIST CHURCH OF PHILLIPSBURGH was incorporated July 13, 1857. The certificate was signed by George W. Harding, Francis Wallace, and James Archer. The trustees chosen were Ebenezer Green, Francis Wallace, and James Archer. George W. Harding was pastor of the church at that time, and moderator of the meeting.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL ZION CHURCH OF MIDDLETOWN

executed a certificate of incorporation Nov. 20, 1861. The paper was signed by Henry Johnson and Joseph McClaughry. The trustees named therein were Henry Waterford, Peter Bowman, George Millspaugh, Joseph Johnson, Joseph McClaughry.

THE FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH OF MIDDLETOWN.

The Free Christian Church of Middletown was organized on Sunday, Sept. 23, 1877. Rev. Charles M. Winchester had been holding temperance meetings in the village for several months, and having met with strong opposition on account of his hostility to the liquor traffic he resolved to locate in Middletown, and continue to do such gospel and temperance work as he might be able.

Having made known his intention to organize a church, he asked such as desired to unite in the undertaking to meet together for such a purpose.

The following named persons were all that came, viz., Chester Belding, Abby L. Belding, Geo. W. Reed, Phœbe A. Reed, Emerett Hallock. All of these had been members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and brought letters of commendation.

The outlook as to members was not flattering, but the minister gave them the right hand of fellowship, and after a sermon and appropriate services the church was duly constituted. Rev. G. H. Hick, a Congregational minister of Denton, was present, and assisted in the exercises.

Oct. 24, 1877, the church adopted a brief covenant and articles of faith, adding a total abstinence pledge as necessary to be taken as a part of the obligation of each member.

Mr. Winchester, who had been acting pastor, was, on Nov. 14, 1877, received by letter from the Bethel Church, Providence, R. I., and elected pastor. On the following Sabbath, November 18th, he was publicly received as such by appropriate exercises.

November 21st the following officers were elected: Deacons, Chester Belding, Squire Lee; Clerk, Miss F. L. Van Doren; Treasurer, Hector Moore.

By January, 1878, the church had increased its membership to about 30 members, and during that month it was incorporated under Chapter 218, General Statutes, or what is known as the Free Church Act. The following persons were elected trustees: Chester Belding, Abram A. Eaton, John C. Smith, Squire Lee, Geo. W. Reed, Martin Van Fleet, C. M. Winchester.

From its organization the church hired the building known as Slauson Hall for a meeting-house, and on Feb. 28, 1878, purchased the entire estate for $7000. The property is located at the corner of Wickham Avenue and Division Street, and contains about half an acre of land, on which was a brick building of two stories, about 50 by 90 feet, on a massive stone foundation, which was originally laid for St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Society. A small barn and excellent well of water were also on the premises. It required only a small outlay to make the meeting-house quite convenient for the wants of a growing society.

The church was now in condition to grow, and in order to meet the increasing demand the organization was perfected Aug. 21, 1878, by the election of the following officers: Elders, Uriah D. Gee, A. R. Hill, Matthew Dolloway, C. M. Winchester; Deaconesses, Margaret Trumper, Hannah Gee, Ann S. Van Fleet, Angeline Brundage.

In September, 1879, the building of a parsonage was commenced on the vacant lot next south of the meeting-house, on Division Street, and finished Feb. 1, 1880. It is a neat and convenient house, 26 by 30 feet, containing ten rooms on four floors, and, with its pretty front veranda and gable, quite an ornament to the pleasant locality, which is noted for its fine residences.

The seats in the meeting-house are all free, and instead of a stated salary the pastor receives the free-will offerings of the people each Sabbath. Current expenses are met by collections.

The church has met with some obstacles, but has been favored with general prosperity, so that the present membership is 136.

In June, 1880, the New York Evangelical Christian Conference, of which the pastor is a member, met with this church.

The Sunday-school connected with the church numbers about 300 members. David L. Conkling has been superintendent, and Chauncey B. Moore secretary from its organization. A marked feature of the school is the pastor's Bible-class, which shows an average attendance from the beginning of about 75. Perhaps as a matter of history, and without entering into the merits of the case, it ought to be said that neither the Free Christian Church nor its minister is recognized by the other churches of the village.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

To mention these in any special order is not necessary. Many of them are the burying-grounds of the earlier years left to ruin and desolation. Others, as noticed below, are the result of the improved sentiment of later years, and belong to legally-organized associations.

At the extreme north end of the town, near the Shawangunk, is a burial-place in the Mills or Sherer neighborhood. This is the old one that belonged to the Union Presbyterian Church which once existed in that neighborhood.

Near the northeast line of the town, in the Parmelee District, there is a burial-place not far from the mills.

An old burying-ground (now plowed up) was on the farm of Hezekiah D. Mills; only colored people were buried there; supposed to have been an early slave burial-place; reduced to cultivation perhaps thirty years ago.

At Phillipsburgh there is an old burying-ground, on the east side of the Wallkill. We believe the Wisners are buried here.

The Crane burial-place is on the present farm of Alfred Hosier. Among those buried in the Crane burying-ground the following are known: Capt. Josiah Crane and wife; Elias Bailey, who was drowned in what is now William Miller's mill-pond; Mrs. Howell, a relative of Capt. Crane's.

Near the old Baptist church of Wallkill is a burial-place of the last fifty years. Elder Terry was the first one buried there, in 1828.

Other burial-places may be named as follows: one on the town-line of Crawford, long since plowed up; the modern one at Circleville, under good care; Mrs. Shorter's family lot on the Parmelee property; the new one at the Wallkill meeting-house; the Phillipsburgh Cemetery; the Guinea burial-place (perhaps the same as that of colored people mentioned above); the Horton burial-place, on the present property of George Beakes; the Pine Hill Cemetery, two and a half miles from Middletown; the Vinson Clark burial-place, on the farm now owned by T. W. Horton; and doubtless there are still others.

OLD BURIAL-GROUND OF THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

This was the earliest place of burial at Middletown village. The remains of the dead were finally removed and the ground devoted to other purposes. As in every such case, it is not probable that even the most faithful work succeeded in removing all. The remains at the final removal were all buried in one common grave, in the Hillside Cemetery, specially set apart for this purpose. The stones that bore names and dates are supposed to have been all preserved, and stand now in two close rows on the lot above mentioned.

We give a few of the inscriptions upon them:

Nathaniel Vail, died Nov. 10, 1796, aged 31.
 Mary Smith, died Sept. 3, 1804, aged 79.
 Gabriel Corwin, died Nov. 2, 1820, aged 25.
 David Moore, died Aug. 4, 1805, aged 71.
 Jonathan Owen, died May 10, 1809, aged 44.
 James McQuoid, died July 18, 1806, aged 68.
 Charles McQuoid, died Aug. 5, 1797, aged 22.
 David Moore, died June 18, 1789.

These stones preserved are ninety-eight in number. The common field stone, which undoubtedly marked many early graves, yet with neither name nor date, were of course discarded in the removal as of no value. It may have been best to remove the dead and give up the ground, but one can hardly help feeling that it was the destruction of an ancient landmark with many cherished associations, and that there was "land enough" in this vicinity to have rendered the sacrifice unnecessary.

THE OLD CEMETERY OPPOSITE THE ACADEMY.

This is a desolate place, for which there can be no reasonable apology and no semblance of an excuse. The neglect of old graveyards is a blot on modern civilization. It is said the people are waiting to get an act of the Legislature to enable them to remove the dead,—a phrase which in its practical result means simply to shovel the dust and bones of their ancestors into a common pit, and call it a "careful transfer of the remains!" There is land enough; let old graveyards stay; clear them out; mow them clean and close twice or three times a year, and nature will do the rest, and do it decently. In this "rude, neglected spot the forefathers of the hamlet sleep."

THE SOUTH MIDDLETOWN CEMETERY ASSOCIATION

effected a legal organization Oct. 26, 1848, at a meeting in Lyceum Hall, of which Benjamin Bennett was chairman, and Benjamin W. Shaw secretary. The trustees appointed were the following, viz.: Benjamin Bennett, Elijah Smith, William C. McNish, Hiram Kain, John Baily, and Henry E. Horton. The proceedings were verified by the officers of the meeting on the 27th, before William W. Reeve, justice of the peace, and recorded on the 28th. We suppose this established or put under a legal organization the newer part of the cemetery, now opposite the academy grounds.

HILLSIDE CEMETERY OF MIDDLETOWN.

This association was organized Oct. 4, 1860. Israel O. Beattie was chairman of the meeting, and John M. Kellogg secretary. The trustees named were James N. Pronk, Thomas Chattle, Israel O. Beattie, Silas S. King, John N. Kellogg, James Lythe, John M. H. Little, Ashbel C. King, and James Rogers. The annual meeting was determined for the first Thursday in October. The proceedings were verified by the officers October 4th, before George B. Cox, justice of the peace, and recorded October 6th.

The property purchased consists of nearly fifty acres in the southwest portion of the village, and now constitutes one of the most beautiful cemeteries that can be found in the State. There are two small lakes within the inclosure, and it has over ten miles of macadamized roads and drives, with gracefully curving and winding walks, and enameled lawns beautified by thousands of evergreens and a profusion of flowers and shrubs. A magnificent evergreen hedge forms an extensive portion of the exterior fence. This cemetery cannot fail to be admired by all who visit it. The grading has been done by skillful workmen, superintended by men of cultivated taste.

The cemetery exemplifies the best principles of landscape adornment. Its gentle slopes, its crowning summits, its finely-arranged lots, many of them covered with the choicest flowers, all together constitute pictures of beauty that linger long in the memory of the visitor.

Costly monuments add the graces of sculpture to the attractions which nature and art have freely lavished upon the grounds. Among the most notable of the memorial shafts may be mentioned those bearing the family names of Cockayne, Townley, Babcock, Stanton, Roberts, Dunning, Charles Horton, Everett, Barrett, Crawford, Purdy, Wheeler, Denton, H. E. Horton, Howell, J. M. Horton, Reeve, Matthews, Webb, Horton, Decker, Hinchman, Holding, Roe, Royce, Slau-son, Hughson, Pettit, Moore, Thomas King, Hulse, L. B. Babcock, and Bell. Of noticeable design is the Dill monument, a shaft representing a broken stump resting on a rough boulder, and leaning against the stump a heavy cross.

The one erected by railroad employés to Mr. Minshull, who lost his life in the railway service, is an honorable tribute to his worth and the esteem felt for him by his co-employés.

The first interment was that of Theophilus Vail, and the first monument was erected to his memory. He died Sept. 19, 1861, and was buried Sept. 20th. He had been an active promoter of the new cemetery, and though incomplete he expressed a wish before his death to be buried in the grounds chosen. It is evident that the success of the new cemetery, its beauty, its harmonious and artistic arrangement, are very much due to the steady and persistent interest which Mr. John N. Pronk, the president of the association, has taken in the work, and the personal attention he has given to the execution of the minutest details of roads, walks, lots, shrubbery, and general adornment. His labors are appreciated by the people, one citizen, himself for a long time identified with the interests of Middletown, saying to the writer, "I wish Mr. Pronk had a million of dollars; I am sure it would be largely expended for the public welfare."

With Mr. Pronk has been associated Mr. George Wait as superintendent, whose skill has aided greatly in the development of the plans. Skillful workmen have been employed, some of the number having been retained from the opening of the grounds.

THE SCOTCHTOWN CEMETERY ASSOCIATION was incorporated Nov. 29, 1873. The meeting held to organize appointed Harvey Roe chairman, and A. A. Fonda secretary. The trustees chosen were Abner Mills, W. Augustus Robbins, Harvey Roe, Harvey McMonagle, William D. Hurten, U. F. P. Bliven.

This organization was made to take charge in a legal manner of the old Scotchtown yard. The first two white stones erected there were to the memory of Mrs. Dr. Arnell and Mrs. Phineas Corwin. The former lay a corpse on the day of the great eclipse of 1806. She was a daughter of James Morrison. Dr. Arnell removed to Goshen and died there.

HOWELL'S CEMETERY ASSOCIATION.

This was organized at a meeting held in the Congregational church, Sept. 9, 1865. Horton Corwin was chairman of the meeting, and William E. Mapes secretary. The trustees named were Horton Corwin, James H. Corwin, George E. Putney, William W. Shaw, Stephen S. Mapes, Elliot A. Coleman, William E. Mapes, Sanford H. Stubbs, and Robert Cairns. The proceedings were verified by the officers before James H. Corwin, justice of the peace, September 11th, and recorded the 12th.

ST. JOSEPH'S CEMETERY.

Upon the ample grounds secured for St. Joseph's Church, upon Cottage Street, beyond Wickham Avenue, a cemetery of considerable extent is laid out, and with sufficient care and expenditure will develop into a burial-place of considerable beauty.

THE WEBB CEMETERY ASSOCIATION, WALLKILL, was incorporated by a certificate verified June 15, 1867. The trustees named were John Valentine, William A. McCoy, Virgil S. Smith, Anthony J. Bennett, William H. Bennett, Virgil Knapp. John Valentine was chairman of the meeting held to organize, and Floyd H. Reeves secretary.

was instituted in the town of Wallkill, Sept. 29, 1817, and the following officers installed: John Kirby, W. M.; Stacey Beakes, S. W.; Isaac Otis, J. W.; Isaac Mills, Treas.; George Hill, Sec.; Charles Anderson, Tyler.

It took its name from Martin Hoffman, Deputy Grand Master of the State of New York.* Dr. Joshua Hornbeck was the first man that joined the lodge. He was raised to the degree of a Master Mason Oct. 20, 1817. He practiced for a long time in the town of Wallkill, became eminent in his profession, and enjoyed the confidence and respect of the community until his death.

Among the men who first joined the lodge were Joseph Little, Jacob Mills, Dr. Joseph B. McMunn, Charles Dill, and Henry S. Beakes, names familiar to all the old residents of the town of Wallkill. They all afterwards became honorary members of Hoffman Lodge, No. 412, except Jacob Mills. They are all dead. Joseph Little, having survived the others, died in February, 1874. The last meeting of the lodge of which we have any knowledge was held Sept. 10, 1832.

Alexander Wilson, its first Master, was honored for four years with the

* In July, 1818, the lodge received the following letter:

The rooms were dedicated

June 9, 1852, with a celebration consisting of a procession and ball in the evening. In these rooms they continued to meet until April 26, 1869, when they took the rooms in Exchange Building formerly occupied by the Whig Press, which rooms were duly dedicated on the above date, under the direction of John M. MIDDLETOWN BANK.

In the year 1839 an act of incorporation was applied for under the existing State banking act for a bank to be established in the village of Middletown, Orange Co., N. Y., and to be known and conducted under the title of the Middletown Bank. Appended to the application for a charter were the following names of incorporators and subscribers to the capital stock:

Joshua Mulock, Daniel Greenleaf, Jesse Carpenter, Wm. Graham, Isaac Ketcham, Gilbert Horton, Wm. Arnout, John C. Wilbur, Moses Mapes, Oliver Hulse, George S. McWilliams, John V. Mapes, Dr. John Conkling, H. E. Horton, Henry Bull, H. P. Roberts, John M. Stitt, I. H. Wickham, Cornelius Van Buskirk, Wm. Hoyt, Geo. Horton, Dodge & Thompson, Jesse Smith, David Moore, Isaac Hoyt, John Conkling, A. S. Murray, Gilbert Horton, Wm. M. Graham, A. Wright, Joseph Davis, Stacey Beakes, Philip Swartwout.

All the requirements of the law having been complied with, the application was granted, and soon thereafter, on July 1, 1839, the incorporators met and elected the following-named board of directors:

Messrs. Joseph Davis, Joshua Mulock, Gilbert Horton, William Graham, John C. Wilbur, George Houston, Stacey Beakes, Israel H. Wickham, David Moore, John Conkling, Samuel Denton, Henry P. Roberts, Henry E. Horton, Samuel W. Brown, and Gabriel Horton, who then completed the organization by electing officers as follows: President, Joseph Davis; Vice-President, George Houston; Cashier, Alexander Wright.

Of the above-named board but two still survive, Mr. Samuel Denton, of this village, and Dr. John Conkling, of Port Jervis.

The first business site of the bank was the building on West Main Street now occupied by Daniel H. Bailey, Esq., and since remodeled. This continued to be the place of business for several years; but increasing custom and growing prosperity, together with the need of a structure more substantially constructed and better adapted to the business, prompted a change of location. Accordingly a property on the corner of North and what is now known as Depot Streets was purchased at a cost of $900, and upon it the structure long known as the "old bank building" was erected at a cost to the bank of $5800. In this location the business was continued for many years, and until the same causes which dictated the first move made necessary a second. Then it was that the property upon the site of which the bank now conducts business was purchased. This was in March, 1861, after which the building now occupied was erected.

The bank commenced business, as near as data enables us to ascertain, with a paid-up capital stock of $77,000, which was increased first to $84,000, then, in 1846, to $100,000, and further increased, in the year 1854, to $125,000, at which figure it stood so long as the institution continued to do business under State laws.

Reorganization was had on July 1, 1865, under the provisions of the United States banking act, and the title of the bank was amended so as to read "The Middletown National Bank." The capital stock was increased at this time to the present amount, $200,000.

It is remarkable that the bank in its long career has had at its head but three presidents,—Joseph Davis, who held the office from the organization to November, 1865; James B. Hulse, who was elected upon the demise of Mr. Davis, and who held the office from Nov. 11, 1865, to the date of Jan. 9, 1877, when Thomas King, the present incumbent, was chosen to the position. The first vice-president, Geo. Houston, continued in office until he was succeeded by Henry P. Roberts, Dec. 24, 1846, who in turn was succeeded by John G. Wilkin, Feb. 25, 1860.

The first cashier, Alex. Wright, held the office until he was succeeded by Wm. M. Graham, Sept. 5, 1844, who in turn was succeeded, Feb. 23, 1860, by Jas. B. Hulse. Upon the election of Mr. Hulse to the presidency, Thomas King became cashier, and continued in the office until March 1, 1870, when he was succeeded by Daniel Corwin, who administers the duties of the office at this time.

On March 1, 1870, the office of assistant cashier was created, and Nathan M. Hallock was elected to it.

The first clerk to the bank was Mr. Wm. M. Graham, who was appointed Oct. 14, 1841. The conditions of his appointment were that he was to serve without pay and to board himself for the first three months, after which the bank was to find him board for the remaining months of the year's service. President Joseph Davis gave his faithful and valuable services for the sum of $300 per year, while the first cashier, Alex. Wright, enjoyed a salary of $900.

The first attorney to the bank was John E. Philips, of Goshen, who was appointed Dec. 14, 1840. Such was the primitiveness of the community that as yet no disciple of Blackstone had put out a shingle here. But in 1841, John C. Dimmick, who had in the mean time settled here, succeeded to the attorneyship, which he held until succeeded by John G. Wilkin, May 19, 1849.

The present board of trustees (1880) consists of H. R. Wilcox, A. L. Vail, D. C. Dusenbury, John G. Wilkin, Chas. H. Van Wyck, Daniel Thompson, Daniel Corwin, Joshua Draper, Thomas King.

Wm. D. Royce

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF MIDDLETOWN.

This institution was organized in October, 1864, and opened for business soon after. The first board of directors consisted of Henry E. Horton, Wm. Evans, Jr., Selah R. Corwin, Charles B. Roosa, Thomas B. Scott, Oliver B. Vail, Stephen S. Conkling, Coe Robertson, James J. Mills, Alanson Slaughter, Samuel C. Howell, Theodore J. Denton, Jonathan Sayre. Wm. Evans, Jr., was president; H. E. Horton, vice-president; Daniel Corwin, cashier. Mr. Evans was succeeded in 1875 by Wm. B. Royce, who is still the incumbent of that office. David Corwin remained as cashier until 1870, and was then succeeded by Wm. L. Graham, the present cashier. The present board (1880) consists of the following: Selah R. Corwin, Wm. Evans, Oliver B. Vail (deceased, and vacancy not filled), D. C. McMonagle, W. L. Graham, Thomas C. Royce, Jonathan Sayre, James F. Dolsen, Alanson Slaughter, W. B. Royce, Theodore J. Dolsen. The present vice-president is Selah R. Corwin. The capital of the bank was established at $100,000, and remains the same at the present time.

WILLIAM B. ROYCE.—His ancestors for five generations lived at and near Mansfield, Conn. Solomon Royce, his great-grandfather, married Lydia Atwood, of Cape Cod, Mass., a descendant of one of the pilgrims who came in the "May Flower" on her first voyage. The fruit of this union was six children, four sons and two daughters, one of whom was Solomon Royce, the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, who removed with his family from Mansfield, Conn., to the town of Thompson, Sullivan Co., N. Y., in the year 1804, and settled about three miles west of the present village of Monticello, the year after its first settlement by its founder, John P. Jones. Solomon Royce, who during his early life had studied navigation, and for some years followed the sea, upon his removal to Sullivan County, which was at that time nearly an unbroken wilderness, turned his attention to surveying, and had charge of the settlement of nearly the whole of the western portion of the county, and was instrumental in turning the attention of German emigrants of the better class in that direction, thus securing its early development and permanent prosperity. His homestead contained about 300 acres of land, most of which he cleared of its original forest. He died in 1859, aged eighty-one years. His wife, Nancy Billings, bore him eight sons and one daughter,—Alpheus B., James F., Charles B., Edward G., Thomas T., Margaret A., wife of Moses Bush, Nathaniel A., Isaac B., and Stephen W.

All settled in Sullivan and Orange Counties except Thomas and James, who located in Michigan.

Of these children, Alpheus B. was father of William B. Royce. During the former and latter part of his life he resided at Monticello, and was engaged in surveying. For a few years he carried on mercantile business at North Branch, in Sullivan County, and from 1859 to 1868 he resided on the homestead, to which he succeeded by inheritance.

He was one of the original surveyors that located the surveys of the State of Michigan, and was one of the engineers who had the supervision of the construction of the Croton aqueduct. He also acted as agent, and had charge of the sale of a large part of the land in the northern and western part of Sullivan County.

He acquired a large property in real estate in the county, was influential in his town and county, and was justice of the peace and supervisor of the town of Callicoon, where he resided for many years. As his father had been one of the founders of the Presbyterian Church at Monticello, and an active member of it afterwards, so he also was a supporter of church and kindred interests, and was one of the founders and an elder of the First Presbyterian Church at North Branch, in that county. He was born in 1803, died in 1870, and his remains are buried at Middletown, N. Y.

His wife, Mary A., daughter of William Mangan, of Sing Sing, N. Y., was born in 1811, and at the time of her marriage to Mr. Royce was the widow of Louis Purdy, by whom she had one daughter, Albina, wife of Caleb W. Horton, of Tarrytown, N. Y.

Alpheus B. Royce's children are William B. and Anna E., wife of Daniel H. Webster, of Middletown, the financial agent of Brown & Boyd, of Indianapolis.

William B. Royce was born in the town of Thompson, Dec. 9, 1841, and obtained his early education in the district schools, attending for a short time the Monticello Academy and the public schools in New York City.

He was engaged in teaching school in 1860 and 1863, and in 1861-62 he was a clerk in the store of W. D. Mangan, a flour and grain merchant of New York.

In 1864 he was appointed a clerk in the United States provost-marshal's office at Goshen, and in 1865 was made chief clerk of the office, where he remained until the fall of that year, and was transferred to Albany to close up the records of the district, which he did, and resigned his position in December of the same year.

On Jan. 1, 1866, Mr. Royce came to Middletown, and began the study of law in the office of James N. Pronk, and was admitted to the bar at the February term of the Supreme Court, at Brooklyn, in 1867. His early admission to the bar was quickened by having studied law while a resident of Goshen.

Immediately after his admission as an attorney-at-law he began the practice of his profession in Middletown, which he continued until April 1, 1875, when he was elected president of the First National Bank of Middletown, to the duties of which position he has given most of his time since.

Since coming to Middletown Mr. Royce has been closely identified with the business and educational interests of the village.

He was village clerk and attorney in 1869-70, member of the Board of Education since 1878, was elected supervisor of the town of Wallkill in 1879, and by re-election has served the town in that capacity since, the last two years being re-elected without opposition.

His wife, Mary E., daughter of William O. Roe and Catharine Sly, of Goshen, he married June 12, 1867. Their children are William F., Nellie B., Herbert B., and Edith C.

MIDDLETOWN SAVINGS-BANK.

A law authorizing the formation of this organization was passed March 5, 1866. The authority thus conferred was not, however, exercised until an act reviving and amending the original statute was passed, May 1, 1869. The incorporators named in this amended law were Elisha P. Wheeler, Jonathan M. Matthews, Joshua Draper, Osmer B. Wheeler, David C. Winfield, William Evans, Benjamin W. Shaw, Hiram Brink, Hiland H. Hunt, John W. Baird, William M. Graham, James B. Hulse, John G. Wilkin, Horatio R. Wilcox, Charles H. Horton, Gilbert O. Hulse, Harvey Everett, Daniel C. Dusenbury, Henry B. Dill, Henry B. Ogden, Linus B. Babcock, Stephen S. Conkling, George L. Denton, William M. McQuoid, Levi Starr, John H. Bell, Coe Robertson, Selah R. Corwin, Dorastus B. Irwin, Robert H. Houston, Rufus D. Case, Leander Crawford, Ira M. Corwin, James J. Mills, William W. Reeve, Lewis Armstrong, Albert H. Russell, M. Lewis Clark, Charles Horton, Archibald L. Vail, Uzal T. Hayes, Edward M. Madden.

After the necessary arrangements the bank was duly organized, and commenced business in September, 1869. The first deposit made was the sum of fifty dollars by S. S. Draper, a son of Dr. Joshua Draper. At the present time (1880) the deposits amount to about $500,000.

The present trustees are Joshua Draper, president; H. R. Wilcox and A. L. Vail, vice-presidents; George L. Denton, secretary and treasurer; John G. Wilkin, Lewis Armstrong, M. D. Stivers, Selah R. Corwin, S. H. Talcott, W. T. Hayes, G. O. Hulse, Wm. Mills-paugh.

NEW YORK AND ERIE INSURANCE COMPANY.

This institution was incorporated in February, 1853, under the general insurance law, with a capital of $100,000, which was increased to $150,000 a few years later. It opened two departments, one for farmers and the other for merchants.

It continued in business for a few years, but finally became embarrassed financially, and its affairs were finally closed up by the appointment of a receiver.

THE WALLKILL BANK

executed a certificate of incorporation April 27, 1857. The office was stated in the paper as established at Middletown, the business to commence August 3d of the same year. The enterprise was inaugurated in accordance with this certificate. Under the national law of a few years later it became a national bank. Subsequently its affairs became financially embarrassed, and the institution was closed about the year 1873.

THE MIDDLETOWN LIBRARY

was incorporated March 10, 1801. A meeting was held at the house of Isaiah Vail, and the trustees named were Benjamin Webb, H. B. Wisner, Isaiah Vail, William T. Bull, Thomas Houston, B. H. Smith, John Tinker, Elisha Reeve, Israel Wickham, and Abel Woodhull.

The chairman was Israel Wickham, and the paper was verified by him before Judge Moses Phillips. This institution thus incorporated became an actual fact. Books of a valuable historical character were purchased. A fragment of the original catalogue, in possession of Mr. George Wickham, commences with Marshall's "Life of Washington." In 1827 the association was reorganized, a new constitution being adopted March 13th. A subscription for new members had been made the previous year. March 31, 1828, there were two hundred and seventy-nine volumes. It does not appear from Mr. Wickham's papers where the books were kept, nor how long the library lasted.

THE ORANGE COUNTY MILK ASSOCIATION.

This organization, though now doing a business of quite modern origin, was originally formed in 1843, and was at that time mostly an agency for the sale of Orange County milk, located in New York, and managed by Mr. John M. Wood. That early organization sold out in 1847 or 1848 to the present company. The business soon after was considerably enlarged, and represented extensive interests. In 1860 it was incorporated by act of the Legislature.

Prominent in the management at that time were Adrian Holbert, James M. Horton, George W. Allison, James Kennedy, and Richard Decker. The present large and commodious buildings in Middletown were erected in 1868. The business then became more distinctly a local enterprise, manufacturing condensed milk mostly, with a small amount of butter and cheese. Ten or fifteen hands are employed, and at the height of the season from 10,000 to 11,000 quarts of milk are purchased daily of farmers. R. Decker is the superintendent. The New York agency is managed by George Conklin, at 27 Vestry Street.

THE SUTHERLAND FALLS MARBLE COMPANY, WALLKILL, executed a certificate of incorporation Dec. 31, 1856. The objects were declared to be "the mining and quarrying of marble, and the working and manufacturing of the same for any purpose for which marble is or may be used." The trustees named were Henry P. Roberts, Elisha P. Wheeler, Edward M.

Madden, William M. Graham, and John G. Williams. The operations of the company were to be carried on in Middletown, and also in Rutland and Sudbury, Vt. This was an enterprise that passed into other hands in a few years. It is understood to have been a valuable franchise, the quarries covered by the title yielding rich and abundant material.

OIL AND MINING COMPANIES.

During the period of "inflation" immediately following the war, and developed by the excitement attendant upon the discovery of petroleum, Middletown had its full share of companies. They were formed in good faith; much territory that has since yielded immense fortunes to other parties was covered by these various papers. Considerable capital was expended, but all the enterprises were sooner or later abandoned. We give the following list of incorporations as a part of the history of that exciting period:

MIDDLETOWN LUBRICATING OIL COMPANY.—The charter of this association was recorded in the office of the county clerk Dec. 28, 1864. The trustees named in the instrument were Albert H. Russell, Levi Starr, Charles H. Horton, Joshua Draper, Joseph Davis, W. M. Graham, James B. Hulse, Jonathan M. Matthews, George S. Thomas. The amount of the capital stock was stated at $250,000, not to be paid in money, but to consist of and be represented by land leases, wells, etc. The operations of the company were to be carried on in Middletown, and in the township of Cranberry, Venango Co., Pa., and elsewhere.

THE ROCK OIL COMPANY OF MIDDLETOWN was organized Dec. 31, 1864. The capital was stated at $20,000, to be represented by the lands, leases, wells, and other property of the company.

The object was declared to be the mining, boring for petroleum, rock, carbon, or lubricating oils, coal, salt, or other minerals. The names of the trustees were Jonathan M. Matthews, Harvey Everett, Algeron S. Dodge, Levi Starr, William M. Graham, Henry B. Dill, Leeman A. Tripp, John G. Wilkin, and Charles H. Horton.

THE KING OIL COMPANY of Middletown was incorporated by a certificate recorded in the office of the county clerk, and bearing date Jan. 2, 1865. The objects of the association were stated as "the mining and boring for petroleum, rock, or carbon, and lubricating oils, coal, salt, or other minerals; the purchase, leasing, developing, sinking, and working of oil-wells, and the purchase or lease of oil or other mineral lands, and the purchase and sale of such leases and lands, and the forwarding of the products to market." The trustees named were Ashbel C. King, John K. Hoffer, Levi Starr, James B. Hulse, Albert H. Russell, Joshua Draper, Jonathan M. Matthews, Elisha P. Wheeler, Corydon T. King, John G. Wilkin.

THE WALLKILL LEAD COMPANY made an annual report Jan. 19, 1865, showing capital stock to the amount of $500,000 actually paid in. The debts were stated at about $6200.

The report was signed by S. L. Crosby, E. A. Quoisant, S. A. Banks, George B. Satterlee, Hamilton Odell.

THE DRAPER OIL COMPANY

was formed Jan. 31, 1865. It was declared that the operations of the company were to be carried on in Middletown. The objects were stated to be the mining or boring for petroleum-rock, or carbon, and lubricating oils, coal, salt, or other minerals. The trustees appointed were Joseph A. Bouvell, Asa Eaton, Charles Horton, Albert H. Russell, William M. Graham, Levi Starr, Edward M. Madden, James B. Hulse, John G. Wilkin. The articles of association were recorded Feb. 2, 1865.

THE ADAMS MINING COMPANY

was formed June 5, 1868, with its principal place of business at Middletown, and its mining operations declared to be intended to be carried on in the towns of Deerpark, Greenville, Mount Hope, Monroe, Cornwall, and Wallkill, in this county, as well as in certain other towns in other counties. Three trustees were named,—Samuel Conklin, Emmet Moore, and Stephen T. Hoyle. The stock was to consist of 40,000 shares, and the company to continue fifty years.

This was a later association than those of 1864 and 1865, but did not enter into actual mining operations.

THE MIDDLETOWN AND UNIONVILLE TELEGRAPH COMPANY was organized by a certificate filed in the office of the county clerk, bearing date Oct. 22, 1867. The capital stock was stated at $2000, divided into 40 shares of $50 each. The company was organized for one thousand years, terminating on the first day of October, A.D. 2867. The stockholders were Elisha P. Wheeler, James N. Pronk, Hiland H. Hunt, Levi Starr, William Evans, Dorastus B. Irwin, Marcus S. Haynes, Henry A. Wadsworth, William H. Clark, Asa Smith, Samuel V. Pierson, and John C. Wisner.

THE MIDDLETOWN BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION

was established Oct. 15, 1873, I. R. Clements, president; G. G. McChesney, vice-president; Charles J. Boyd, treasurer; H. S. Conklin, secretary. There has been no change in these officers since the commencement. The society is on the same plan as similar associations in Philadelphia, to wit: the cumulative system, dues, fines, interest, and all receipts pooled and kept until the gross sum will pay every shareholder $200 on each share. The first series ran out Feb. 17, 1880, when there was disbursed $75,000. There are five other series running. Dues are two dollars monthly on each share.

THE EVENING STANDARD ASSOCIATION was organized in the village of Middletown, July 28, 1877, for the purpose of publishing a temperance paper, to be named the Evening Standard. The capital stock was fixed at $1000, to be divided into 100 shares of $10 each. Eleven trustees were appointed, as follows: Asa Eaton, Leander Brink, Ethelbert Selleck, Charles Roberts, James A. Wilkison, Charles Bell, John F. Malette, Charles H. Mead, John W. Hill, Charles T. Lyon, John C. Smith. This was an effort to establish a newspaper to distinctively advocate the principles of temperance. Under this organization a paper was started with the above name, of which Mr. John F. Malette was the editor. It was continued for about three months, when for various reasons the undertaking was abandoned.

THE ZETESIAN DEBATING SOCIETY

was organized Oct. 25, 1877, by the election of the following officers; President, Henry P. Addis; Vice-President, Joseph B. Hulett; Secretary, D. Dewitt Schoonmaker; Treasurer, N. Elmer Conkling. The officers are elected to serve for three months only, and the following gentlemen have presided over the society since its organization: Henry P. Addis, S. Willard Beakes, Walter R. Emory, Henry P. Addis, Andrew J. Durland, Henry P. Addis (to fill vacancy), C. S. Mills, Granville H. Fuller (to fill vacancy), S. W. Addis.

The officers for the present quarter are: President, Jas. McDermott; Vice-President, Philip S. Mosher; Secretary, E. Irving Van Horn; Treasurer, Moses Vail. The Zetesian Literary Journal has since the organization of the society been maintained by the members. By the political division of the society Mr. Ira F. Swalm is now editor of the Zetesian Democrat, and Mr. Edwin R. Storm of the Zetesian Republican, thus giving each faction an exponent of its own views.

The Zetesian bar, composed of those members preparing for the legal profession, has at various times furnished the public with entertainment in the shape of mock trials, which were always greeted by flattering audiences. The society numbers about 20 members, and is in a flourishing condition.

MIDDLETOWN GOSPEL TEMPERANCE UNION.

In April, 1877, a wonderful interest in the temperance reform was developed during a series of meetings conducted by C. M. Winchester, who was sent out under direction of the Co-operative Temperance Union of New York City. The meetings were so large night after night that no room was found of sufficient capacity to contain them, and a tent was procured. The revival continued until more than 3000 persons had signed the pledge.

It being deemed by some desirable to organize a society, a meeting was called for that purpose, to be held in the Congregational church, June 8, 1877.

The meeting was very fully attended by the citizens, and proved to be the most exciting ever held on the subject of temperance. A few persons, including nearly all the clergy of the village, favored a pledge for the society that should be general in its character, without specifying wine and cider; on the other hand, Mr. Winchester and many of the signers to his pledge declared that to change the pledge would be to lower the standard and weaken the force of the movement then in progress. After a long and exciting debate the vote was taken, and the following pledge adopted as a basis of membership in the "Gospel Temperance Union":

"I promise, with the help of God, that I will not make, buy, sell, or use as a beverage any spirituous or malt liquors, wine, or cider; and I will use my best efforts to induce all others to form and keep the same good resolution."

The following officers were then elected, although the parties favoring the weaker pledge had a list of candidates nominated headed by a prominent minister of the village: President, C. M. Winchester; Vice-Presidents, E. M. Madden, Jr., Charles Bell, Mrs. Chester Belding, John C. Smith, Wm. Evans; Sec., Thomas Featherstone; Treas., Mrs. Frank Fletcher; Executive Committee, Chester Belding, A. A. Weller, G. B. Fuller, A. J. Wilkison, Hon. W. J. Groo, Mrs. L. Wheeler, Mrs. J. W. Ross, Mrs. Frank Fletcher.

The society continued daily temperance meetings for some sixteen weeks after its organization, and since that time it has held at least one public meeting a week.

The present officers are: President, C. M. Winchester; Vice-Presidents, D. L. Conkling, E. M. Madden, Jr., Hon. W. J. Groo, J. H. Millsbaugh, E. Selleck; Sec., Charles Bell; Treas., Leander Brink; Executive Committee, Hector Moore, T. L. Mills, J. E. Corter, Charles Bell, Chester Belding, H. H. Jessup, Mrs. Frank E. Burr.

WALLKILL COUNCIL, No. 57, ROYAL TEMPLARS OF TEMPERANCE.

The above society was organized at Middletown Aug. 13, 1878. It was organized under a charter granted by the Supreme Council. The object of the order is the promotion of temperance and the creation of a beneficiary fund for the relief of families of disabled or deceased members.

At the decease of a member, if a male, the family receives $2000; if a female, $1000. In case of total disability half the above sums, and the balance at death. Wallkill Council pays its sick members $3 a week by a special sick benefit department. Total abstinence and a healthy physical condition is necessary to membership. This council has now 81 members in good standing, and is in a strong financial condition. Its meetings are held in the Free Christian Meeting-House on Monday evening of each week. The following are the present officers: Select Councilor, Chauncy B. Moore; Vice-Councilor, John C. Smith; Rec. Sec., C. M. Winchester; Fin. Sec., John M. Brink; Treasurer, U. D. Gee; Herald, Franklin L. Mills; Deputy Herald, Jennie F. Dusenbury;

Chaplain, Ann S. Van Fleet; Past Councilor, C. M. Conant, M.D.; Guard, Josephine Jenkins; Sentinel, Geo. M. Smith; Med. Examiner, C. M. Conant, M.D.

The presiding and past officers from the beginning have been Hon. W. J. Groo, Peter F. Miller, C. M. Winchester, C. M. Conant, M.D., Chauncy B. Moore.

THE MIDDLETOWN HEBREW UNION

was incorporated by a certificate executed Feb. 19, 1880. The trustees named in and signing the instrument were Benjamin V. Wolff, Joshua Mendelshon, Adolph Budwig, Charles Wolff, Henry Harris, L. Stern, Elias Simon, S. Lipfeld.

This is a new organization for social and benevolent purposes, and bids fair to take its place among the other important societies of this place. It is also a religious society to maintain public worship and sustain a Sunday-school.

X.—PLACES OF SPECIAL NOTE.

The town of Wallkill shares in the valuable lacustrine deposits that characterize Orange County, and in the fossil remains found in them.

In 1843 the remains of a Mastodon Maximus were dug from a marl-bed on the farm owned at one time by Mr. William Connor, a short distance from Scotch-town. They were removed to Albany.

INDIAN SPRING.

This spring is on the farm owned in modern times by Hon. Judge Slaughter. The farm is situated east of where the turnpike leading from Montgomery to Mount Hope crosses Three-Mile Hill, and east of Michigan. The spring was always known by this name within Mr. Slaughter's recollection. In plowing up a field on this farm for the first time many Indian arrows were found, in length varying from two to six inches. An axe of the hardest flint, and as large as the hand, was also found, which is now lost or carried away as a curiosity.

The tradition in the neighborhood is that some of the Indians, for some cause not now known, became offended with the family of Daniel Butterfield, and determined to revenge themselves by murdering the family. It was in midsummer, and when the grain-fields were full grown. One day a bush was seen by the family at an unusual place in the grain-field near the house where the individual did not recollect to have seen one before, and it attracted his attention. While he thought upon it and stood for a little time gazing in that direction, he thought he saw the bush move slowly towards the house. He instantly concluded there was mischief of some kind, if not death, as well as an Indian under the bush; and soon as possible, without noise, entered the house, and informed the inmates of what he had seen and what he expected. Preparations for attack and defense proper to meet the emergency were made in a moment. One took his gun, well loaded for execution, and proceeded to where he could see the bush, and where it was moving directly towards him and the house. Here, in secret and profound silence, he waited till the bush should approach so near as to develop its friendly or hostile character, and insure success in case he had to fire upon it. The needful preparations, as far as limited means and the approach of sudden danger admitted, were arranged by the family in the house. To each a duty was assigned, and, aware of the responsibility, they individually assumed to discharge it as in a case of life and death.

The bush continued to move steadily and silently forward, and in the direction of the house,—circumstances of awful import to all concerned. A thrill of deepest excitement passed like lightning through the bosom of the watchman, as he saw the danger approach slowly and with apparent design, and thought of the consequence of any failure on his part to arrest its progress. The same all-absorbing and breathless anxiety filled the inmates of the dwelling, where the silence of death reigned,—no one daring to breathe. The time for action came; the watchman, with excited coolness, and eye upon the sight of his musket, drew up; took the deadly aim: the bush fell, and on taking it up an enemy, and, as suspected, a red man of the forest, with instruments of death in his hand, was found beneath it.

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The capacities of this town for successful farming are fair. The surface is somewhat uneven and broken, not mountainous, but yet decidedly hilly. The hills extend mostly in a north and south direction, in which they observe the usual physical law of this region of country. The soil is of every variety; perhaps not as well adapted to grain as that of some other towns of the county, but excellent for pasturage and meadow.

THE MANUFACTURE OF HATS.

In the spring of 1853, Messrs. Wilcox & Draper commenced the manufacture of wool hats, erecting for that purpose a new building on Railroad Avenue, adjoining a stream of water skirting the eastern portion of the village, 65 feet in front, with an addition in the rear 60 feet in length. This was the first of the several hat-factories which have added so much to the business interests of Middletown, and have contributed so largely to its growth.

The first firm was succeeded by Dr. Joshua Draper alone for some years, then by Draper & Fuller, and finally by Dr. Draper again, as at the present time (1880). The factory is a large and splendid building, six stories above the basement. Two hundred to two hundred and fifty hands are employed. The capacity of the factory is equal to the production of 200 dozen wool hats per day, and 200 dozen straw hats.

THE BABCOCK & WATROUS WOOL-HAT MANUFACTORY was founded about 1869. It is located at the corner of Mill and Water Streets, and is a large brick building three stories in height, thoroughly fitted up for the various operations required in the business, and supplied with valuable machinery. The original firm was Babcock & Fuller. From 1873 to 1875 the name was Babcock, Fuller & Co., two brothers Fuller being members. In 1875 the latter retired to establish business for themselves mentioned below.

The business was then continued by R. M. Babcock until 1879, when George L. Watrous became a partner, with the firm-name as stated above. The business is extensive, requiring the employment of about 200 hands. The manufacturing capacity of the establishment equals about 200 dozen hats per day. The business is exclusively devoted to wool hats, of which every variety is made.

THE FULLER BROS. HAT MANUFACTORY.—The buildings for this important enterprise were erected in 1874. The firm was composed of men thoroughly acquainted with all the details of the business, and they commenced operations in 1875. Their facilities are superior in every respect, large and commodious buildings, machinery of the best approved description, and skilled workmen. They manufacture, as do the other hat-factories of Middletown, a line of wool hats exclusively,—comprises all varieties of children's, ladies' and men's. Their capacity for turning out finished work is about 250 dozen hats per day, and to do this 200 hands or more are employed.

THE MIDDLETOWN TANNERY.

This was established about 1827. Its facilities are extensive. The buildings are large and commodious, and conveniently situated on the stream of water that flows through the southern part of the village. The present firm is known as Howell, Hinchman & Co. The business is one of considerable magnitude, giving employment to a large number of men, and forming an important industry of the town.

SAW MANUFACTORY.

This business was established about 1853 by a firm consisting of Elisha P. Wheeler, Edward M. Madden, and Josiah Bakewell. The building erected for the business, on a lot of twelve acres secured for the purpose, was 214 feet long and 40 feet wide; the main shop, 176 feet long; the hardening-shop, in a wing, 41 by 32 feet, with furnaces of ample capacity; an engine-room, in another wing, 41 by 26 feet; and offices, packing and storage-rooms; the whole one of the best designed and best equipped saw manufactories in the United States. In 1860, Mr. William Clemson entered the firm, which then became known as Wheeler, Madden & Clemson. Mr. Bakewell died in 1861, and in 1868, Mr. Lemuel Wheeler (son of E. P. Wheeler) and Mr. Thomas D. Roberts became members of the firm. In 1870, Mr. Roberts died, and Mr. Lemuel Wheeler in 1873. The same year Mr. William Millspaugh and Charles I. Humphreys entered the firm, when the firm-name was changed to

"The Wheeler, Madden & Clemson Manufacturing Company." Mr. E. P. Wheeler died in 1876. The present members of the firm (1880) are E. M. Madden, William Clemson, William Millspaugh, Charles I. Humphreys, and W. K. Stansbury.

Previous to 1862 the business was confined to the manufacture of saws from imported steel, but at that time, owing to fears of the interruption of the relations between England and the United States, the manufacture of steel was begun here, and has since been successfully continued. The saws manufactured here have achieved a reputation second to none in the country.

The valuable plot of twelve acres, secured at the outset with a wise forethought of the future, has been mostly retained for their own use, despite its increasing value for building purposes arising from the rapid growth of the village.

THE MONHAGEN STEAM AND WATER MILLS.

This important enterprise was founded in 1839, by Henry Little, Esq., who erected the buildings at that time. They were destroyed by fire in 1867. About a year later they were rebuilt by S. D. Burns. Subsequently the property passed to Houston & Conkling, who conduct the business at the present time. A large amount of custom grinding is done, together with a general flouring and feed business.

THE MANUFACTURE OF FILES.

This business was founded by the firm of King, Cockayne & Co., about 1856. The individuals of the firm were Sidney D. King, Corydon T. King, and John T. Cockayne. The latter was an experienced Sheffield mechanic. He has remained in the business to the present time, though not continuously as a partner. Mr. John Williams, one of the original firm, established the Iron Age in Middletown, a valuable journal in the interest of the iron trade of this country, which was afterwards transferred to New York and published by his son, David Williams. For a few years succeeding 1863 the firm was Wheeler, Clemson & Co., they having bought the establishment.

In 1870, John T. Cockayne became a member of this firm, and Isaac P. Madden also was admitted at that time. Mr. George Rusher, one of the firm, died in 1872, and Mr. E. P. Wheeler in 1876. The surviving members continued the business. The present name of the firm is "The Madden & Cockayne File Company." They employ about eighty hands. Their establishment is extensive, and thoroughly fitted up with the latest improved machinery.

CARPET-BAG FACTORY.

This industry in Middletown was established in 1853 by Matthews & Hunt, who had previously been in business for about ten years at Windham Centre, Greene Co. They purchased a brick building adjoining the railroad track, and enlarged it to a building 115 feet in length, 40 in width, and three stories high.

In 1867 the firm became "Matthews Bros.," consisting of J. M. Matthews, J. E. Matthews, and J. F. Matthews. The first named died in 1874. The present style of the firm is Matthews & Co., dating under that name from Jan. 1, 1875. The business done is very extensive. Their large and well-arranged factory is supplied with the best modern machinery. About thirty hands are employed, and such is the perfection of the arrangements and the completeness of the facilities, that the average daily capacity for turning out finished work is about twenty-five dozen carpet-bags and satchels, with ten or twelve gross of ladies' belts. In the twenty-seven years of the existence of this business it has steadily grown from small beginnings to its present magnitude. It has been and still is one of the most important industries in Middletown.

ORANGE COUNTY FURNACE.

The buildings for this establishment were erected in 1842 by a firm consisting of Elisha P. Wheeler, Jonah F. France, Edward M. Madden, and Joseph Lemon. They were of brick, three stories in height, covering an area of 100 feet front and 200 feet depth. In January, 1857, the property passed to a new firm, Martine, Mackay & Co. The business is very extensive, and the buildings are favorably located. In later years the proprietorship passed to A. L. Vail. John W. Mackay, manager.

THE BOOK-BINDERY

connected with the Middletown Press is an industry of considerable importance. Mr. Edward Schmitz, the foreman of the binderies, has patented a method of binding books giving a peculiar firmness to each leaf, so that loose leaves are almost an impossibility under Mr. Schmitz's method. In the Scientific American of July 14, 1877, may be seen a full explanation of the method. It is, evidently, worthy the study of the trade throughout the country.

THE MORGANS & WILCOX MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

This firm manufactures wood-type and all forms of wood-furniture used in printing-offices. The business was originally established by Young & Morgans at Napanoch, Ulster Co., where it was burned out in the spring of 1880, resulting in a change of location and partial change of firm. At Middletown the new firm purchased about four acres of land on the corner of North Street and Wisner Avenue, and erected a building 100 feet front on the avenue, with two annexes running back 70 feet.

DECKERS' MILLS, Etc.

Other business enterprises are mentioned to some extent in connection with the villages. On the Shawangunk Kill in the north part of the town is the mill of the Decker Brothers. The present buildings are new. The mill was originally established by the Olivers. It was afterwards owned by Judge Duryea, and by several subsequent proprietors down to the Deckers.

XII.—MILITARY.

The muster-roll already given, in treating of early settlement, shows the names of those who in 1738, upon this sparsely-settled territory, were enrolled for the defense of the province. Doubtless in the long period of the French and Indian wars, 1745 to 1759, there were one or more from this section engaged in the colonial armies, but no record remains of any such service.

During the war of the Revolution the people of Wallkill are known to have been patriotic, and nobly bore their share of public duty. Col. Wm. Faulkner, then a captain, was in the service at the taking of Fort Montgomery by the British, and received a bayonet-wound in the side, which affected him more or less through life, though he lived to an advanced age. He was brave, fearless, and a true patriot. In the war of 1812, Col. Crawford, from this section, went out with a company of cavalry to Harlem Heights.

The following article gives some items of local interest in this war:

"FROM MY SKETCH-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812.

"On a pleasant Sabbath afternoon, Sept. 5, 1812, when the temple of the Prince of Peace had just been closed, our little village was reminded that the temple of Janus was still open, and some of us would likely be called to serve in its bloody orgies. A stranger made his appearance and inquired for the residence of Col. Benjamin Webb. Early on Monday morning the colonel ordered Capt. Vincent Clark to muster the Republican Blues at Middletown, with three days' rations, and on the 8th to proceed to Waterford, above Albany, and there, with other companies, to be organized, under the command of Gen. Reuben Hopkins, for a northern campaign. On Wednesday, the 8th September, the reveille struck our ears, breaking the stillness of the morning and calling us to arms. Capt. Clark's health not permitting him to go, we were mustered in front of Obadiah Vail's hotel, under Lieut. Stacy Beakes, when the following persons answered at roll-call: Lieut. Stacy Beakes, commandant; Nathaniel Penny, first sergeant; Privates, John Canfield, John B. Cox, Samuel Cox, Abner Miller, Moses H. Corwin, Stephen Sayre, Andrew Grinsaulus, Gabriel Hill, Daniel Parsons, David Youmans, Samuel Canfield, Henry Coleman, William Penny, Joseph H. Owen, Joseph Keen, Peter Quick, Alexander Parsons, John S. Clark, Matthew Faulkner, Benjamin Parsons. A number of farmers in the vicinity came in with their wagons and offered to convey us to Newburgh, which offer was kindly accepted. All things being ready, Rev. Abel Jackson, in a very appropriate prayer, commended us to the protection of Almighty God.

"We were soon under way, leaving our little village some less of its inhabitants. It was a painful thought that, on my leaving home, there were some that did not come to give us one cheerful parting word; their sympathy was with the enemy,—'England has done us no wrong.' Arriving at Newburgh near nightfall, we were detained some time to await the coming in of Capt. Deyoe's company from Ulster County, and the sloop to get ready to take us to Albany, where we arrived on the evening of the 10th. The next day we took up our line of march to Waterford, and pitched our tents on the hill north of the village, where we remained several days. We began now to learn something of camp-life. Our rations were very good; and by the kindness of Mr. Schoonoven, a lawyer of the village, who had a field of potatoes that was only separated from our camp by the highway, he gave us liberty to use what we wanted while remaining there. He told us that he had a patch of onions near his house, and his gardener would wait on us and sell them very cheap. His kindness saved his potatoes from being wasted, and his onions were not stolen.

"The companies ordered to muster here had come in, and we were organized and put under the command of Col. Abraham Hardenburgh, of Ulster County, James Talmadge, of Dutchess County, lieutenant-colonel, and ———, of Saratoga County, major. The regiment numbered about seven hundred men, and was ordered to take up its line of march for Whitehall, and on the 18th of September we struck our tents, and Capt. Beakes marched out of Waterford with one hundred and twenty men. We marched on to Whitehall, and from thence by water on Lake Champlain to Plattsburgh, where we remained four days, and then on through Clinton and Franklin Counties to Fort Hampton, one and a half miles from the Canada line on the Montreal road, and forty-five miles from that city. We were halting at a tavern to take a rest on our way through Franklin County. Capt. Beakes threw off his coat on a bed in the kitchen to shave. In putting it on his pocket-book fell out unobserved. A soldier belonging to the United States army was present, and finding the pocket-book on the bed, made proclamation, 'Who has lost a pocket-book?' Our captain found his was missing, and describing the money, the soldier gave it to him. The captain offered him a five-dollar bill; he refused to take it. 'If you think that is not enough I will give you more.' He refused to take anything. 'Will you take a treat?' He refused that. The soldier was a youth a little out of his teens, of pleasing countenance. I should like to know the future of that young man, endowed with such sterling honesty. While at Fort Hampton some of the men belonging to Capt. Hawly's company were amusing themselves at cards by a log fire. Major ——— came along and ordered the cards thrown in the fire. Their sergeant was standing by, and said he would not have done it. The major turned and struck the sergeant with the flat of his sword, and ordered Capt. Beakes to put him under guard. Capt. Hawly's men soon brought him out. The major, not willing to be foiled, stated his crime, and ordered Adjutant Van Ranslaure to take a file of men and convey him to Gen. Hampton, at the Four Corners, for trial. 'I see,' says the general, 'that he belongs to the New York Volunteers; you must try your own men.' And that was the end of it.

"Had we been brought into action with the enemy, Major ——— would not have lived to give orders for the second fire. Let it be known that all officers are not killed by the enemy. I heard the remark often made, 'If we get into battle my worst enemy shall die first.' Our colonel was an honest old farmer from Ulster, and well thought of, but without military talent. Lieut.-Col. Talmadge was an officer of strict discipline, and yet had the entire love and confidence of the regiment. I would also say that Capt. Beakes was in no danger from his own men.

"The object of calling the brigade of Gen. Hopkins was to keep back marauding Indians from entering Clinton and Franklin Counties while the United States army invaded Canada. Gen. Hampton, with five thousand United States troops, lay at the Four Corners, three miles from us, and had orders from the War Department to form a junction with Gen. Wilkinson, at the French Mills, twenty-four miles from the Four Corners, and there, uniting with Wilkinson's eleven thousand men, the combined army to make a descent upon Montreal.

"There was a road from the Four Corners to the French Mills, and there was nothing to prevent Hampton from going there but a determination not to unite with Wilkinson, for by so doing he would be only second in command. Thus the whole expedition failed.

"Gen. Hampton made us a call about the 20th of October. The regiment was drawn up in a line; he said, 'You make a very good appearance. I have come to invite you to volunteer, and if you do not I will dismiss you and send you home in disgrace.' The contemptible Mississippi slave-driver had no control over us. Our colonel some days after ordered us to return to Plattsburgh, where we were discharged, and every one went his own way.

"The 'Republican Blues' arrived home safe in November, after a tramp of about seven hundred miles. We associated together while in camp, and were designated throughout the army as 'them Middletowners.'

"Some time after my arrival home I read the official report of Gen. Hampton to the War Department, and it was false throughout. As I was on the spot I knew all about it. Entire reliance need not be put in all official reports.

"The only persons yet living belonging to the 'Republican Blues' are Alex. Parsons and myself. MOSES H. CORWIN.*

"MIDDLETOWN, Sept. 16, 1863."

* This article is furnished by Miss Sarah E. Wilkison, to whom it will be noticed we are indebted for many items of public interest. Of Mr. Corwin she says, "By request, Moses H. Corwin (father of Daniel Corwin) wrote this history, giving the names on the roll of the 'Republican Blues,' and their campaign service. He was about seventy-nine years old when he wrote it. He died in March, 1866. Alex. Parsons was the last survivor. He died about ten years ago.

WAR OF 1861-65.

The reception of the news that war had commenced was attended with the same results that everywhere occurred throughout the North. Before the outbursting enthusiasm of the people parties and partisan considerations for a time disappeared. The national colors flashed out from private residences, from the places of business, from the spires of churches. An enthusiastic meeting was held Saturday evening, April 20th, at which Moses H. Corwin, a veteran of the war of 1812, presided. Speeches were made, resolutions adopted, and steps taken to immediately form a company for the defense of the Union.

Women's aid societies were formed; supplies sent forward for suffering soldiers; the successive quotas of the town were filled.

The quotas and credits of the town were as follows:

	Quota.	Credits.
Under calls of July and August, 1862.....	205	213
" all calls from July, 1863, to July, 1864....	198	157
" call of July, 1864.....	134	137
" call of December, 1864.....	66	66
	603	573

This statement fails to give the town the full credit which it deserves, as it does not include enlistments at the outbreak of the war. Prior to the July call (1862) the town claimed to have furnished—

To Eighteenth Regiment.....	157
" Fifty sixth ".....	43
" First Mounted Rifles.....	51
" One Hundred and Third Regiment.....	2
	214
The subsequent official credits were.....	573
And the total.....	787

To some extent adjoining towns suffered in this total prior to July, as enlistments made from them at Middletown were claimed by Walkill. Under the settlement made with the Paymaster-General, in the spring of 1865, the town was awarded for excess of years and bounties the sum of $50,765.

OFFICIAL ACTION.

At a special town-meeting called in due form, and held Aug. 8, 1864, it was voted to raise a tax not exceeding $100,000 for the purpose of paying bounties to soldiers who might volunteer under the call of the President of the United States for 500,000 men, said call bearing date July 18, 1864. The amount of bounty to be paid to each was left to the discretion of the board of town auditors. The same bounty to be paid to a volunteer was also voted to any citizen who should procure a substitute to be mustered into the service prior to a draft.

The supervisor and town clerk were authorized to sign and issue the necessary bonds in the name of the town, to be paid in ten equal annual installments, 1870 to 1879, inclusive. Under this authority the town auditors met Aug. 9, 1864, and voted a bounty of $600 to each volunteer soldier; to each recruit furnished by others $550, and to the person enlisting such recruit $50. At a subsequent meeting it was voted to vary the resolution so as to leave a recruiting-officer and a recruit he should secure to divide the $600 each recruit, as they might agree.

August 24th, $100 "hand-money" was voted to each recruit, or to the recruiting-officer and the recruit. At another special town-meeting duly called, and which was held Jan. 27, 1865, a tax not to exceed $75,000 was voted for the payment of bounties. The necessary bonds were authorized, payable in four equal annual installments, March 1, 1866, 1867, 1868, 1869. The amount of bounty to each was again left to the discretion of the town board.

In pursuance of this authority the town board offered $250 bounty for one year; $350 for two years; $500 for three years, with $50 hand-money in each case. The same offer was made to any citizen furnishing a substitute towards filling the town quota. A committee on finance consisted of William Evans, Jr., William M. Graham, James B. Hulse, James J. Mills, Harvey McMonagle, Albert Mills, William M. Dunning, M. Lewis Clark. A committee on enlistments consisted of James W. Hoyt, Elliot A. Coleman, Charles M. Miller, James J. Mills, Arch. L. Vail, Harvey McMonagle, Gilbert J. Beebe, John G. Wilkin, Horatio R. Wilcox, Joseph Kernochan, Benjamin W. Shaw, Timothy Cohalan, Samuel Conkling, Stephen Sweet, John H. Bell, Andrew Wilson, Jr., James H. Horton, Ira M. Corwin.

Jan. 31, 1865, the hand-money was made $100.

THE SOLDIERS' MONUMENT OF MIDDLETOWN

was built by the St. Johnsbury Granite Company, of Vermont. It is made entirely from their quarry, and stands twenty-two feet in height. It is made up of seven different blocks, and all of them are fitted together in the most workmanlike and finished manner, the edges, mouldings, corners, and lettering being perfect in execution, so much so that a close scrutiny fails to detect a single blemish.

The first three blocks are square bases, and are finely proportioned one with the other, the third one running into an octagon, on the four corners of which are four cannon. Next comes an octagon polished die, on which rests a handsomely moulded cap and plinth, the whole surmounted by the figure of a private soldier. The face of every piece, with the exception of the lower base, presents a polished surface.

To the west, fronting North Street, on the second and third bases is inscribed in handsome sunken and raised letters the following inscription:

Erected
A.D. 1879,
To the memory of the Soldiers of the town of Wallkill.
The War of the Rebellion,
1861-1865.

On the north side the inscription reads, "Wallkill's tribute to her brave defenders;" on the south side, "Our comrades, they died for their country;" on the east side, "Fraternity, Charity, Loyalty." On the eight sides of the cap-stone above the die are cut the badges of the army corps, while on the plinth above is a large monogram of the letters N. Y. S. V.

The crown-piece of the whole monument is the seven-foot figure of a private soldier dressed in regulation army overcoat, fully accoutered, and standing at "Casey's parade rest."

The monument was dedicated Sept. 5, 1879, with the following programme: prayer, by Rev. Augustus Seward; song, Mannerchor; oration, Maj.-Gen. Kilpatrick; ode to Wallkill soldiers, written for the occasion by J. Owen Moore, sung by L. L. Ross and others; address, C. H. Winfield; song, Mannerchor; original poem, by A. A. Hopkins, of Rochester; address, Rev. Mr. Osborn; song, "Tenting on the old camp-ground;" benediction, Rev. Mr. Dows.

SOLDIERS' LIST, WAR OF 1861-65.

The following list has been prepared from official sources, from the files of the Middletown Press, 1861 to 1865, and by general inquiry. It probably contains the names of nearly all the men from the town, and perhaps some belonging elsewhere. The difficulty of supplying an accurate list after the lapse of so many years needs only to be stated to be appreciated.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

REAR-ADMIRAL SILAS HORTON STRINGHAM.

While the territory embraced in the present county of Orange has produced many men eminent in civil and professional ranks, it has not been without equally honorable representatives in the army and navy, especially in the latter, where the banner of the heroic Ludlow and his ill-fated commander, Lawrence, was taken up and borne upon every sea by the no less heroic Rear-Admiral Silas Horton Stringham. We regret that the space assigned to notices of this character is necessarily circumscribed, for, regarding biography as history in its highest and most instructive form, we feel that our duty can be but very imperfectly performed in an abridged review of his career. The family from which Admiral Stringham sprung was one of the oldest in the county,—James Stringham, his grandfather, running back in its settlement as early as 1734. His father, Daniel Stringham, resided, at the beginning of the present century, just east of the village of Bloomingburgh, across the county line in the town of Wallkill. He kept a store in the building which now or lately stood at the forks of the Newburgh turnpike and the Middletown plank-road, on the east bank of the Shawangunk Kill; his residence, which was in the immediate vicinity, was removed some years ago. His mother was a Horton. It was while his parents resided here that he was born, in the year 1798. His parents removed to Newburgh in the spring of 1806, his father at that time being a director, and in 1808 taking command of the sloop "Jefferson," of the Farmers' Company line, engaged in the produce trade. The new life which was thus opened to young Stringham was to him a delight. On his father's sloop he was master of every part, while in the public school he submitted only after conflict to the domination of mates older in years. To one of these conflicts he was indebted for his place in the navy. On the occasion referred to, with the assistance of a school-mate, he defied all the other lads of the class. The contest was witnessed by Capt. Ludlow, of the navy, who happened to be passing, and so struck was he with the pluck and determination which Stringham displayed, that he immediately solicited his parents to consent to the boy's apprenticeship in the navy. At the age of twelve years (1810) he went out with Capt. Ludlow as a midshipman, under Commodore Rogers, in the frigate "President." From that time until his death, in 1876, a period of sixty-six years, the history of the American navy was a part of his own. He was on duty when the balls from the "Little Belt" came crashing through the canvas of the "President," in May, 1811, and during the war of 1812. In 1815 he was sent to the Algerine war in the Mediterranean squadron under Decatur. Returning home, and while holding the rank of lieutenant, he was made acting commander of the sloop-of-war "Falmouth." In 1834 he was promoted to the rank of commander in the "John Adams," and from this to a captaincy in the "Independence." From this post he was transferred to the command of the Brooklyn navy-yard. In the war with Mexico he was in command of the "Ohio," and at the head of the squadron before Vera Cruz. In 1852 he was promoted commodore. His last service at sea was in command of the expedition to Hatteras Inlet during the war of the Rebellion, and his last promotion was to the rank of rear-admiral. He was a man of extraordinary courage, judgment and integrity. The honor of his Creator, and the honor of the flag of his country, was the shrine at which he worshiped. An oath he never uttered, nor would he suffer one in his presence; no wine or intoxicating liquors ever touched his lips. A pure, brave, true man, his name is written upon the nation's history as an example and an inspiration.

ROBERT H. HOUSTON.

His great-grandfather, Rev. Joseph Houston, with his two brothers, John and James, emigrated from the north of Ireland in the beginning of the eighteenth century, and came first to Jamestown, Va. James remained near them, and John settled in Pennsylvania. Rev. Joseph, after preaching a few years at Jamestown, came north, and was the first settled pastor of the Goodwill Presbyterian Church in the town of Montgomery, Orange Co., N. Y., where he purchased some 600 acres of land, upon which he resided until his death, and upon which his sons, Joseph and James, resided during their lives. He had also four daughters. James occupied the homestead part of the farm, and Joseph removed to the other side of the Otterkill.

James married Anna, daughter of Rev. George Carr, a Presbyterian minister of Goshen, who bore him the following children: Joseph, George, Thomas, James, John, Samuel, Andrew, Polly, wife of Robert Wilkin; Jane, wife of Adam Dickerson.

Of these children, George was for a few months on guard in the Mamakating Valley to protect the whites from the incursions of the Indians during the Revolutionary war, and Joseph was a physician at Amity, and afterwards at Edenville, where he died. All of the children were married and reared families in Orange County.

George, father of our subject, born in 1763, died in December, 1825. His wife was Jane, daughter of Robert Hunter, of Montgomery, who died in 1801, aged about thirty-two, leaving the following children: Ann, wife of Samuel W. Brown, of Scotchtown; John G., James G., Robert H., and George. The latter was a farmer where a part of Middletown now is, the present cemetery being a part of his farm, and he was afterwards a merchant and justice of the peace in Middletown.

R. W. Houston

E. M. Haddon

George Houston married for his second wife Julia, widow of Mr. Gale, and daughter of William Thompson, of Goshen, who by her first marriage had one son, William Gale. Of this union were born children,—Anthony and Jane, twins, the latter becoming the wife of Charles Heard, of Hamptonburgh; Henry; Sally, wife of Hector Van Cleft; Samuel and Theodore, died young men; Almira, wife of Orange Horton, of White Plains, N. Y.; Elizabeth, wife of William Church, of Orange, N. J.; and Thomas. Twelve of these children were married, and eleven reared families.

George Houston settled on a farm at Scotchtown in 1787, where he remained until 1805, and during the remainder of his life he was a farmer in the town of Walkkill. He gave the land for the church (Presbyterian) and burial-plots at Scotchtown, was one of its founders, and served the church for many years as elder. He was a man of strong force of character, and a promoter of the best interests of society. He was the prime mover in the construction of the Goshen and Bloomingburgh turnpike.

Robert H., son of George and Jane Houston, was born in the town of Walkkill, Aug. 20, 1798. At the age of sixteen he began learning the tanner and currier trade, which he completed at the age of twenty. For six years following he remained at home and had charge of his father's farm. In 1826 he came to Middletown, and in company with Charles Dill rented the "Anderson" tannery, which they afterwards purchased, located across the street from the Commercial Hotel, and carried on the tanning business under the firm-name of Dill & Houston. After a few years they disposed of it, and built another on the present site of the Orange County Milk Association building, where they continued business until 1846. In 1831 they purchased a farm of sixty acres adjoining the village, which they also carried on.

The partnership was dissolved in 1846, Mr. Samuel S. Wickham purchasing an interest in the tannery, which was carried on by Messrs. Houston & Wickham until 1851, when Mr. Houston sold his interest in the business to Mr. Wickham.

In the dissolution of the partnership of Houston & Dill, Mr. Houston retained the farm, which now forms a part of the village of Middletown, and has been laid out by him into lots and streets, and upon which many fine and substantial residences have been erected, forming a desirable part of the village.

To the original purchase he has added contiguous land, and his present farm, of about 100 acres, he still finds pleasure in superintending.

In 1841, Messrs. Houston & Dill donated the land upon which to erect the Walkkill Academy, and during their career together were also engaged for seven years in the lumber business in Sullivan County.

Mr. Houston may safely be ranked among the men to whom much is due for the present prosperous and thrifty village of Middletown, and he has been a liberal contributor in founding many of its present institutions, and forwarding such interests as have tended to the prosperity of the place and the welfare of its citizens. He was one of the men to obligate himself for the extension of the Erie Railway to Middletown after its completion to Goshen, and in the erection of schools, churches, and kindred institutions he has always been found ready with his time and money.

Like his forefathers, he has stood unswervingly a supporter of the Presbyterian Church, which his Scotch ancestors in the mother-country spilled their blood to establish and protect, and both he and his wife have been members of the church at Middletown for many years. He married, May 2, 1829, Mary, daughter of David Dill and Elizabeth Houston, who was born April 6, 1799, was a devoted wife and mother, and died Sept. 11, 1880. Her mother was a daughter of Joseph Houston, and granddaughter of Rev. Joseph Houston, the progenitor of the family in Orange County.

Their daughter, Jane Elizabeth, died at the age of eighteen. Their only surviving child is David Dill Houston, born Dec. 15, 1833, and who married, Aug. 29, 1861, Catharine M., daughter of John K. Moore. He carries on mercantile and milling business and farming at Middletown.

HON. EDWARD M. MADDEN.

Edward Millspaugh Madden was born near Searsville, in the town of Crawford, Orange Co., N. Y., in the year 1818. His ancestry were Scotch-Irish, Huguenot, and German. Until he was nearly nine years of age he attended the common schools of the neighborhood, these being the only educational advantages that he ever had. When he was about nine years old the family removed to the village of Walden, in the town of Montgomery, where he entered a cotton-mill as an apprentice.

He worked the first year for seventy-five cents a week, boarding himself. Being badly treated by one of his bosses, young Madden ran away in the year 1833. The same day he obtained employment as an apprentice in a tin-shop in the village of Montgomery. He left there in 1839, when about twenty years of age, and bought out a small tin-shop located in a little building then standing in the west end of what is now the Holding House, in the village of Middletown. His cash capital at this time was, all told, just $133, which he had earned by overwork at his trade. In 1842 he entered into partnership with Elisha P. Wheeler, Jonah F. France, and Joseph Lemon, all now deceased. The firm built the foundry now owned by Mr. A. L. Vail. Mr. France died in 1847. Messrs. Wheeler, Madden, & Lemon continued the business until 1851, when Mr. Lemon sold his interest to Wheeler & Madden. In 1853 the firm built the Monhagen Saw-Factory, on King Street, adjoining the foundry, in connection with the late Josiah Bakewell, who had become a member of the firm.

In 1854 the foundry business, in which Mr. Madden was a partner, was sold to Messrs. Joseph Lemon and Silas R. Martine. The saw manufacturing business was continued by the firm previously mentioned until 1860, when Mr. Bakewell left the concern, and Mr. Wm. Clemens was admitted as a partner, and still continues connected with it. The business had grown to such proportions that in 1866 the present extensive works were erected. In 1868, Thomas D. Roberts and Lemuel Wheeler were taken in as members of the firm. Mr. Roberts died in 1872, and Mr. Lemuel Wheeler in 1874. In 1873, Charles I. Humphrey and Wm. Millsbaugh became members of the firm. In 1874 the other partners bought out the interest of Mr. E. P. Wheeler, the senior member. In 1880, Wm. K. Stansbury was admitted into the firm. In 1863 the then firm built a factory and began the manufacture of files, which is still carried on, and known as the Eagle File-Works. Mr. Madden is president of the concern, his nephew, Mr. Isaac P. Madden, and Mr. J. T. Cockayne being the managers.

In the year 1862, immediately after the capture of the Confederate envoys, Mason and Slidell, from a British steamer, apprehending that this would lead to a war with England, and thereby prevent the importation and greatly enhance the price of steel, the firm of Wheeler, Madden, & Clemens began the manufacture of this article, having previously imported all the steel used by them.

In 1877, Mr. Madden, in connection with Mr. James H. Norton and Mr. C. C. Messerre, established the Union Printing Company of New York City, which business still continues, and of which he is the president.

In 1843, Mr. Madden was married to Eudocia M. Robinson, daughter of Rev. Phineas Robinson, a Presbyterian clergyman. Six children were the fruit of this marriage, three of whom are now living,—Charles Carroll, Edward M., Jr., and Ella.

Mr. Madden has always taken a lively interest in political affairs, local as well as State and national. He was originally a Democrat, and his first vote for President was cast for Martin Van Buren. In 1854, on the passage by Congress of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, allowing slavery to be extended over the Western Territories, Mr. Madden, with many other Democrats throughout the country, protested against this action, and in 1855 he aided in the preliminary steps which led to the organization of the Republican party in 1856. He has ever since continued a steadfast and influential member of that party.

In the fall of 1855 there was a bolt in the Democratic Senatorial Convention of this district, growing out of the aggressions of the South and the action of Congress upon the slavery question. The Free-Soil portion of the convention, in Mr. Madden's absence, nominated him for the office of State senator, to which he was elected. Although frequently thereafter urged to become a candidate for office, he refused until 1868, when he accepted a nomination by the Republicans for member of Assembly in the Second District of Orange County, having just previously declined a unanimous nomination for representative in Congress. Although the district is usually carried by a large majority, Mr. Madden came within a half-dozen votes of an election.

In 1871 he was again prevailed upon to take the nomination for State senator, and was elected by a large majority, notwithstanding the district is strongly Democratic. In 1873 he was renominated and elected again. The nomination for the office was again tendered him in 1875 and in 1877, but was declined, as was also a nomination again for member of Congress. In 1879 he accepted a nomination again for the State Senate, and was returned for the fourth time to that body by a large majority.

Mr. Madden has always held it to be the duty of every citizen to attend the primary meetings of the party to which they belong, and he is seldom absent from these meetings. He has been delegated to attend numerous County, Senatorial, State, and National Conventions. There is probably no one within the limits of this county who has oftener been called upon for such representative service. He was a member of the Republican National Convention at Baltimore in 1864 which gave Abraham Lincoln his second nomination. He declined the nomination as a delegate to the National Convention of 1868. In 1876 he was a member of the Republican National Convention at Cincinnati which nominated Rutherford B. Hayes.

Mr. Madden drafted and secured the passage of the bill for the public-school system of Middletown, and for many years was an active member of the school board of that place, until increasing business cares caused him to decline further service in that capacity. Senator Madden was also the author of the bill providing for the construction of the Middletown Water-Works. He was the first and is now the president of the board. He also interested himself in obtaining the charter for the Middletown Savings-Bank, and was instrumental in securing the necessary legislation to set it in operation. While he has been a member of the Senate he has secured much important legislation for the benefit of the New York State Homœopathic Asylum for the Insane at Middletown, and no small degree of the success of that institution is due to the effective aid that he was thus enabled to render it.

Mr. Madden was appointed by the Governor one of the commissioners to locate the Hudson River Asylum for the Insane, which is at Poughkeepsie.

When the project of the Middletown and Crawford Railroad was first broached, connecting, as it proposed, the place of his birth and the place where his active business career had been passed, Mr.

S. S. Wickham

Madden at once took hold of it with his accustomed energy, and, in co-operation with the companion of his boyhood days and life-long friend, Maj. Daniel Thompson, made it a success. The road was constructed much more economically than many similar undertakings. Mr. Madden has been the vice-president of the company since its organization, Mr. Thompson being the president and manager.

Mr. Madden has been so prominently identified with the business and political interests of his county and State that few men within their borders are better known than he.

Although without the advantages of an academic education, in fact with only the few years meagre schooling that he obtained previous to his ninth year in the then indifferent common school that he attended, Mr. Madden, by close application to reading and study during the evenings and the moments that he could snatch from the labors of the work-bench, became a thoroughly well-read man, and few, with all the educational advantages they may have had, have a larger store of practical knowledge at their command. He has seemed to acquire knowledge by intuition. His memory for events and dates is most remarkable.

He is a man of the strictest integrity, who has never been known to go back upon his word, which is proverbially as good as his bond, and has never deserted a friend.

Mr. Madden has now been in active business in Middletown for forty-two years, and has seen the little hamlet of some 500 inhabitants increase to a population of 10,000. He is still actively engaged in business, and is constantly making large additions to his manufactories.

Senator Madden may be considered as a fair and conspicuous type of the "self-made man," having from an humble origin, and against adverse circumstances, arisen to wealth and prominence in the community, solely through industry, pluck, determination, indomitable energy, and a laudable ambition, which demonstrates what may be accomplished by the youth of our land, through the possession and active use of these qualities, under our beneficent, free American institutions.

SAMUEL S. WICKHAM.

The property settled on by Samuel and Israel Wickham and their sister Jerusha, mentioned in the sketch of Col. Israel H. Wickham, comprised about 1000 acres in the Minisink Angle, upon which the village of Middletown is now built.

Samuel was grandfather of our subject, married Mary Irwin, who bore him the following children: Elizabeth, wife of John H. Corwin; Jerusha, wife of Eliad Tryon; and Jesse H. The homestead of Samuel Wickham was where Mrs. Linus B. Babcock now resides.

Upon his decease the homestead property was entailed to his son, Jesse H., upon which he resided during his life, and died Oct. 3, 1841, having been born Feb. 28, 1786.

He took down the log house in which his father lived, and kept the hospitable inn of "olden time" about 1829, and where the forefathers of the present generation used to gather and exchange wit, indulge in story-telling, and narrate the incidents of pioneer life.

Jesse H. Wickham married Laura, daughter of Samuel Benedict, of Middletown, who died Aug. 31, 1823, aged thirty years, leaving the following children: Temperance Ann, Harriet Maria, wife of Isaac Van Duzer, Samuel S., and Henry Lewis, who died young.

His second wife was Frances Ludlum, who died in 1857, and bore him the following children: Theodore, George, and Israel.

Jesse H. Wickham was one of the founders of many of the early institutions in Middletown, spent his life in a quiet way as a farmer, and was esteemed throughout his business life for his integrity in his dealings with his fellow-men. He was a man of correct habits and sterling principles.

Samuel S., son of Jesse H. Wickham, was born on the homestead Aug. 20, 1821, spent his boyhood at home, and was twenty years old when his father died. He was one of the pupils who attended school the first term of the opening of the Wallkill Academy.

At the age of twenty-two he started out in life for himself, and for three years was a clerk in a dry-goods and crockery-store in Middletown.

In the spring of 1846 he rented a stone-quarry in Sullivan County, which he was successfully carrying on when, in the fall of that year, he purchased the interest of Charles Dill in the tannery of Houston & Dill, at Middletown, and, in partnership with Robert H. Houston, carried on the business until 1851, when he purchased Mr. Houston's interest, and, with the exception of two years, carried it on alone until 1855, when he sold out to Stephens & Hulse.

During that year, with Joseph Lemon, he purchased 1900 acres of woodland in Sullivan County, upon which were three saw-mills.

In 1858, having paid for their land in lumber, and having a large quantity on hand, they disposed of their land, dissolved partnership, and Mr. Wickham established a lumber-yard on Canal Street, in Middletown, where he was engaged in the lumber, feed, and coal business until 1866, and sold out to Eaton & Russell.

The same year, with Eaton & Russell, he purchased the property he now occupies, and in 1869 became the sole owner of it. Here since 1866 he has been successfully engaged in the lumber, coal, and feed business. He erected in 1870 his present commodious store-house and lumber-sheds, and in 1877 he erected a grist-mill on the property, in which latter interest he has associated with him in business Joseph F. Terhune.

For nearly forty years Mr. Wickham has been closely identified with the active business interests of the village, and among the first to encourage, promote, and push forward every worthy local enterprise tending to the thrift and prosperity of Middletown, or in any way to advance the educational interests of its rising generation.

His ancestors were among the founders of the early institutions now enjoyed by the people. Mr. Wickham retains the family characteristic of progress, and by his frank, sociable, and unostentatious ways holds the confidence of his fellow-citizens.

His first wife was Ellen Adelia, daughter of Frederick Dolson, of Wawayanda, who died in 1868, leaving children,—Cecilia S., Oscar, Almeda D., Samuel S., and Laura B.

His present wife, whom he married in 1870, is Marilla, daughter of Madison Raplee, of Yates County, N. Y., by whom he has one child, Willis R.

WICKHAM C. McNISH.

Wickham C. McNish is a descendant in the fifth generation from Rev. George McNish, a native of Scotland, who came to America in 1705 upon the solicitation of Rev. Francis Makemie, who was afterwards styled the father of Presbyterianism in America. There also came with Revs. McNish and Makemie Rev. John Hampton.

Rev. George McNish was licensed to preach here by Governor Seymour, of Maryland, in 1706. He was one of the original members of the Philadelphia Presbytery, the first formed in America, and upon the first vacancy in the pulpit after the formation of the Philadelphia Presbytery, he was called in 1710 by the wardens and vestrymen of the Presbyterian Church at Jamaica, Long Island, and began to preach there in 1711, and is called the father of the Presbyterian Church on Long Island,—the first Presbytery in the province of New York. He was a man of much Christian zeal, and having inherited a spirit of freedom of worship in his native country, which his forefathers spilt their blood to achieve, he was well prepared to, and did meet with determined resistance, the aggressions of the devotees of the English Church on the island, who finally succeeded in taking from them their church property. After this he preached to his congregation in private places. He owned 1000 acres of land in the town of Wallkill, Orange Co., which, after his death, became the property of his only child, Rev. George McNish. He died March 10, 1722. His son, Rev. George McNish, married a daughter of Joseph Smith, of Jamaica, and settled in New Jersey, preaching at Newtown (now Newton) between 1744 and 1746. He subsequently preached at Goshen, spent his life in the ministry, and died in Wallkill in 1779, aged sixty-five. His children were Andrew Clark; George, who served in the Revolutionary war, and fortunately escaped from Fort Montgomery when taken by the British; Peggy; and Polly, wife of George Conkling, of Goshen.

Andrew Clark McNish, born Aug. 17, 1752, died Feb. 12, 1805. His wife was Elizabeth Davis, of Long Island, who was born in 1752, and died Feb. 22, 1797, leaving eight children,—Joshua, born Sept. 1, 1779, was stationed on Staten Island, and served for fifteen months there in the war of 1812; Polly, born in 1781; Phebe, born in 1783, died at the age of eleven years; Joanna, born Sept. 21, 1785, wife of Robert Kirk; Sarah, born Aug. 12, 1782, wife of David Everett, father of Dr. Everett, of Middletown; Henry, born April 5, 1791, is residing in the town of Mount Hope, in 1881, and served with his brother in the war of 1812, under Col. Faulkner; Andrew, born March 26, 1793; and Spicer, born April 24, 1795, resided in Sullivan County, where he was accidentally killed by a falling tree.

Andrew was a carpenter by trade, and built the Clove Church in Wantage, N. J. He was subsequently a farmer there, where he spent the remainder of his life. Henry was a blacksmith.

Andrew Clark McNish owned 100 acres of land within what is now the corporation of Middletown, on the road leading from Bloomingburgh to Mechanicstown, upon which he erected a log house and log barn. Here he resided until his death. Upon the death of the parents, when the children were all young, they were put out among their friends. The eldest, Joshua, succeeded to the homestead, and gave, as requested in his father's will, his brothers and sisters $75 each, and a trade, if they chose to learn one. Joshua was father of our subject, and resided upon the homestead during his life. Subsequent to his marriage he built a house on another part of the homestead, which was destroyed by fire in 1855, and the same year the present substantial residence was built by his son, Wickham C., who purchased the property of his brother, Andrew C., in 1854, and retained possession of it until 1860, when he sold it to his brother-in-law, James B. Crawford, who now resides upon it. His wife, Mary M., born June 4, 1789, was a daughter of Deacon James Reeve, one of the founders and first deacons of the Congregational Church at Middletown, and who settled in Wawayanda from Long Island, about two miles from Middletown, on the farm now owned by his grandson, Wickham C. Reeve. They were married March 19, 1814, and she died Dec. 18, 1863, having survived her husband since Oct. 6, 1829. After her husband's death she managed the homestead farm with superior judgment and ability, and reared her children with all the care and devotion of a Christian mother until her death. Both Joshua McNish and wife were active members of the Congregational Church at Middletown, and promoters of all worthy objects in the vicinity. Their children are Andrew C., born Nov. 28, 1816, died at the age of thirty-seven; George, born Dec. 25, 1819, died at the age of twenty-one; Elizabeth, born Jan. 17, 1820; Wickham C., born Aug. 25, 1823.

W. C. McKish

Wickham C. McNish received his early education at the district school and in the Wallkill Academy, and at the age of sixteen engaged in teaching, which he continued for six terms, alternating with labor on the home farm during the summer seasons. About this time emigration to the gold-fields of California was rapidly going on, and Mr. McNish, desirous of traveling, and also of testing the truth of the fabulous reports that came from the Pacific coast, accordingly in the spring of 1850 set out for San Francisco, which he reached via the isthmus after a tedious journey of some three months. Having formed the acquaintance of James B. Roberts, of Philadelphia, on his way there, after a short time as clerk in a boot and shoe store, with that gentleman he established himself in the jobbing and wholesale boot and shoe trade, which rapidly increased with the then growing demands of the new country. Leaving his partner in charge of the business there, Mr. McNish, in 1853, came East, and remained the resident partner here, purchasing goods in Boston and New York for their trade in San Francisco. These successful business relations continued until 1869, when they sold out their business.

In 1865 a stock company was formed in Boston, styled "The Phoenix Oil and Land Company," in which Mr. McNish held a controlling interest, and became the manager of their oil and real estate interests at Titusville, Pa., until 1873, when the company disposed of their business. Since this time he has continued his operations in tanking and producing oil in the various oil-fields of Pennsylvania.

During his active business career, Mr. McNish, whether a resident of San Francisco, Boston, or among his immediate friends at Middletown, has never lost sight of the early impressions of his boyhood, and wherever he has been located he has been numbered among the promoters of morality, good society, and religious instruction. For nearly his whole life he has been identified with the Congregational Church at Middletown as a member, and officially, and a liberal contributor to its interests, and while a resident at San Francisco he became one of the founders of the First Congregational Church of that city, and was one of the charter members to lay the corner-stone of that church. Mr. McNish was one of the incorporators of the Wallkill Bank, and was one of its directors from its organization until his return to California in 1860, when he disposed of his interest in that institution.

He married in January, 1857, Marietta, daughter of William W. Reeve, Esq., and Jane Ayres, of Middletown. They have an only child, Mary Jane McNish. Mrs. McNish's father was widely known throughout Orange County as a surveyor, was justice of the peace at Middletown for sixteen years, supervisor of the town of Wallkill for several years, and represented his district in the State Legislature in 1856.

ALBERT BULL.

Albert Bull is the sixth in line of descent from William Bull, born in England in February, 1689, came to America, sailing from Ireland, where he had spent his minority, about 1715. He was a mason by trade, and in 1716 did the mason-work for a stone house, known as the "Old Graycourt House," in Chester, for Daniel Cromeline, who had an interest in the Wawayanda Patent.

In 1718 he married Sarah Wells, the first white woman who set foot upon the soil of the town of Goshen, born April 6, 1694, and who died April 21, 1796. He died in February, 1755. In 1868 an appropriate monument was erected over the remains of William Bull and Sarah Wells, near the Hamptonburgh church, by their lineal descendants.

To this venerable couple were born twelve children, of whom two sons, Thomas and William, were settled by their father on 500 acres of land lying partly in each of the towns of Goshen and Wallkill, divided by the Wallkill River.

William settled on the west side of the river, and the homestead is still in possession of his descendants.

His son Moses, born June 20, 1753, occupied the homestead during his life, and died Dec. 23, 1844. His only son, Moses Bull, Jr., born June 19, 1773, was grandfather of our subject, and resided at Scotchtown, in the town of Wallkill, on the farm now occupied by Harvey Roe, where he died May 16, 1848.

His wife, Dolly Moore, whom he married July 28, 1795, was born June 17, 1771, and died May 14, 1855.

Moses Bull, Jr., joined the church in 1815, was a devoted Christian man, and from the time of his marriage until death kept up the family altar. His wife was a member of the Presbyterian Church from girlhood, and reared her large family of children under Christian influences.

Their children were Sophia, wife of Thomas Bell, of Geneva, N. Y.; Arietta, wife of John Patterson, of New York; Elijah and Elisha (twins); Rev. Ralph Bull, for twenty-seven years a Presbyterian clergyman at Westtown, Orange Co.; Marianne, widow of the late Daniel Cousins, of Middletown; Caroline and Catherine (twins); the former, first the wife of Andrew McWilliams, and after his death the wife of Harvey McMonagle, of Wallkill; Mehetabel, wife of Moses McMonagle, of Wallkill, now occupying the old homestead; Rhoda, wife of Hezekiah Conner, of Wallkill; Emma, wife of Charles B. Conner, of Wallkill; and Julia, wife of Harvey J. H. McWilliams. Of these children, Elisha was father of Albert Bull, was born Jan. 16, 1801, in Wallkill, and died June 22, 1870, in Missouri, while there visiting his son. He spent his active business life as a farmer in the town of Warwick, where he settled soon after his first marriage, and was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Amity.

He married, March 4, 1828, Harriet, daughter of Walter and Abigail (Corwin) Everett, of Wallkill, and sister of the wife of Dr. Harvey Everett, of Middletown. She was born in 1806, and died Sept. 3, 1836, leaving children,—Albert, Walter, and Harriet, wife of Henry Howe, of Warwick. His second wife was Sarah Dusenberre, who bore him the following children: Sidney, Harrison, Charles, Henry, and John P. After the death of his second wife he married Mary Nichols, of which union there was no issue.

Albert Bull was born in Wallkill, April 16, 1829, and spent his minority in the routine of farm work and at school. For two years after reaching his majority he resided in the western part of the State, and for one year following at Chester, Orange Co.

In the spring of 1853 he settled in Middletown, and became the partner of Dr. Harvey Everett in the drug business, whose place is located on Franklin Square, where he has continued a successful trade since. Mr. Bull erected the fine brick building, "Bull's Opera-House," on Main Street, in 1870, capable of seating 800 persons, and since his residence in Middletown he has ranked among the enterprising, thorough-going, and substantial business men of the place.

He married, June 20, 1867, Ella B., daughter of Leander and Nancy (Barkley) Crawford, who was born in January, 1845. Their children are Anna M., Frank, and Irving.

ELISHA PEARL WHEELER.

Elisha Pearl Wheeler, grandson of John, and son of Lemuel and Hannah (Pearl) Wheeler, was born at Hampton, Windham Co., Conn., Feb. 5, 1807.

His father, Lemuel, born at Pomfret, Conn., April 20, 1782, was a carpenter and builder by trade, and for a time was a merchant in Springfield, Mass. He resided at Red Hook, Dutchess Co., N. Y., for a few years, and subsequently took up his residence in Saugerties, Ulster Co., N. Y., for the purpose of superintending the construction of the aqueduct and water-wheels at the iron-works there, where he died April 16, 1839.

By his first wife, Hannah, daughter of Philip Pearl, and sister of Hon. Philip Pearl, who was born Aug. 14, 1785, whom he married Jan. 25, 1806, he had two children,—Elisha P., and Emeline (wife of Charles Sanford), who died in Newburgh.

By his second wife, Orinda Goodell, he had children,—Lydia Angelina (widow of James G. Swezey), and Cordelia Wheeler, of Middletown.

Elisha P. Wheeler received his education at the district school and at Red Hook Academy, which was thorough as far as it went. He had a good command of language, wrote well and to the point, and was a very accurate accountant.

At Saugerties he was engaged for a few years in a rolling-mill and furnace located there.

At the age of twenty-three he went into the employ of Charles Sanford, who married his sister, and was in the stove and tin business at Rhinebeck. He remained in the employ of his brother-in-law in the same business at Rhinebeck and Catskill until 1830, when they came to Orange County, as partners in the same business at Montgomery. The firm was Sanford & Wheeler. For a while Mr. Wheeler managed a branch store at Walden, which was afterwards removed to Newburgh. They remained in business together—Mr. Wheeler at Montgomery, and Mr. Sanford at Newburgh—until the latter died, in 1832.

He then went into partnership with Jonah F. France, in the stove and tin business. In 1839 they took into the firm Joseph Lemon and Abner Madden, and built a furnace. The firm of Wheeler, France & Co. was engaged in the business of making castings, stoves, etc., and in the tin trade, until 1842, when they sold out. Mr. Wheeler first came to Middletown in the spring of 1843. He commenced in business here with Jonah F. France, Edward M. Madden, and Joseph Lemon. The new firm started in the spring of 1843, under the firm-name of Wheeler, France & Co., in the tin and foundry business, with a store on North Street. The foundry business gave Mr. Wheeler his first favored start in Middletown. He was connected with it as a part owner until 1854, when he sold out, and it was in other hands until 1863, when he became its sole owner.

After 1853 he was connected with many of the principal manufacturing enterprises which have given Middletown its chief growth and prominence. In the year mentioned the Monhagen Saw-Works were started, of which he was one of the three original owners. The firm was first Wheeler, Madden & Bakewell, and afterwards, in 1860, Wheeler, Madden & Clemson. The factory was one of the first in the country, and it is now one of the largest. Its business increased so that in 1862 the firm started the Monhagen Steel-Works and Rolling-Mills, under the firm-name of E. M. Madden & Co., for the manufacture of their own steel. In 1863 the firm became largely interested in the Eagle File-Works. The firm-name was Wheeler, Clemson & Co. In 1866-67 Wheeler, Madden & Clemson, with others, started the Middletown Forged Horse-Nail Works. A few years ago the firm became a stock company, under the incorporated title of The Wheeler, Madden & Clemson Manufacturing Company, and Mr. Wheeler was its president.

In 1866, Mr. Wheeler began to make connections with new railroad enterprises, which promised to be beneficial to Middletown, and not unprofitable to those who should engage in them.

He was made a director of the Middletown and Unionville Railroad on its organization, and was its president till 1875. He broke ground for that enterprise, throwing the first shovelful of dirt Oct. 8, 1866. He was among the earliest of those who were enlisted in the Midland Railroad enterprise, and drove the last spike at its completion. Unfortunately, he was among the most severely punished of its victims. He was an original director and the first vice-president of the New York and Oswego Midland from 1868 until 1872. He was a director of the New Jersey Midland from its organization in 1870 till 1874. He was also an original director of the Middletown and Crawford Railroad in 1870.

He was from the first a director of the M. U. & W. G. Telegraph Company, also of the Middletown and Wurtsboro' Turnpike Company. He was also director of its predecessor, the Middletown and Bloomingburgh Plank-Road Company, and of the Middletown and Unionville Plank-Road Company.

He was a trustee of the Middletown Gas-Light Company and of the Orange County Milk Association. He was one of the originators and first life members of the Middletown Lyceum. He was a director of the Middletown Bank from 1850 to 1857. He was one of the originators of the Wallkill Bank, and its first president for a few years, and a director until it closed. He was a member of the board of trustees in the year 1868, and was a member of the board of education for every year except one since 1867, and was its first president.

He was largely influential in getting the New York State Homœopathic Insane Asylum located at Middletown. He gave $2000 towards it, and was one of the trustees from the first until, by act of the Legislature in 1875, reducing the membership of the board, he was legislated out of office; but his interest in the work suffered no abatement, his retirement being gladly accepted by him as a relief from one of his multiplied business and trust engagements.

He was one of the originators of Grace Episcopal Church, and was one of its chief supporters. He built both transepts entirely at his own expense. He was a warden from the first to his death. Mr. Wheeler, E. M. Madden, and William M. Graham erected, in 1852, Gothic Hall, which the Press now occupies. It was then the first hall for public assemblages, except the churches, in all Middletown. Mr. Wheeler was one of ten citizens who assisted Mr. John W. Hasbrouck to establish the Whig Press, which was the predecessor of the Orange County Press and Middletown Daily Press.

He became an Odd-Fellow at Newburgh while living at Montgomery, and a Mason shortly after the reorganization of Hoffman Lodge, No. 412, F. A. M. He was a member also of Midland Chapter, No. 240, R. A. M., of Middletown.

Although Mr. Wheeler was never a seeker for political preferment, he nevertheless took an active interest in the political questions of the day. He was many times solicited to accept nominations to office, but declined. Originally a Whig, he was influential in promoting the success of that party while it existed. When the continued oppressions of the slave power called into being the Republican party, he was among the first to enter into that organization, and was zealous in its support, participating actively and prominently in several campaigns. In 1872 he acted with the Liberal Republicans and was on the Greeley electoral ticket. Since then he generally acted with the Republicans.

Mr. Wheeler was married in Montgomery, in 1834, to Miss Phebe Sears, of that place, who was a most devoted wife. She was born Oct. 13, 1813, and died Dec. 3, 1878. Four children were born to them,—Emeline, wife of Henry S. Moshier; James, a lawyer (formerly in practice in Brooklyn, now in San Francisco, Cal.); Hannah (wife of Charles H. Horton); and Lemuel, who died in 1873. His mother died when he was three years old.

As trustee, guardian, and executor of the estates of deceased persons, probably more trusts were confided to him than to any other man in Middletown, and every trust was discharged with the utmost fidelity.

The last few years of his life were clouded by anxieties and troubles, brought upon him by the acts of those in whom he trusted.

He was also subjected to severe trials in the loss of his property, which was the result of his connection with the Midland Railroad and the Nes Silicon Steel Company. These he bore manfully, and the transfer of his property was made with an honesty that in these times is as uncommon as it is remarkable.

Mr. Wheeler was a man of simple, correct habits, frugal ways of living, unostentatious manners, and lived a pure life. In him the poor of Middletown had a friend, generous and liberal to a fault.

OLIVER P. REEVE.

His grandfather, Deacon James Reeve, came from Long Island about 1763, and settled on a farm in Wawayanda, between Middletown and New Hampton, where he resided the remainder of his life. The property is owned in 1881 by his grandson, Wickham C. Reeve, and has been in possession of the family since its first settlement by Deacon James Reeve.

Oliver P. Reeve

Deacon James Reeve was one of the principal men who united in building the First Congregational church at Middletown, which occupied the site of the present Congregational church. His first wife, Hephzibah Moore, bore him three children,—James, who served as a soldier at the battle of Minisink in 1779; Hephzibah, married a Mr. Hulse; and Mary, a Mr. Canfield. By his second wife, Mary Corwin, he had the following children: David; Daniel; Joshua, settled in Michigan; Elijah, died a young man; Isaac, resided on the old homestead; Anna, married a Mr. Keene, and resided at the Beach Woods, Pa.; Deborah, married a Mr. Shultz, of Orange County; Keturah, married Stewart Brown, and resided in Ohio; Lydia, married a Mr. Moore, of Orange County; Mary A., married Joshua McNish, of Wallkill, a descendant of Rev. George McNish, of Long Island, who was one of the original members of the first Presbytery in America, and father of the first Presbytery in the province of New York; Jerusha, married a Mr. Burns, of Beach Woods, Pa.; Dorothy, married Benjamin Hulse, of Orange County; Sarah; and Julia, married a Mr. Tidd, of Sullivan County, N. Y., and after his death a Mr. Drake. She was the last surviving one of this family of eighteen children, died at the age of eighty-seven, and was buried on New-Year's Day, 1881, at Bloomingburgh, N. Y.

Of these children, David was father of our subject, was born in 1771, and died in 1848. He followed agricultural pursuits during his life, and owned a farm in the town of Wallkill, within a couple of miles of Middletown. He was a quiet, unostentatious man, and sought to fulfill the full duty of a citizen, was active as a member of the Congregational Church at Middletown, and a promoter of the benevolent objects of his time. His wife, Esther, daughter of William Wickham, whom he married in 1797, was born in 1780, was a devoted Christian woman, a member of the Congregational Church, and died in 1837. Their children are Mary, wife of George V. Mapes, of Orange County; Rosetta, wife of Sylvester Cooper, of Mattituck, L. I.; William W., for many years supervisor and justice of the peace at Middletown, and widely known throughout the county as a surveyor; James, settled in Tompkins County; Hosea, of Jackson County, Mich.; Arminda, widow of Dr. Hedges, of Chester, N. J.; Fanny Jane, died at the age of ten years; Louisa, widow of the late B. W. Shaw, of Middletown; David Rose, died in Orange County; Benjamin Franklin, died in Philadelphia; Oliver P.; and Harriet, wife of Rev. L. I. Stoughtenburgh, of Morris County, N. J.

Oliver P., son of David Reeve, was born on the homestead, in the town of Wallkill, March 10, 1822. His early book knowledge was received at the district school and select school at Ridgebury, and prior to reaching his majority he was a teacher in the common schools in the vicinity of his birth for some three years. Upon the death of his father he succeeded, by purchase of the other heirs, to the homestead farm of 156 acres, which he carried on for nine years, and then disposed of it.

In 1859 he engaged in mercantile business at Bullville, Orange Co., and in connection with this business was largely engaged in forwarding produce via Newburgh to New York. He carried on this business successfully for five years, disposed of his stock of goods, and in 1864 settled in Middletown, where he engaged in building tenement houses for some five years, and in improving real estate which he purchased.

In the spring of 1879 he opened an insurance office on Franklin Square, representing several wealthy and substantial companies, where he has since continued to do business, having for his partner the late H. L. Shaw, who died May 20, 1881.

A. W. Shaw

Mr. Reeve has spent a life almost wholly devoted to business pursuits, yet amidst its activity he has ever been interested in the various enterprises of a local nature about him, and a promoter of morality and religious interests in society. For forty years he has been connected with the Congregational Church at Middletown, was one of the building committee in the erection of the present church edifice, and is at the present time one of its board of trustees and treasurer. He has also officiated as trustee of the village for two terms, and assessor for one term. He married, in 1852, Charlotte, daughter of David G. Redfield, who died four years after her marriage, leaving no issue. His present wife is Esther E., daughter of John Shorter, of Crawford, whom he married in 1858, and by whom he has one son, Theodore Lincoln.

BENJAMIN WOODFORD SHAW.

The Shaw family are of Scotch-Irish extraction, having removed at an early period from Scotland to the north of Ireland, from whence a branch emigrated to America about 1750. Among this number was William, who chose a residence in Orange County, purchasing land in Mount Hope township, which is still in possession of the family. On this wilderness tract of land he first resided in a log house, but afterwards built a frame house, which forms a part of the residence now on the farm. He married Mary Waldron, of New York, who bore him the following children: John, Dr. Robert, Samuel, Henry, Alexander, William, James, Charles, Elizabeth, and Mary.

The death of William Shaw occurred in 1822. The simplicity, integrity, and purity which governed his life are best illustrated by embodying in this sketch the following letter left by him on his death:

"This to be read to my children when I am laid in the grave. My dear children, as God in his mercy has given you all the natural faculties and powers that are natural to man, I hope you will daily return thanks for the same, and that you will make the Scriptures your rule of life, and seek and serve God in the way and manner that he will approve and bless.

"As your mother has nursed you with the greatest tenderness, endeavor to give her a suitable return by honoring her person and receiving her counsels and providing for her wants while God continues her in time. I hope you will love and cherish one another, not taking the least advantage, and if misfortune should befall any of you I hope the rest will not only with your counsel, but with your property, assist your unfortunate brother or sister. Be just in all your dealings with mankind; be content with your own, be it little or much, for it is not the quantity that makes men happy, but being content with your condition.

"Signed with my hand this third day of June, one thousand eight hundred and six.

WILLIAM SHAW "

William, the sixth son of William and Mary Shaw, father of our subject, was born Dec. 27, 1782, and died March 25, 1855. His wife was Rachel Schoonoven, who was born Dec. 19, 1792, and died Dec. 18, 1876. Their children were Aaron, a lawyer, judge of the Supreme Court, and member of Congress, of Olney, Ill.; Howard, United States gauger, and farmer on a part of the old homestead; Benjamin Woodward; Mary Waldron, wife of John Myer, of New York, and after his death became the wife of Edward Clapp, of New York, who is now deceased; Catherine Westbrook, wife of William Howell, of Middletown; Peggy, wife of Benjamin Beyea; Alexander McMaken; and Susan Elizabeth, wife of David Robertson, of Shawangunk, Ulster Co., N. Y.

This family of children were reared on the old homestead, where the parents spent their lives, and did well their part as good citizens in promoting all local enterprises tending to benefit society.

Benjamin Woodward, son of William and Rachel Shaw, was born Feb. 3, 1817, on the homestead in Mount Hope, on the road between Van Burenville and New Vernon. He spent his boyhood on the farm of his father, attending district school in winter, and showing unusual ability as a mathematician. He also paid some attention to surveying, but chose for his life occupation the mercantile business. At the age of seventeen he came to Middletown as clerk for Samuel Denton, then the leading merchant here. On Sept. 26, 1839, he married Louisa, daughter of David Reeve, and granddaughter of Deacon James Reeve, who came from Long Island about 1763, and settled on a farm in Wawayanda, where he resided the remainder of his life. She was born Oct. 3, 1814, and survives her husband, who died March 29, 1881.

In 1841 Mr. Shaw formed a partnership with Daniel Gerow, under the firm-name of Shaw & Gerow, and engaged in business on his account. This partnership lasted one year. He was then associated with Col. Herman B. Young and John B. Hanford. After the first year Col. Young retired from the firm, and for fifteen years Mr. Shaw and Mr. Hanford continued the business under the firm-name of Shaw & Hanford. Mr. Hanford's health failing, he retired from business. A new partnership was then formed with Charles Stewart and William M. McQuoid. After a few years, Mr. Stewart retired from the firm and went West, and the firm became Shaw & McQuoid, and continued until 1869, when Mr. Shaw's son, Hanford L., entered the firm, the name being changed to Shaws & McQuoid. When Mr. McQuoid's health failed and necessitated his retirement from active business, the firm became B. W. Shaw & Son. Mr. Hanford L. Shaw's health compelled his retirement from business, and on the first of February, 1877, Mr. Shaw associated with himself his two head clerks, Charles C. Luckey and James B. Carson, and the firm became B. W. Shaw & Co., so continuing until the present time.

The firm of Shaw & Gerow did business on the south side of Main Street, and on its dissolution Mr. Shaw removed across the street, taking possession of the store that he has ever since occupied.

Although closely absorbed in his private business, Mr. Shaw found time to devote to the public interests. He was a trustee of the village under its present charter. For nine years he was trustee of the Presbyterian Church. He was a director of the Wallkill Bank from its organization to the time of its failure. He was president of the Middletown and Wurtsboro Plank-Road Company from the time of its reorganization. He was also a trustee of the Middletown Savings-Bank. Although an earnest Republican, he never took much interest in politics, and when nominated for supervisor by his party a few years ago, refused to run.

Mr. Shaw was during the whole of his life deeply absorbed in business, yet he was always willing to lend a listening ear and a helping hand to any project looking to the welfare of the village. He was a thoroughly honest and upright man, and much of his success was due to the confidence that the purchasing public had in the excellence of his goods and the truth of the representations made by himself and his employes. He had a very wide acquaintance not only in the village, but in the country round about, and all his acquaintances soon grew to be friends.

Although not a communicant of any church, he was a regular attendant at the services of the First Presbyterian Church, and contributed liberally of his means towards building the present church edifice. His children are Esther W., wife of Irving D. Booth, a wholesale hardware merchant of Elmira; Pauline D., wife of T. N. Little, of Middletown; Hanford L., of the real estate and insurance firm of Reeve & Shaw, died May 20, 1881; and Miss Netta L. Shaw.

HORTON VAIL.

Josiah, Samuel, and Benjamin Vail, three brothers, were among the early settlers of Orange County, and the name appears in connection with papers and titles of land in the old town of Goshen.

Samuel married Hannah Petty, who bore him children,—Gilbert, Michael, Phebe, Experience, and Hannah.

Gilbert married Hannah Arnot, who bore him the following children: Julia, Samuel, Joseph, Sally, Phebe, Esther, Hannah, and Polly. Of these, Samuel, the grandfather of our subject, resided in the west division of the town of Goshen, where he carried on farming, and also his trade as a cloth-dresser and fuller. By his wife, Hannah Dunning, he had the following children: Deborah, Gilbert, Samuel, James, John, Anson, Phebe, Jacob, Julia, William, Hannah, and Horace. Both Samuel Vail and his wife were buried in the cemetery at Goshen.

The first Gilbert mentioned in this sketch was among the ever memorable brave and worthy patriots who fought Col. Brant, "Monster Brant," as he was styled, and his 300 warriors and 200 painted Tories, at the battle of Minisink, in 1779, and whose name appears on the monument at Goshen, donated by the late Dr. Merritt H. Cash.

Samuel, second son of Samuel and Hannah Vail, was born Sept. 23, 1787, and died April 5, 1855. His minority was spent in his native town, Goshen, mostly in the family of Joseph Wood. Upon reaching his majority he learned the trade of wool carding and fulling cloth, which business, during the early part of his active business career, he followed on his own account, and, in connection with farming, was his main life business. He was a resident successively of Minisink (Gardenerville), Warwick, and Pochuck, now Glenwood, in the township of Vernon, Sussex Co., N. J., until about 1834, when he removed again into the town of Warwick, and settled near Amity, where he resided until his death.

He had a studious and thoughtful disposition, possessed a good business education, and his account-books showed the work of a neat and thorough accountant. He was liberal of his means to any cause that had for its object the elevation and amelioration of society. His love for home and family was intense, and his eyes always kindled with pride when mention was made of his ten boys in his presence. Never an open professor of religion, yet Samuel Vail was a God-fearing man, a thorough student of the Bible, and assisted liberally Christian churches and kindred objects. It was a common saying of him, "If all men were as truthful and honest as 'Uncle Sammy Vail' there would be little need for lawyers, judges, and jurymen."

His wife, Sally, born April 5, 1794, and who died Nov. 7, 1845, was a daughter of Reuben Cash and Millicent Howell, of Minisink, and sister of the late Dr. Merritt H. Cash, well known as a prominent physician in Orange County, who died April 26, 1861, aged about sixty years.

The children of Samuel and Sally (Cash) Vail are: Festus H., was a farmer near Great Bend, and there died; Reuben C., was a farmer at New Milford, Pa., where he died; Samuel, is a farmer at the latter place; Charles M.; James Lewis, is connected with the Newark Morning Register; Dr. M. H. C. Vail, graduated at the Castleton Medical College, Vermont, practiced medicine for some twenty-five years, served one term in the New Jersey Legislature, and is now the editor and proprietor of the Newark Morning Register; George, resides at New Milford, Pa.; Horton; Solomon Van Rensselaer, deceased; and John M., a farmer at Havana, N. Y.

Horton Vail was born June 27, 1834, spent his minority in the routine of farm work and attending school, and for three years after reaching his majority was a teacher. On Oct. 8, 1858, he married Sarah France, daughter of John S. and Hannah M. (France) Redfield, of Goshen. They have an only child, Nellie Vail.

For seven years following his marriage he owned and carried on a farm in the town of Goshen. In 1865 he removed to Middletown, where he engaged in the book and stationery business, which he successfully carried on for eight years, and disposed of his business.

Upon settling in Middletown, Mr. Vail at once identified himself with the best interests of the village, and since his residence here he has been a promoter of church and school interests, and an advocate of all progressive measures tending to morality, good society, and the general welfare of the people. Mr. Vail is possessed of a naturally literary taste, and as a casual correspondent of the local newspapers of Orange County, and especially of the Middletown papers, in which many valuable productions from his pen may be found, his contributions are trenchant, studied, and interesting, and show a studious mind, ratiating, and research. Mr. Vail is conversant with the current important topics of the times, a man of practical ideas, considerate in his opinions, and frank in his ways. Both as a trustee of the Second Presbyterian Church, of which he and his wife are members, and as the assessor of the village for the past two years, he retains the confidence of the people.

Cleaves,

Mr. Vail is the only representative left in Orange County of the large family of ten sons of Samuel Vail, all of whom grew to manhood, and all were married and reared families except George.

GEN. CALVIN G. SAWYER.

His father, Benjamin Sawyer, resided near Carpenter's Point, on the Delaware, and for many years kept the hospitable inn of "olden time," and conveyed the guests of his house and the traveling public across the river by means of his ferry. He afterwards removed to the town of Goshen, near the "Drowned Lands," where he purchased a farm, now in possession of one of his sons, Franklin, and there spent the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits. His wife was a Miss Wood, who bore him the following sons: John, Moses, Gen. Calvin G., and Franklin.

Gen. Calvin G. Sawyer was born on the homestead at Carpenter's Point, March 12, 1796, and there spent his minority, and often with his brothers was engaged in running the ferry across the Delaware. He married Hannah Valentine, who bore him seven children: John; Rev. Samuel Sawyer, a Presbyterian clergyman of Marion, Ind.; Mary E., wife of Alonzo Banks, of Pine Valley, Chemung Co., N. Y.; Hannah V., widow of De Witt C. Payne, formerly of Goshen, but now residing at Battle Creek, Mich.; Harriet; Gabriel, of Clarence, Iowa; and Caroline.

His second wife was Harriet, daughter of Judge Armstrong, of the town of Warwick, near Florida, but at the time of his marriage a widow Smith. The children born of this union are Alida, wife of Joel H. Coleman, of Blooming-Grove, and Calvin J., a lawyer, of Clinton, Tenn.

His third wife, whom he married Dec. 25, 1844, was Harriet W., widow of James M. Cash, brother of Dr. Merritt H. Cash, and daughter of Maj. John White and Effa Brown, of Wallkill. She was born Aug. 18, 1815, and died May 7, 1861, leaving no issue.

Maj. White was born Dec. 22, 1768, was son of Samuel White, a farmer, near Montgomery, but who afterwards settled at Scotchtown, where Maj. White became one of the founders of the Presbyterian Church, and was one of its first elders. He died Sept. 11, 1839. Maj. White's wife was Effa Brown, born Dec. 1, 1775, married March 15, 1792, and who died May 2, 1847, leaving eleven children.

Gen. Sawyer married for his fourth wife, Aug. 31, 1863, Miss Effa Ann, a sister of his third wife, who was born Oct. 15, 1809, survives in 1881, and causes the portrait of her husband to be placed in the history of Orange County, accompanying this sketch.

Gen. Sawyer first resided near Goshen, where Dominie Staats now resides, and on the farm afterwards owned by Garret Thew. Retiring from the more active duties of life, he removed to Middletown, remained one year, thence to Hamptonburgh, where he resided nine years, and returned to Middletown, where he resided sixteen years, and until his decease, which occurred April 2, 1874. He was a man of decided convictions, good business ability, and sterling integrity. He was well informed upon the current topics of his day, and always interested in local and national legislation, although no seeker after place himself. He received his military title from his connection with the old State militia, and was familiarly known among the prominent men of the last generation in Orange County as sociable, frank, and always generous and courteous.

CAPT. THOMAS E. HULSE.

Capt. Thomas E. Hulse, now residing near Middletown, is one of the oldest living native citizens of Orange County. His birth occurred Sept. 16, 1796, only thirteen years after the treaty of peace was signed that made the American republic free and independent, and he has lived through nearly every administration of a government that has increased from a few millions to fifty millions of people.

The progenitor of his family in Orange County was Thomas Hulse, who came from England, was a soldier in the struggle of the colonies for independence, and after its close settled in the town of Wallkill, on a farm near where the asylum now stands. He died at about the age of eighty years, leaving the following children: Martin, Phineas, Edward, Oliver, Thomas, Susan, wife of James Mapes; Julia, wife of Mr. Woodruff; and Abigail, wife of Daniel Cooley. Oliver was in the war of 1812.

Of these children, Thomas was father of our subject, owned and resided upon a farm on the Mount Hope road, about two and a half miles out of Middletown, and spent his life in agricultural pursuits, esteemed for the common characteristics of the family,—integrity and honesty in all the relations of life. He lived to be eighty-one years of age, and died about 1850. His wife, Phebe Everson, who also lived to the age of eighty-one, dying one year before him, bore the following children: Fanny, Benjamin, Oliver, Capt. Thomas E., Julia, wife of Hudson Everett;

Mary, wife of George Cox ; Gilbert, John, and James, the youngest succeeding to the homestead farm.

Capt. Thomas E. Hulse spent his boyhood in the routine of farm work and attending school. At the age of fifteen he started out in life for himself, and became a clerk in a clothing-store in Newburgh. He was engaged there as a clerk for several years, but about the time of reaching his majority set up business for himself, which he continued until 1824. During that year, thinking that the city of New York would be a more successful place for business and give better opportunities for an enterprising young man, he accordingly formed a business connection with Peter Cornell, father of Hon. Thomas Cornell, of Rondout, N. Y., and opened a wholesale grocery-house in West Street, near the corner of Robinson Street, the corner store being occupied by Mr. Platt Brush, in the same business. These two stores were at that time the only buildings between Robinson and Canal Streets, and for several blocks below.

After four years, Mr. Cornell went to Kingston, and Capt. Hulse, after successfully continuing that business for some time, disposed of it, and became interested in and the owner of a number of schooners plying between New York and Southern ports. He also became a stockholder, and assisted in building and running several steamboats, one of which, the "Thomas E. Hulse," is well and favorably known to all travelers on the Hudson River. Among those associated with him in steamboat enterprises were Daniel Drew, Kelly, Raymond, Weeks, Cox, Odell, and the Hon. William Radford.

Having acquired a comfortable competence, and becoming tired of public business, Capt. Hulse, in 1852, purchased a farm in Wawayanda, upon which his family resided until 1855, when he bought 150 acres of land adjoining and partly lying in the corporation of Middletown, upon which he erected the same year his present residence, and removed thereto. He has mostly since been engaged in the improvement and management of his property, until age and paralysis debarred him from its superintendence. He married, Jan. 23, 1823, Permelia A., daughter of George E. Hulse and Mary Lyon, of Newburgh, who was born Nov. 2, 1806. Mrs. Hulse possesses rare womanly qualities, an exquisite taste for all the appointments of her household and flower-garden, in the latter of which may be found, the summer long, blooming flowers that attract the attention of the passer-by, and a hospitality in every respect generous, frank, and welcome.

On Jan. 23, 1873, many of the large circle of friends of Capt. and Mrs. Hulse met at their well-appointed and handsome country-seat, and joined them in celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage,—their golden wedding,—then surrounded by six children and eight grandchildren, among whom were Rev. Aug. Seward, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Middletown, of which they are members ; Rev. Charles Beattie, and Rev. Charles A. Harvey, who delivered appropriate addresses, frequently dwelling upon the history of this couple who had traveled life's journey together so happily, and again filled with wit and humorous allusions drawn from incidents and scenes in the courtship, marriage, and after-lives of the now aged but still cheerful and vivacious couple.

Capt. Hulse has never been a seeker after political place or its emoluments, but preferred the quiet and independence of a business life, to which he gave a period of nearly half a century. As a citizen, he has always been esteemed for his integrity, usefulness, frankness, generosity, and courtesy, and to all matters of a worthy local nature he has given a liberal and hearty support.

Their children are Mary A.; Charles J., died at the age of forty in 1866; Henry L., visited California in 1849, returned in 1851, enlisted Sept. 5, 1862, in the One Hundred and Sixty-fifth Regiment, New York Volunteers, Duryea's Zouaves, Nineteenth Army Corps, and was in the Red River expedition; he was in the battles of Fort Hudson, Mansfield, Pleasant Hill, and Sugar-Cane River, and was mustered out of service Aug. 30, 1865; Francis A., was the wife of James V. Schenck, and both are deceased, leaving two children, only one, Marie Louise, survives in 1881; Harriet A., wife of S. J. Curtis, of New York; Elmendore R., a farmer in Wawayanda; Eugenia C.; La Grange W., carries on the home farm; and Julia A., deceased.

JAMES B. BELL.

Among the oldest native residents of Middletown and vicinity who, by untiring industry and integrity, have won a place in the agricultural history of Orange County, is the subject of this sketch, now in the eighty-first year of his age, the last surviving child in a family of eleven children of John Bell.

John Bell, born in county Down, Ireland, in 1753, came to America in 1772, and upon the commencement of hostilities by the colonies for independence he enlisted in the regular service as a common soldier, suffered the hardships, endured privations, and followed the fortunes of war till he saw his adopted country free and independent, and was honorably discharged.

He served under General Washington and other illustrious and brave commanders, and fought in the battles of Brandywine, Germantown, and Monmouth, and for many years after the close of the war received a small pension.

After the close of the war he married Keziah Mapes, who was born in 1776, and settled on 111 acres of land in the town of Wallkill, where he spent the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits. His wife, a devoted Christian mother and member of the Presbyterian Church, died in 1810, and bore him the following children :

James B. Bell

Alonso Haughton

Benjamin, born April 22, 1786; Alexander, born 1788; Jane, born June 22, 1790 (wife of L. Godfrey); John, born May 23, 1792; William, born July 13, 1794; Moses, born April 20, 1797; Thomas, born March 4, 1799; James B., born March 10, 1801; Gabriel, born April 25, 1803; Lewis, born July 2, 1805; George W., born June 3, 1807.

John Bell married for his second wife Mary Crane, of which union there was no issue.

All his children settled in Orange County except Benjamin, who settled in Ohio, and all were married and reared families except Thomas and James B.

John Bell was known as honest in all his dealings with his fellow-men. He inherited from his Scotch ancestry that independent free spirit of religious worship which they spilt their blood to achieve, was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Deepark, and a devoted Christian. He died Feb. 23, 1834.

James B. Bell was left motherless at the age of nine years, and at that tender age went into the busy world to carve out a fortune for himself, which, by industry, economy, and resolution, he early in life laid a foundation for; until the age of fifteen he worked where he could find anything to do, at very small wages, at one time only receiving twenty shillings per month. At that age he began to learn the tailor's trade, which he followed until his marriage, Oct. 25, 1826, to Harriet Tuthill, who was born in 1802. He then purchased the homestead farm, which he retained until 1831, sold it, and subsequently owned several farms in the town of Wallkill. In 1859 he bought 108 acres contiguous to the village of Middletown, which he has laid out into lots and streets, and sold for building purposes. In the short time of twenty-two years this property has been nearly all covered with many fine and substantial residences, forming a very desirable part of the village.

Wherever his residence has been, Mr. Bell has always taken an interest in church matters and all that tends to morality and good society.

He became a member of the Deepark Church at an early age, was a member of the Howell Presbyterian Church, and served it as trustee for fifteen years, building himself the present church edifice, and since his residence in Middletown he has been a member and contributor to the Second Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Bell is a man of strength of character, possessed of integrity in all business relations, considerate in his opinions, and decided in them when once made.

His wife died May 6, 1874.

For his second wife he married Harriet, daughter of George Pelton and Sarah Tuthill, of Wallkill, and granddaughter of Peleg Pelton, a native of Connecticut, who was one of the early settlers of Wallkill. She was born Nov. 16, 1816, was first married to Peter H. Bell, by whom she had seven children, only one of whom (Jane, wife of Andrew Myres, of Wantage, N. J.) is living. Her second husband was Daniel Mapes. Her marriage to James B. Bell, her present husband, occurred June 10, 1875.

ALANSON SLAUGHTER.

His paternal ancestor came from Wales, and settled in Virginia, and many of his descendants are now residing in the vicinity of Petersburg and Fredericksburg in that State.

Isaac, grandfather of Alanson, served under Gen. Washington in the war for independence, and was with him when encamped near Newburgh, Orange Co.

He was at the battle of Ticonderoga and at the taking of Crown Point, and served in the northern campaign. After the war he received a pension. He settled in the town of Wallkill after peace was declared, subsequently removed to Shawangunk, Ulster Co., and in the year 1803 purchased 200 acres of land in the southeastern part of Wallkill, which has since remained in the family.

In 1817 he bought a farm in what is now the town of Hamptonburgh, upon which he settled in 1819, and there resided the remainder of his life. He died in 1838, aged eighty-four years.

He was twice married, and had a family of twenty-one children, of whom nineteen grew to manhood and womanhood. Of these, Benjamin, Joseph, Archibald, De Witt, William H., and several daughters located in Orange County. His second wife's name was Jane McBride.

Joseph was born Oct. 13, 1794, and died Feb. 25, 1873. His wife, whom he married Dec. 16, 1817, was Amelia, daughter of Thomas Booth and Jane Barker, of Hamptonburgh, who was born in 1798, and died Aug. 14, 1877.

She was granddaughter of Benjamin Booth, son of Charles Booth, who was son of Charles Booth, who was son of John Booth, of Southhold, L. I., to whom, with one Sylvester, Shelter Island was granted by the Indians in 1652.

The children of Joseph Slaughter and Amelia Booth were Alanson, born Aug. 31, 1818; Mary Louisa, born July 5, 1826, wife of John T. Coleman, of Hamptonburgh; and Helen, died young.

For some four years Joseph Slaughter resided upon the home farm in Hamptonburgh, and about two years after his marriage settled on the purchase of his father at Wallkill, where he erected a part of the present residence in 1823, and where he carried on agricultural pursuits the remainder of his life. He was a man of high social position in his town, and influential in his town and county.

For many years he served as justice of the peace, and frequently held his courts in his own house. He was appointed judge of Orange County, represented his Assembly district in the State Legislature for one term in 1839, and for twenty years was an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Scotchtown, of which both himself and wife were members.

He was originally a member of the Democratic party, was a Free-Soiler, and upon the breaking out of the Rebellion joined the Republican party.

Joseph Slaughter was a kind-hearted, sympathetic, faithful, and patriotic citizen, and a man of correct habits and sterling honesty.

Alanson, only son of Joseph Slaughter, received his early education in the district school at home, and in select schools at Goshen and Middletown. He succeeded to the homestead in Wallkill by inheritance, and has there followed agricultural pursuits during his life. He is interested in all matters pertaining to the prosperity of the town in which he resides, is well read in the current topics of the times, and a promoter of religious work and educational interests. He has officiated as elder in the Scotchtown Presbyterian Church for some eight years, and both he and his wife have been members of that church for some twenty-five years.

He has been one of the directors and stockholders of the First National Bank of Middletown since its organization, assessor of his town for several years, and represented it in the board of supervisors of the county for one term.

His wife is Mary Ann, only daughter of Nathaniel Bailey and Jennet White, of Wallkill, and granddaughter of Daniel Bailey, who came from Long Island, and was the progenitor of this branch of the Bailey family in Orange County.

She was born Oct. 15, 1817, was married to Alanson Slaughter Oct. 11, 1843, of which union they have three daughters, viz.: Helen Jane (wife of George W. Ackerly, of Montgomery), Jennet Bailey (wife of Robert G. Young, of Goshen), and Ann Amelia.

JOHN B. HULSE.

John B. Hulse, son of Thomas Hulse and Phebe Everson, mentioned in the sketch of Capt. Thomas E. Hulse, and brother of Capt. Thomas, was born on the homestead in Wallkill, March 8, 1809. He remained at home until the age of twenty-five, working upon his father's farm, and received during his minority a fair common-school education.

With little pecuniary assistance, but with a determination to succeed and carve out a property for himself, after his marriage, Feb. 22, 1834, to Hetta Ann, daughter of Barney Horton and Anna Hawkins, who was born Aug. 14, 1811, he settled on the farm, where he has since resided, containing 120 acres of land, in the southeastern part of the town of Wallkill, near the Wallkill River.

By industry, economy, and judicious management, Mr. and Mrs. Hulse, in due course of time, paid in full for their farm, and to it subsequently added 37 acres more. Upon this property Mr. Hulse has erected commodious and substantial buildings, and has brought the farm into a high state of cultivation. The products of his dairy were sold in the form of butter until the completion of the Erie Railway, since which time he sends the milk of his dairy direct to a New York market daily.

Mr. Hulse may safely be classed among the active, thrifty, and enterprising farmers of Orange County, and in all his business relations he is known for his integrity, good judgment, and business ability. For many years he has been a stockholder in the Middletown National Bank, and for seven years past he has served his town as one of its commissioners of highways. His wife, a devoted mother, died Dec. 10, 1877.

Their children are Hudson E., a farmer in Wawayanda; Harriet Amelia, wife of Augustus Smith, a farmer in the town of Goshen; Theodore, born Feb. 9, 1838, was for several years in business in New York, and died April 5, 1875; Barney H., born July 24, 1839, was also a business man in New York, and died Dec. 22, 1873, leaving a widow; John Edgar, a farmer in Wallkill; Thomas E., born Sept. 16, 1847, died April 18, 1862; and Silas, connected with the Erie Railway, located at Jersey City.

HIRAM S. WILKISON.

His paternal grandfather, Jonathan, a cooper by trade, removed with his family from Rahway, N. J., in 1791, and settled first at Bloomingburgh, N. Y., and after two years settled on the farm now owned by William Kirk, near Circleville, in the town of Wallkill. He died in that vicinity. Both himself and wife were members of the Hopewell Presbyterian Church.

His wife, Phebe Barber, bore him ten children: Sally and Edward, died young; Samuel, a cooper by trade, died at sea of yellow fever, on his way to the West Indies; Polly, wife of Robert Osborne, resided at Circleville; Phebe, wife of Samuel Wisner, of the same place; Katy, wife of John Winfield, died in Wisconsin; Betsey, wife of Peter Redener, died at Cold Spring, N. Y.; Richard, never married; Jonathan, died Feb. 9, 1872, aged eighty-nine; Sally, was the wife of John Douglass, and after his death married a Mr. Buck, of Western New York, whose son, Charles W. Douglass, is a prominent superintendent of railroads.

Of these children, Jonathan, father of our subject, married, in 1806, Hannah, daughter of John Puff, of Wallkill, who died March 1, 1866, aged seventy-two. He was a cooper by trade, and followed that business most of his active life. He resided at Circleville after his marriage until 1831; in Goshen for two years following; near the asylum for one year; in Shawangunk, Ulster Co., for twelve years; and returned to Circleville, where he died. Both himself and wife were first members of the Scotchtown Presbyterian Church, but afterwards became members of the

Virgil Thompson

His paternal grandfather came from France, and John I., who was born in Orange County, was his son. By occupation he was a farmer, and as such was a successful business man and a good manager. He lived in the town of Wallkill for many years, but subsequently moved to Goshen, where he died in 1861.

Virgil Thompson, the subject of this sketch, was the son of John, and was born in Montgomery, Orange Co., N. Y., Oct. 5, 1806. There his early days were spent, and the Montgomery Academy gave him his education. When a young man he learned the blacksmith's trade of Charles Buchanan, of Montgomery, and subsequently carried on a blacksmith's business there for ten years. In 1839 he settled in the town of Wallkill, upon about three hundred acres of land, the place where his father had previously resided. Here Mr. Thompson has since lived, and until within a few years has been an active, energetic, industrious man. Of late his poor health has made him lead a retired life. He has been a member of the Orange County Agricultural Society for many years, was a director in its board, and is now an honorary vice-president. He is a stockholder in the Goshen National Bank, in the Middletown National Bank, and also in the Walden National Bank. His judgment has always been esteemed in matters of business and agriculture, and he is fearless and outspoken in his convictions. He has never been active in political matters, although he was a delegate from Orange County to the Republican State Convention held at Utica, N. Y., in 1864. For many years he has been a member of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen, and contributed towards the building of the same.

Mr. Thompson married Mary Ann, daughter of Jonathan and Susanna (Youngblood) Decker, of Montgomery, on Jan. 11, 1837, and of this union were born Virgil, who lives at home; Anna, married Hudson E. Hulse, of Wawayanda; Mary, died in infancy; Horace D., who married Sarah M., daughter of Dr. G. M. Millsbaugh, of Walden, and is a farmer on the homestead. Mary Ann Thompson died on April 10, 1850. On Jan. 18, 1855, he married Ophelia, daughter of Peter A. Millsbaugh, of Montgomery.

Israel H. Wickham

JOSEPH WICKHAM is supposed to have been the progenitor of the family on Long Island, and his account-book shows that he did business at Sag Harbor in 1681, and remained on the island until 1689. His wife was Sarah. He had a son, Joseph Wickham, Jr., who succeeded him, and was engaged there in business in 1720.

The will of Joseph Wickham, Jr., dated in 1734, names a son, Samuel, who was great-grandfather of our subject, married, in 1708, Abigail Howell, and settled in the east division of the town of Goshen, Orange Co., in 1740. He was a tailor by trade, and his account-book shows charges for medical services in attending the sick.

His children were Samuel, Israel, William, Matthew, Jerusha (who married a Wells), Elizabeth (married a Jackson), Abigail (married a Smith), Margaret (married a Bailey), Mary (married a Corwin), and Julia (married first a Moore, and after his death a Gale).

Samuel Wickham was followed from Long Island by his nephews, who also settled in Orange County, and one of them, William, became judge of the county, and was the father of Gen. George D. Wickham. Prior to the Revolutionary war, Samuel Wickham, with David Moore, purchased lot No. 35, in the Minisink Angle, upon which he settled two sons and one daughter, viz.: Samuel, where Mrs. Linus B. Babcock now resides in Middletown; Israel, where John W. Baird now resides in Middletown; and Jerusha (Mrs. Wells), where John Gardiner now resides.

Israel, born in 1741, was a tailor by trade, married Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Carpenter, of Goshen, and granddaughter of Rev. John Bradner, the first settled Presbyterian clergyman at Goshen, who came from Scotland. The deed of the land upon which his father settled him, given by his father to him, is dated 1769. He did militia duty at home during the Revolutionary war, and served for some time in the French-and-Indian war at Fort Edward. He was known as a man of independent thought and action, and possessed strong force of character. He owned slaves, and thought it his duty to liberate the girls at the age of eighteen and the boys at the age of twenty-one, giving each with his or her freedom the same as an apprenticed child. When he manumitted his slave Abel, who was so favorably known on account of his Christian zeal, he kept him as long as he lived, thus showing that his charity and generosity were only measured by his means to bestow. He died in April, 1817.

His only daughter, Abigail, died unmarried, and his only son who grew to manhood was Israel, father of our subject, who was born in 1773, and being left motherless was reared until thirteen years of age by his grandfather Carpenter. He married Mary, daughter of David Moore, who bore him children as follows: Benjamin C., settled in the West and there died; Col. Israel H.; Joseph and George, died young; and Abigail, became first the wife of Oscar Welch, of Michigan, and after his death the wife of Mr. Kilpatrick.

After his marriage Israel Wickham settled on one hundred and twenty-five acres of land in the town of Wallkill, about two miles from Middletown, and after five years sold the property and bought a farm at Middletown, a part of which is now the "Hillside Cemetery," upon which he resided until 1813.

In 1817, upon the death of his father, he removed to the homestead, where John W. Baird now resides, and there resided until his death, in March, 1821. His son, Col. Israel H. Wickham, was born May 25, 1804; married, March 4, 1828, Sally, daughter of Henry B. Wisner, who was born April 2, 1803.

After his marriage he resided until 1834 upon the farm now owned by David Miller, and then purchased of his sister Abigail forty acres, which was a part of the original purchase of Samuel Wickham. To this he added some sixty acres. Here he remained until 1863, when he left the farm in charge of his son and removed to Middletown. He was appointed justice of the peace after removing to the village; was afterwards elected to the same office, which he held at the time of his death, March 12, 1868. His wife died August 26th of the same year, both deaths being caused by poison received in the flour from which their bread was made.

Col. Wickham was a man of conservative opinions, correct habits, and a decided advocate of the principles of temperance. He was esteemed for his frankness of manner and for his sterling integrity in all the relations of life. He took an active interest in all worthy local enterprises tending to the prosperity of the place and the welfare of its citizens. He had a retentive memory and a fondness for reading and research, and was an active participant in the lyceum which was successfully continued at Middletown for some time, of which he served several years as president. He was one of the organizers of the Middletown Bank, one of its directors, and one of the founders of the Wallkill Academy, of which he served several years as trustee.

Col. Wickham was widely known throughout Orange County, was interested in its material resources, and was chosen president of the Orange County Agricultural Society.

On account of his strong temperance proclivities and able exposition of its principles he was made the nominee on the Temperance ticket for member of Assembly, and received a very respectable vote in the county. He received his title of colonel from his connection with the old State militia.

His children living are Maria, who became the wife of John N. Dunning, and after his death was married to her present husband, Herman B. Young; and George, who succeeded to the homestead property and married Mary A., daughter of Col. Morgan L. and Juliette (Conkling) Sproat, of Middletown.

Methodist Episcopal Church. Their children were Samuel, a mechanic, resided in Wallkill; John P., a cooper, resided in Brooklyn, N. Y.; Fanny Jane, wife of James Wooden, died in 1843; Hannah P., wife of George A. Foster, of Circleville; James B., a cooper, resides near Towanda, Pa.; Hiram S., born and both himself and wife are members of the Old-School Baptist Church at Middletown. He married, Oct. 24, 1840, Clarissa, daughter of Ebenezer Mowrey and Chloe Merchant, who was born Jan. 30, 1816. Her mother was a native of Connecticut, and her maternal grandfather, John Merchant, was one of Washington's Life Guard; her maternal grandmother was Tabitha Hamilton, a cousin of Alexander Hamilton; her father, Ebenezer Mowrey, was a native of Rhode Island, and resided most of his life in Sullivan County.

The surviving children of Mr. and Mrs. Wilkison are Sarah E., a teacher of several years' experience, who possesses a natural fondness for historical research, and Cornelia A. Wilkison.

HIRAM B. WEBB.

His father, Samuel Webb, a farmer in the town of Wallkill, married Mary Bennett, who bore him the following children: Hiram B., Cynthia (wife of Cornelius Van Scoy), Esther (wife of William Shaw), Abby Maria (wife of Solomon Crane), and Hannah Jane (wife of Bailey Crane). They were attendants of the Congregational Church in Middletown. Jehial, Mance, of Middletown; Phebe, wife of William Maultby, of Pennsylvania; and Walter W., of Bridgeport, Conn. Of these twelve children, all were married except Zaccheus, and most of them reared families.

Hiram S. Wilkison, while young, served an apprenticeship to the mason's trade; afterwards, being of a naturally ingenious turn of mind, took up the carpenter's trade, which he followed until 1856, and built many of the substantial residences and other buildings in the vicinity of Circleville, where he has resided. During the last twenty years he has been engaged in manufacturing churning-powers, well-curbs, iron post-fences, etc. He made the first endless-chain churning-power in Orange County, and introduced the first in the State of Virginia. Mr. Wilkison was unfortunate, and lost his shop by fire in 1846, two years after he had settled where he now resides; and again, in 1870, his house, shop, and other buildings, covering an area of 3870 feet, were destroyed by fire. He has always been a promoter of all worthy local objects, his eldest son, was a farmer in Wallkill, and died in Ellenville, Ulster Co., N. Y.; had two sons and two daughters, one of whom, William B., was sheriff of Ulster County. The other children are Harriet (wife of Edwin Bartholf, of Warwick), Ira, and Mary (wife of Harvey Brodhead, of Ellenville).

Hiram B. Webb

Hiram B. Webb was born Dec. 31, 1799, and until 1866, after his marriage, was a farmer on the Bloomingburgh plank-road, about one mile out of Middletown, at which date he removed to Middletown, where he resided until his death, which occurred Dec. 10, 1869. He was well known as a man of sterling integrity and honesty of purpose, and although not a member of any church, his sentiments were with the Old-School Baptists, of which society at Middletown his wife became a member in 1872. In his middle life he was active in local politics, but never sought any place for himself.

His wife, Hephzibah, born Oct. 5, 1803, married Jan. 23, 1838, survives in 1881, and is a woman of good mind, retentive memory, and esteemed by all who know her for her womanly virtues and Christian excellence. Her father, Jonas Hulse, born Nov. 29, 1759, died March 23, 1845. In the early part of his life he worked at his trade, making spinning-wheels, but during his latter years was a farmer near Middletown. He was a son of Silas Hulse, born on Long Island, March 5, 1726, and was the progenitor of the family in Orange County. He was in the French and Indian war of 1755, and died June 18, 1770. His wife was Charity Smith, born May 9, 1734, and died Oct. 30, 1814. Jonas Hulse's wife was Hephzibah, daughter of Deacon James Reeve, who settled in Wawayanda from Long Island, and was one of the founders of the Congregational Church at Middletown; and Deacon James Reeve's wife was Mary, daughter of David Moore, born Nov. 25, 1713, who was the first settler on lot 35, Minisink Angle, with Samuel and Israel Wickham, where Middletown is now located, and died June 18, 1789.

Isaac B., after his marriage, settled in Rhode Island; afterwards purchased a farm in De Ruyter, where he resided for a time. He then settled in Scott, Cortland Co., N. U. F. P. Bliven Ulysses F. P. Bliven remained at home until the age of sixteen, and then went to learn carriage-making with his brother Cranston. He married, Dec. 13, 1838, Clementina, daughter of James Haight (her mother was a Miss Goldsmith), who died July 20, 1860, aged forty-eight, leaving children,—Amelia Louisa, widow of Harvey L. He married for his second wife, Oct. 3, 1861, Caroline, widow of Harrison Harding, and daughter of Nathaniel Beyea and Durenda King, prominent citizens of New Vernon, Sullivan Co., N. Y. Caroline Beyea was born July 13, 1827, and died June 26, 1880, leaving children,—Clementina I., Thomas K., Minnie C., and Ulysses F. P., Jr.

After his first marriage Mr. Bliven went to Towanda to assist his brother Elijah F. in carriage-making, where he remained until 1842, and that year settled at Mechanictown, Orange Co., where he remained only one year, when he bought a shop, house and lot, where he now resides, in the town of Wallkill, and established a carriage and blacksmith-shop. H. Bull

HARRISON BULL is a descendant in direct line from William Bull and Sarah Wells, whose history is given in detail in other parts of this work, and belongs to the Wallkill branch of the family, Thomas and William, sons of William Bull and Sarah Wells, whom their father settled on five hundred acres of land lying on the Wallkill River.

Samuel, grandfather of Harrison Bull, born Nov. 12, 1758, resided in the neighborhood of Circleville, was a blacksmith by trade, but was mostly engaged in farming. He served in the Revolutionary war, and helped to forge the chain that was stretched across the Hudson to prevent the British from ascending the river. His wife, Margaret Gale, born March 28, 1762, bore him children, who grew to manhood and womanhood, as follows: Benjamin, Sarah, Margaret, William, Samuel, Phebe, George, and Oscar. Both himself and wife were buried in the Bull burying-ground at Hamptonburgh.

Like their first ancestor in this country, the boys were all stone-masons by trade, and followed it more or less during their lives.

Samuel, Jr., was born Nov. 28, 1793, and died April 13, 1857. His wife, Mary Osborne, was born in 1795, and died May 4, 1875. He was a drummer in the war of 1812. He was a man of much enterprise and a master mason. Most of his active life was spent in the construction of buildings and other structures, among which were the following: Stony Ford bridge, across the Wallkill; Cohecton bridge, across the Neversink; Orange County poor-house, Hopewell Presbyterian church, Sullivan County court-house, and Phillipsburgh factories. He also contracted for and built the Middletown and Bloomingburgh Plank-road, and the plank-road from Port Jervis to Forestburgh.

He owned a farm of one hundred and twenty-five acres where Circleville is now located, besides other real estate, and on it built a stone house in 1832, now occupied by his oldest son, John Bull. He gave the land upon which to build the Presbyterian church at Circleville, was the leading man in its construction, and a member and elder in the church from its founding until his death.

His children were John, a merchant at Circleville; William H., a farmer at Circleville; Mary, wife of Charles H. Stringham, of City Island, N. Y.; Daniel, a merchant at Burlingham, Sullivan Co., N. Y.; Robert, a farmer and stone-mason at Circleville; Harrison; Catharine, deceased, was the wife of James H. Van Fleet, of Jersey City; Elizabeth, wife of George M. Beakes, M.D., of Bloomingburgh, N. Y.

Harrison, son of Samuel and Mary (Osborne) Bull, was born on the homestead at Circleville, Jan. 20, 1832. His early education was received in the school at home and at Wallkill Academy, and for four years after reaching his majority he assisted his father on the public works on which he was engaged. In 1856 he bought out his brother Daniel, a merchant at Circleville, and successfully continued the mercantile business there until 1874. He was appointed postmaster at Circleville in 1856, and has filled the position since. In 1870, Mr. Bull was elected justice of the peace, and by re-election is serving his third term of four years each. In this position he tries as few causes as possible, always advising settlement, and generally brings it about without litigation. Mr. Bull was active in the establishment and construction of the Middletown and Crawford Railroad, has been a director since 1874, and agent for the road at Circleville since its building, in 1872.

He married, Jan. 5, 1858, Nancy, daughter of Bartlett D. Bennett and Sarah C. Sample, of New York. Their children are Georgianna and Irene C.

A. L. Vail

The Vail family has been identified with the history of Orange County from its early settlement, when three brothers, Josiah, Samuel, and Benjamin Vail, settled here from Long Island.

Josiah is the ancestor of Archibald L. Vail, and married Patience Corwin, who bore him five children,—Isaiah, Daniel, John, Phebe, and Irene.

Isaiah married Abigail Meeker, who bore him eleven children,—Obadiah, Mary, Josiah, Phebe, Irene, Nathaniel, Isaiah, Abigail, John, Samuel, and George W.

Of these children, Josiah was grandfather of our subject, and married Mary Smith, who bore him the following children: Moses; Luther, spent his early life here, and removed to Seneca County, where he died; Samuel S., is now residing at Southhold, L. I., and has reached the great age of ninety years; and Maria, was the wife of Dr. James M. Gardiner, a physician of Newburgh.

Moses was father of Archibald L. Vail, and married Miriam Hulse, who was born in 1784, and died Sept. 30, 1872. He was born in 1783, and died Sept. 6, 1861. Their children were Gabriel, who followed boating on the Hudson most of his life, and died leaving no family; Silas, a farmer in Wallkill; Arminda, deceased; Josiah, deceased; Dayton, studied for a physician, and died soon after graduating; Luther, resided on the homestead until his death; Maria, wife of Asa D. Dolson, of Muscatine, Iowa; Margaret M., resides on the homestead; and Archibald L. Vail.

Moses Vail was during the early part of his life a merchant at Slate Hill, but a few years after his marriage purchased one hundred and three acres of land in the town of Wallkill, about two miles from the village of Middletown, upon which he resided until his death. He was a quiet, unostentatious man, and contentedly followed agricultural pursuits, seeking neither official place nor its emoluments. His wife was a member of the Old-School Baptist Church, and did her part well as a wife and mother in rearing her children and training them in all that pertains to true manhood and womanhood.

Archibald L. Vail was born on the homestead in Wallkill, April 22, 1829. At the age of seventeen he became a clerk in the forwarding, freighting, and grocery store of H. & B. G. Vail, of Middletown, and after one year went to New York, where he remained for three years in a grocery house as clerk. In 1850 he returned to Middletown, and for some two and a half years was clerk for Samuel Denton, a dry-goods merchant. In 1853 he formed a partnership with James T. King, of Middletown, in the drug business, under the firm-name of King & Vail, which business relation continued for nine years. He then entered a partnership with Thomas B. Scott—Scott & Vail—in the hardware business. After two years Mr. Vail purchased Mr. Scott's interest in the business, and associated with him Leander Brink, with the firm-name of Vail & Brink. This firm continued the hardware, tin, and stove business until 1879, when they associated with them James A. Clark, who had been a clerk in the concern since 1864, and the firm of Vail, Brink & Clark continue a successful business on North Street in 1881.

In 1876, Mr. Vail purchased the Orange County Furnace and Machine-Shops, which he has since carried on independently of his other business interests. Mr. Vail has been associated with many other business interests in Middletown during his residence here, and has been a promoter of all enterprises tending to the prosperity and thrift of the village.

For some twenty years he has been a director of the Middletown Bank; one of the vice-presidents of the savings-bank, and a trustee since its organization; a trustee of the village for two terms; and a trustee of the Second Presbyterian Church for the past twenty years.

He married, Oct. 20, 1853, Ruth Ann, daughter of Walter Everett and Phebe Case, of Middletown, who was born April 10, 1832, and died Oct. 17, 1878. The children born of this union are Phebe Ann, Archiena, Moses, and James Coleman.

H. S. Linderman.

His father, Henry Linderman, of German extraction, born in the town of Crawford in May, 1764, settled in 1790 on one hundred acres of land in the town of Wallkill, near the Crawford line, then in a wild state, and there resided in a log house until 1807, when he erected a framed house, which was burned in 1840, and the present one built by his son, Henry S., subject of this sketch. To his first purchase he added one hundred acres, and brought his land into a good state of cultivation.

Henry Linderman was a man of naturally fine intellect; was justice of the peace for forty years, and during that time never had a judgment rendered by him reversed in the higher courts. He always counseled settlement between parties in litigation instead of trial and the course of the law. He was a member and deacon of the Hopewell Presbyterian Church, and a supporter of kindred interests. He removed to Bloomingburgh in 1842, and died there Jan. 15, 1844. His wife, Mary Shaw, daughter of Moses Shaw, of Crawford, born in 1766 and died in 1831, bore him children,—David, a farmer in Wallkill; John, a physician at Dingman's Ferry, Pa., had a son, Dr. Henry Richard, a prominent physician, who was director of the Philadelphia Mint, resigned just after the beginning of the late civil war, was reappointed, had charge of all the mints in the United States, and died in March, 1879; another son, Garret B.,—a son-in-law of Asa Packer,—is an extensive coal owner and railroad man; Albert B., another son, is the originator of the scheme to drain the Everglades of Florida, now being undertaken by Philadelphia capitalists; Peter went to Michigan, where he died; Willet, a lawyer in Shawangunk, Ulster Co., was district attorney of that county for thirteen years; Elizabeth, wife of Robert Thompson, of New York; Henry S., subject of this sketch; James O., a lawyer, settled in Kingston, N. Y., and was judge of Ulster County from 1843 to 1855; Dolly; Emily, wife of Thomas J. Evans, of New York; and Sarah Jane. Henry Linderman's second wife was a widow of Col. Clark, of Sullivan County, N. Y.

Henry S. Linderman was born on the homestead where he has spent his life, May 28, 1807. He married, Dec. 25, 1839, Mary Ann, daughter of James Martin and Catharine Linderman, of Crawford, who was born in 1810. Their children are James, who carries on the home farm, and for the past seven years has been engaged in the sale of agricultural implements, and is also an auctioneer; Virginia, wife of Benjamin F. Van Fleet, of Wallkill; Emma, wife of C. Albert Knapp, of Goshen; Crotilda, wife of George E. Bull, of Bullville.

Henry S. Linderman received a good English education while young, and after reaching his eighteenth year was for four years thereafter a teacher, the last year being spent as principal of the Bloomingburgh school. He then settled on the homestead, and has there carried on agricultural pursuits since. For eight years he has served his town as assessor; was formerly a member of the Presbyterian Church at Bullville, and is now a member of the church at Circleville, of which he has been elder for the past five years.

Mr. Linderman is a man of positive convictions, good judgment, strict integrity, and correct habits, and seeks to fulfill the full duties of the citizen.

Horatio R. Wilcox

The Wilcox family are of English extraction. It is difficult to determine the period of their emigration to America, though a branch of the family early settled in Dutchess County, N. Y., where Nathaniel, the great-grandfather of Horatio R., was born, his death having occurred in Canaan, Columbia Co., N. Y., at the residence of his son John. Among his children were Jehiel, Jesse, Nathaniel, Aaron, John, and two daughters,—Polly and Lois. Of this number, Nathaniel was born in the town of Dover Plains, N. Y., where his early life was spent in agricultural pursuits. He was united in marriage to Miss Anna McGonigle, of Scotch parentage, and a native of Hinsdale, Columbia Co. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox removed to Lexington, Greene Co., N. Y., where the following children were born: Henry, Oliver, Joseph, Jehiel, John, Thomas, Margaret, Anna, and Sarah. The year 1836 witnessed the death of both Mr. Wilcox and his wife, with an interval of but a few weeks between the events. Oliver, one of the sons above mentioned, was born in Lexington, May 8, 1795, where his youth, until the age of sixteen, was passed. Being desirous to render himself independent of any changes which an uncertain fortune might develop, he decided upon the acquirement of a reliable trade, and having removed to Austerlitz, Columbia Co., he learned that of a hatter. His marriage to Miss Cynthia Beebe, daughter of Roswell Beebe, occurred March 18, 1818. The Beebe family were originally from Connecticut, and at an early date became residents of Chatham, N. Y., where Roderick, the grandfather of Mrs. Wilcox, was born, and subsequently married to Miss Nancy Vaughn. Among their children were Roswell, Frederick, Henry, John, Roderick, Alexander, Pamela, Triphena, Chloe, and Sylvesta. Roswell was born in 1777, at Chatham, where he resided until his death, March 31, 1841. He was united in marriage to Miss Annie Gott, whose death occurred Sept. 4, 1830, in her fifty-ninth year. To them were born children,—Cynthia (Mrs. Wilcox), Philo, Anson, Welcome R., and Lucretia. The children of Oliver and Cynthia Wilcox were Horatio R. and Franklin A., the latter of whom was born June 30, 1837, in Windham, Greene Co., N. Y., and married Miss Anna, daughter of Enoch Armitage, of New York City, their present residence.

The birth of Horatio R. occurred at Chatham, N. Y., Sept.

25, 1819, though the early years of his life were spent at Pittsfield, Mass. The public and private schools near his home afforded him opportunities for education, and laid the foundation for more thorough acquirements at the Wilbraham Academy, Wilbraham, Mass. Having determined upon a career of business activity, he then removed to New York, and served a brief apprenticeship as clerk. A more extended field of labor opened at Ashland, Greene Co., soon after, where he engaged with his father in mercantile and manufacturing enterprises. Mr. Wilcox was married, Aug. 20, 1845, to Miss Sarah M., daughter of Hon. Henry Kinsley, ex-member of the State Legislature from Ashland, N. Y. They have one son, Henry K., who is married to Frances, daughter of Hon. George D. Wheeler, of Deposit, N. Y., and who has served for twelve years as deputy collector of the Eleventh District, New York. Their daughter, Olivia, is the wife of John W. Slawson, one of the editors and proprietors of the Middletown Daily Press.

During the year 1853, Mr. Wilcox made Middletown his residence, where he at once established a factory for the manufacture of hats. After an interval of rest he became largely interested in the Middletown Gas-Light Company, of which he is president. He is a director of the Middletown National Bank, and vice-president and one of the incorporators of the Middletown Savings-Bank. He was one of the originators of the Middletown board of water-works, of which he is now commissioner. He is also a director of the Middletown, Unionville and Water-Gap Railroad, and of the Middletown and Crawford Railroad.

Mr. Wilcox is a Republican in politics, but indifferent to the honors of official life, and has no political aspirations. He has, however, for several years held the position of president of Middletown village, and also been a member of the board of education. His religious views are in sympathy with the creed of the Presbyterian denomination. In the development of the public and business interests of the place of his residence he has been an important factor. Its mercantile enterprises have found in him an energetic and able representative, while all worthy schemes for the public good have been cordially advanced by him.

Geo Wallace

WILLIAM WALLACE, of Scotch-Irish extraction, came from the north of Ireland, with his wife, four sons, and two daughters, about the close of the Revolutionary war, and settled in Maryland, where his wife died. The children were John, who settled in Goshen, where he was a teacher for some time, afterwards a merchant, and for one term was county treasurer. He died there. William, born in 1777, went to Crawford, Orange Co., while a young man, where he married, about 1806, Kezia MacDowell, of Scotch extraction. About 1809 he purchased ninety acres of land near Scotchtown, in the town of Wallkill, where he spent his active business life. He resided for a few years in Middletown, and died in 1862 at the residence of his son George, subject of this sketch. William Wallace was a strictly honorable and upright citizen, quiet and unassuming, and a deacon in the Presbyterian Church at Scotchtown, of which his wife was also a member. She died in 1842, aged fifty-two. James, settled in Milford, Pa., where he was a large farmer, and there died. Robert, was a lumber merchant in Philadelphia, and there died. Jane, was the wife of Robert Loughheed, of Wallkill. Mary, was the wife of Robert A. Thompson, of Hopewell.

The children of William and Kezia Wallace were fifteen, viz.: John C., was a merchant at Goshen, was county clerk, 1843 to 1846, and from 1876 to 1879; William, was a carriage-maker by trade, was a merchant at Bullville for some time, and died in 1863, at Middletown; Mary W., is the widow of Theron Libolt, and resides at Scotchtown; Rebecca, is the widow of Walter B. Sears, of Montgomery; Robert, was engaged in mercantile business at Goshen from boyhood, and there died about 1840; Andrew T., a farmer in Crawford; Harvey, a merchant at Goshen; Martha Jane (deceased), was the wife of John E. Corwin, of Scotchtown; George; Alfred, died at the age of thirteen; Matilda; Theodore, died at the age of eighteen, in 1846; and Elizabeth, James (1st), and James (2d), died young.

Of these children, George Wallace, our subject, was born July 17, 1823, and spent his boyhood at home. At the age of fourteen he went to learn the wagon-making trade with his brother-in-law, Walter B. Sears, in Montgomery, where he remained most of three years. He then returned home, where he remained until his marriage.

He married, Nov. 11, 1846, Susan C., daughter of Oliver Bailey and Susan Millsbaugh, of Goshen, who were formerly residents near Scotchtown. Oliver Bailey died Dec. 20, 1867, aged seventy-eight. His wife died July 5, 1873, aged eighty. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church at Scotchtown. Oliver Bailey was a son of Capt. Daniel Bailey, born on Long Island, who was the progenitor of his family in Orange County, and settled near Phillipsburgh, in the town of Wallkill.

Susan C. Bailey was born July 29, 1825. Their children were Georgianna, died at the age of six years, March 21, 1855; Susan Alice, is the wife of John W. Clark, of Goshen; Theodore; and Carrie H.

In the spring of 1848, Mr. Wallace settled on his present farm of one hundred and forty acres, known as the Baldwin homestead, once owned by Rev. Mr. Baldwin, the first settled pastor of the Scotchtown Presbyterian Church. Here he has resided since, engaged in stock-raising and dealing in cattle and sheep. In 1873 he began the manufacture of brick in Middletown, and has furnished brick for many of the substantial buildings of the village, and in 1880 he furnished one and a half millions of brick for a portion of the asylum building in Middletown.

Mr. Wallace has been a stockholder in the banks at Middletown for some time, and owns considerable real estate in the village. Both himself and wife have been members of the Presbyterian Church at Scotchtown since 1855, and he has served the church as elder for several years.

was engaged until 1861 in manufacturing all kinds of wagons for ordinary use.

For seven years following, in connection with Thomas K. Beyea, he engaged quite largely in purchasing timbered lands, taking off its timber for wood, railroad ties, etc., and afterwards disposing of the land.

About 1868 he began to deal in cattle, and for ten years purchased stock in the midland counties of the State, and disposed of them mostly at a home market.

Mr. Bliven began life with little of this world's goods, but with willing hands, resolution, and honest purposes he has gradually, by economy, secured a fair competency, adding to his first purchase a 25-acre lot across the road from his residence, and also some 75 acres of land near by. He has taken an active part in the Presbyterian Church at Scotchtown as a member, and many years ago he was influential and active in the suppression of the sale of intoxicating liquors in the locality.

Frank and unostentatious in his ways, Mr. Bliven has the confidence of his fellow-citizens, and is ever ready to do, commensurate with his means, for every worthy local work.

MOUNT HOPE.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

MOUNT HOPE is one of the western towns of the county. It is bounded north by Sullivan County and the town of Wallkill, east by Wallkill, south by Wayanda and Greenville, west by Deerpark. The acreage of the town, as given in the last equalization table of the supervisors, is 16,204 acres. The assessed valuation of the town was $673,470, and the tax paid upon that basis was $5157.79.

The town lies wholly north of the old county line that originally divided Orange from Ulster. For the title to the soil we refer to the patents, fully explained elsewhere.

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

The most important points in the topography of Mount Hope are the Shawangunk Mountains and the Shawangunk River. The former occupy the western portion, extending from southeast to northwest, and the latter flows in the same direction along the base of the mountains, and nearly parallel to them. The highest summits are 1400 to 1800 feet above tide-water. The Little Shawangunk rises in this town in part, and flows for a short distance near and along the east boundary. There are several small branches of the Shawangunk, mostly from the northwest, draining the long beautiful slopes of the Shawangunk Mountains.

The geological features of the town are worthy of study. The deposit of minerals is rich, and has given rise to very many mining enterprises, some of the more important of which are mentioned below. The eastern slopes of the Shawangunk Mountains are susceptible of tillage almost to the very summit, and at the present time the scenery combines much of the beauties of nature with the varied and charming features arising from cultivated farms adorned in many cases with handsome residences. In Eager's "History of Orange County" a somewhat doubtful opinion of the agricultural resources of Mount Hope appears in the close of the following passage. Thirty-five years of subsequent cultivation have doubtless modified the face of the country to a considerable degree:

"The Mount Hope portion of the old town is an exact diamond in shape, and among the least of her sisters. Its situation and physical character are ruled by the same laws which govern Deerpark, as it lies on the eastern slope of the mountain, shelving pretty suddenly down to the Shawangunk Creek. The location of the town and the bed of the creek are among the highest portions of the county. This fact is alluded to in the name borrowed, as we suppose, from the older village of Mount Hope, and expresses a high location and a mind buoyant and hopeful.

"... The Shawangunk Kill, here a small stream, runs through the whole length of the town from south to north, and is the only one worth mentioning. This town may be considered hard to till, and not very productive in grains under any state of husbandry. The spots which have the benefit of mountain wash may be excepted, still the culture of stock and its produce in various ways must in the nature of things in this climate be the most advantageous husbandry. A shepherd will thrive better than a horticulturist."

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

As this town is a modern organization, its settlement is largely blended with that of the towns from which it was taken, Deerpark and Wallkill. In the early proceedings of Wallkill Precinct (1772 to 1780), in several military rolls given elsewhere, and in lists of names in the chapters upon Deerpark, will be found many of the early families who entered upon the present territory of Mount Hope and made for themselves homes within its limits. The several papers given, as above stated, undoubtedly contain the name of nearly every settler prior to the Revolution. At Finchville and in that neighborhood was made an early settlement. The general accounts do not locate the pioneer Finch there until 1773. There were others earlier.

Jasper Writer was from Germany. On arriving in this country, then a minor, he landed at Philadelphia, and lived until he was of age in the family of a Mr. Depuy. Arriving at his majority, he came to this section, and settled on the farm where John H. Writer now lives. The wife of Jasper Writer was Eve Kortright. As to the time when he made a settlement here the family traditions are very clear but not decisive. It was understood that he was over one hundred years old at the time of his death, though how much over that was not known. He died Nov. 15, 1842. Supposing him to be one hundred, that would leave seventy-nine years of residence here, and carry the date of his settlement back to 1763; if over one hundred, it would make the settlement still earlier. His wife, Eve Kortright, was from Phillipsburgh; she died Dec. 31, 1830. The children of this pioneer were Aaron, who was born April 25, 1776, and settled on a part of his father's estate; Jasper, Jr., who remained on the old homestead; John, who moved to Pennsylvania and died near Honesdale; Margaret, who became Mrs. Rundle, and after his death Mrs. Wagoner; Nancy, who married Joel Rundle, of Greenville; Elizabeth, who married John Van Tuyl, of Greenville; Rebecca, who married Daniel Van Tuyl and settled at Pond Eddy; Eleanor, who married John McKeeby. Aaron Writer, above mentioned, had fourteen children, among them Aaron K., father of Dr. Theodore Writer, of Otisville.

Among other early settlers of this section of country was Ashbel Cadwell. His wife, Sylva Stevens, was one of those who escaped from Wyoming at the time of the massacre and went through the forest on foot to Connecticut. After Mr. Cadwell's death she became the wife of John Seybolt. A son of Ashbel Cadwell was Elisha Cadwell. Harvey R. Cadwell, a son of Elisha, resides at Otisville, and to him we are indebted for many items in this chapter.

Another early settler was Rufus Stanton. He first settled a mile from Finchville, near where Edward Force now lives. He afterwards moved to Finchville, and his homestead was the large brown house standing near Mr. Moore's. His children were Joseph (now living at Finchville, at the age of eighty-seven), Samuel, Nathaniel, Jonathan, and Mrs. Ezra Hoyt. It was probably before James Finch came to Mount Hope that Stanton settled there, though, as in many other cases, family tradition has not preserved the exact date.

Israel Green, mentioned in the chapter upon Wallkill, settled at an early day on the site of Middletown. His descendants state that he gave the land for the site of the Congregational church* and for their burial-place, on the express condition that it should remain a burial-place forever,—a contract which they claim could not be impaired even by a legislative enactment. His children were Orange, who settled in Michigan; Nathaniel, who lived at Otisville, and afterwards in Sullivan County; and there was one daughter. Osmer B. Green, the proprietor of the hotel at Otisville, is a son of Nathaniel.

Daniel Green, a brother of the pioneer Israel, settled not far from Finchville.

William Shaw was a settler in Mount Hope, not far from Howell's, before the Revolution, probably for some years. His homestead is now owned by a descendant, Oscar Shaw. His children were John, William, Robert, Alexander, Henry, and Mrs. Benjamin Woodward.

Benjamin Woodward, Esq., was one of the early patrons of Mount Hope village, and did business there, and, with Benjamin Dodge, Esq., was instrumental in originating and carrying forward all those little acts and appliances, difficult to be told, though of yearly necessity, which give animation and growth to such a place. This gentleman was of an enterprising turn of mind, and took a deep interest in the improvements of the town, which brought him early into public notice, both at home and abroad. Having the confidence of the people, and being of the Democratic party, he was honored with the station of State senator, which he held for two terms.

Benjamin Dodge and Stephen St. John were also alike beneficial, enterprising men at this locality for many years, and well deserve the grateful remembrance of its citizens.

John Finch, the first immigrant, came from Horse-neck, Conn., and settled at Goshen, and the family tradition is that he was the first grown person buried in the graveyard of the Goshen Church, some children having been previously buried there.

His son, James Finch, Sr., was born there, and married to Miss Catharine Gale by Rev. Mr. Kerr. James removed and located on land now covered by the site of the village of Middletown, in the town of Wallkill. At this time there were but three log houses besides his within a mile of the place. Shortly before the Revolutionary war he removed to the vicinity of Finchville. When Pennpack was invaded and burnt by the Indians under Brant, many of the women and children fled from there to his house for protection. Among others was Mrs. Decker, the wife of Maj. Decker, who came leading her small children by the hand. She had fled from her bed, after retiring for the night, clad in garments which scarcely covered her person. The only article which she saved from the conflagration of her dwelling was the family Bible, which she carried under her arm.

Mr. Finch, though living in the vicinity, was not in the battle of Minisink. The reason was Cols. Phillips and Wisner, with their troops, while on their march to Minisink, halted at his house to refresh themselves and procure something to eat. At the time there were nothing but salted provisions in the house, and Finch killed a large fat hog and prepared it for the troops.* After they had eaten, the residue was placed in the knapsacks of the soldiers for further use. Col. Phillips directed that Finch should not go with them, but stay at home and make ready to feed his men when they should shortly return. But, alas! how many of his friends and neighbors, who that day partook of his hospitality, never returned from the field of battle to share his kindness or need his care.

Mr. Finch during the Revolution performed military duty three months, and also during the old French and Indian war in 1755 and 1756. When quite young he was at Fort Stanwix in the capacity of waiter to Gen. Abercrombie or some of his staff. He lived and died a patriot, and a member of the Baptist Church, having acted as a deacon for many years.

James Finch, Jr., his son, of a later generation, was born July 25, 1768. He was well known, both at home and abroad. He came into public life when young, and held the office of justice of the peace from about 1798 to 1830, excepting the time he acted as judge of the county. In 1831, Coe Finch, his son, was elected a justice of the peace in his place. He held the supervisorship of his town for twelve years in succession, and served as a member in the State Legislature thirteen sessions. Early in life he became a member of the Baptist Church, and died in the faith of his fathers on Dec. 7, 1843, aged seventy-five years. He married in 1794, and had ten children, nine of whom lived to be twenty-four years of age. We give a copy of the family record:

Benjamin Woodward, mentioned above, was the son of Hezekiah Woodward, Jr. The latter, with his father, Hezekiah Woodward, Sr., moved to this town from Stonington, Conn., in the year 1773 or '74. This was not far from the same time as the settlement of James Finch. Benjamin Woodward was born Feb. 28, 1780. His talents brought him early into public notice. He was a member of the Legislature in 1814-15, 1820-21, and in 1826. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1821, and also a State senator 1827-30. His son, Charles S. Woodward, was chosen supervisor in 1862, and a member of the Legislature of 1863-64.

Joshua Corwin was probably in Mount Hope before the Revolution. He was from Southold, Long Island. He purchased a tract of considerable extent and settled his sons upon it. His children were Joseph, Abner, Joshua, David, John, Peter, Anna, Jemima, Benjamin, the last named by a second wife. The homestead of the son Joshua was the place now owned by Silas G. Corwin. He also had one son by the name of Joshua, who was the father of Selah R. Corwin, of Middletown. Joshua the pioneer was born March 25, 1733, or 1735, Joshua the second was born March 6, 1756, and Joshua the third, Oct. 19, 1785.

Jacob Wiggins settled at Mount Hope soon after the Revolution. The homestead was about two miles south of Otisville, now the Writer place in part, though a great-grandson owns a portion of his ancestor's farm. Jacob Wiggins had three sons, William, Jacob, Benjamin. William succeeded to the homestead, Benjamin went West, and Jacob became a merchant at what is now Otisville, where he traded about 1810, 1811, 1812. A son of Jacob, Abraham B. Wiggins, resides near Unionville, but over the line in New Jersey. John Wiggins, a descendant of William, resides at Otisville.

In the original family were three daughters, who respectively became Mrs. David Slauson, of Minisink; Mrs. Zachary Young, of Mount Hope; and Mrs. Wm. Young, of Mount Hope.

TOWN OFFICERS OF 1825.

The officers named at the first town-meeting are given under the head of "Organization." The following memorandum as to their locations will be interesting, though it was at a date only forty-five years ago. Joseph Conklin, at whose house the first town-meeting was held, kept the house now known as Green's Hotel, at Otisville. Joseph Chattle lived at Mount Hope village, now the place of Mrs. Beekman. Stephen Farnum's place was the present farm of M. M. Writer. John King lived on the road to New Vernon, where his son, John D. King, now resides. Hezekiah Woodward's place was the present farm of Halsey W. Mapes, southeast of Mount Hope village. William Coleman (4) lived near, or in Mount Hope village. It is said that there were actually four William Colemans, not junior not senior, and therefore to be designated by numbers. Freegift T. Boyd lived in the southeast part of the town, on the present place of Mary Graham. Barney Horton's farm was the one now occupied by Mr.

* E. F. Bailey states that his grandfather at least had salt pork in his haversack taken from home.

Nathaniel Stanton's place was the one now owned by Thodore Moore at Finchville. Eleazer Harding's farm was the present Gillis place, about a mile from Otisville. This locates all of the town officers except Samuel Beyea, Jr., Samuel J. Corwin, Elijah Banister, and Ebenezer Hoyt.

PHYSICIANS.

An early doctor in this section was Dr. Newkirk, of Mount Hope village. Dr. Lummis was at Otisville quite early. Both these men practiced during a long period,—from 1800 or 1805 to 1835 or 1836. Dr. Cook, yet in practice at Otisville, is a native of Belchertown, Hampshire Co., Mass. When about twenty years of age he came to this county, arriving here April 27, 1827. He taught school for several years, and during that time studied medicine, mostly with Dr. Gabriel S. Corwin, of Bloomingburgh, Sullivan Co. He opened an office at Otisville in 1834, and has spent nearly half a century in the practice of his profession.

At Mount Hope, Dr. Wm. C. Terry was the successor of Dr. Newkirk, and continued in practice until his death. He was succeeded by Dr. McBride, who also died after a few years.

Dr. Newton also practiced at Mount Hope, and died there. Dr. Whitaker settled at Mount Hope for a time and then removed to Unionville, in Minisink. Dr. Graham was contemporary with Dr. Terry at Mount Hope.

The present (1880) physicians of the town are Dr. Cook, Dr. Writer, and Mrs. E. S. Plumb, as shown by the registry. Dr. Putney, though practicing to some extent in the town, resides at Howell's, in the town of Wallkill.

LAWYERS.

Several gentlemen have done legal business in this town from time to time. Joseph Chattle, at Mount Hope, practiced law for thirty or forty years. Coe G. Bradner, who resided between Mount Hope and Otisville, was also a practicing attorney for quite a number of years. Samuel Vanton opened an office here, but after a few years went West. George Wiggins died after practicing law a short time. John L. Wiggins, a lawyer of Mount Hope, afterwards settled at Chillicothe, Ohio. The present legal business, including legal writing, is done by John Wiggins, Esq., and by Mr. Durland.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

The act of the Legislature incorporating this town was passed in 1825. The territory comprised portions of Wallkill and Deerpark. The new town was first named Calhoun in honor of the distinguished senator, John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina.

His views, policy, and patriotic course as secretary of war during the contest with Great Britain, in 1812, had rendered him very popular with the people of this section; but in the nullification discussions of 1831 and '32, a sudden revulsion of public opinion took place, and the people were as anxious to discard the name as they had been eager to adopt it seven years before. A public meeting was called and the name of Mount Hope adopted. A petition was sent to the Legislature, and the following law ratified the action of the citizens:

"CHAPTER 63.—An Act to alter the name of the town of Calhoun. Passed March 14, 1833.

"The people of the State of New York represented in Senate and Assembly do enact as follows:

"Sec. 1. From the passage of this act the town of Calhoun, in the County of Orange, shall be known and distinguished by the name of the town of Mount Hope."

Like several other towns in this county, the records of the town clerk's office are very meagre, as the books were destroyed by fire in 1848. Fortunately, the first town meeting was recorded in the books of Deerpark, and can, therefore, be given in full as follows:

"Proceedings of the freeholders and inhabitants of the town of Calhoun, in the county of Orange, at their first town-meeting at the house of Joseph Conklin in said town, on Tuesday, the 5th day of April, 1825. Joseph Chattle and Richard Penny, Justices of the Peace, present.

"Resolved, That thirty-five dollars be taxed on the town for supporting bridges for the ensuing year.

"Resolved, That there shall be four constables in said town for the year ensuing the date hereof.

"Resolved, That the collector's fee shall be three per cent.

"Officers elected by uplifted hands: Fire-Masters, Nathaniel Stanton, Eleazer Harding, Thomas Wheat, Stephen Farnum, Henry Coleman, Samuel Beyea, Jr.; Fence-Viewers, Isaac Corwin, Andrew Crawford, Cornelius Newkirk, Elisha Reeve, Jr.; Highway-Masters as follows:

V.—VILLAGES.

MOUNT HOPE VILLAGE

is situated in the southeastern part of the town. It was so named many years before the town was organized.

* Mr. Corwin died Aug. 5, 1880, the same day that the record of his long service was being compiled by the writer in the office of the town clerk.

ized, and the latter derives its name from the village. It is on elevated ground, and from various points there are charming views of the surrounding country.

For many years this village did a brisk lumber business, and large quantities of shingles were bought of the individual makers in the forests round about the place and sold to dealers abroad. This industry declined in later years. The village was founded by Benjamin Woodward and Dr. Benjamin B. Newkirk on the 8th day of May, 1807. They raised the frames of their dwellings at that date. At the conclusion of this old-fashioned "raising," amid something of the hilarity of those times, James Finch, Sr., called the assembled company to order, and in an appropriate speech bestowed the name Mount Hope upon the village thus founded. Among early residents, Benjamin Dodge and Stephen St. John were prominent business men, and greatly promoted the prosperity of the village. In modern times there is but little business here. There is a hotel by A. J. Mills, a general country store by J. H. Jeffries, and blacksmithing by Mr. Hatch.

Of Mr. A. J. Mills we obtain the following: "His grandfather, Ebenezer Mills, of Mills' Pond, L. I., was born Aug. 3, 1759. He came to Orange County in 1786, and was fourteen days making the passage by a sloop from Long Island to Cornwall. He settled near Middletown and married Abigail Vail, twin sister of Isaiah Vail. He soon after moved to the Francis Hughes farm near by, but a little later bought the Monhagen Lake farm, where he spent the rest of his life, dying in 1829. His children were Isaac (father of A. J. Mills, the Mount Hope Hotel landlord); Henry P., who settled in Minisink, but afterwards removed to Onondaga County; Isaiah, who lived in Mount Hope; Samuel, who removed to Indiana; and Sally, who became Mrs. J. C. Coleman, of Goshen, and later removed to Allegany County; Phebe, who became Mrs. Wallace, of Onondaga County; and William, who settled in Walkill."

The Mount Hope Hotel was built in 1807 by Benjamin Woodward. It was the first house in Orange County to burn coal. Mr. Woodward kept it for many years, and was succeeded by his son, Charles Woodward, for a few years; subsequent proprietors were Thomas King and Leman Stiles. A. J. Mills took possession of the property, Jan. 8, 1849, and has kept the house ever since. It is a rather unusual circumstance that Benjamin Woodward, one proprietor, served two years in the Legislature; Charles Woodward, two years; and A. J. Mills, two years; three landlords from the same house of equal service at Albany. Mr. Mills is very clear in his recollection of names and dates, and can give them with precision and accuracy. He gives a rare instance of testimony. Daniel Skinner, in a lawsuit held in the hotel of Mr. Green, at Otisville, gave evidence relating to events ninety years before. Mr. Skinner was one hundred and three or one hundred and four years old at the time.

may be described as the principal village in the town, located near the western line, and a little north of the centre. It is a station upon the Erie Railway, and just west of this place that route makes its sharp southern detour to reach Port Jervis. The location is pleasant, and some of the lands in the immediate vicinity are of excellent quality for agricultural purposes. The name is from Isaac Otis,* who settled at this place, carried on an extensive mercantile business with other enterprises, and gave an impulse to the growth of the village. The present business may be briefly stated as follows: The Blizzard House, kept by L. N. Dix; the old hotel kept by O. B. Green; Joel Northrop, general merchandise; A. W. Dodge, groceries; Dr. A. Cook, practicing physician and druggist; Albert Ketcham, post-office and groceries; Dr. Theodore Writer, practicing physician and keeping a drug-store; Charles H. Wiggins, merchant tailor; Mrs. Plumb, a practicing physician, and keeping a drug-store; Reed & Smith, general merchandise, also dealers in grain, feed, coal, lumber; James S. Eaton, general merchandise, also dealing in grain, feed, lumber; William H. Smith, restaurant; J. Van Duzer, stoves and tin; Joel Northrup, meat-market; Ralph Elston, bakery and groceries; Mrs. Wilkin, millinery, boots and shoes; A. Kniffen, harness-shop; Asa J. Ogden and William H. Hall, blacksmiths; Anderson Holley, wagon-shop, making and repairing; and the freight and passenger buildings of the Erie Railroad.

A public school with two departments is maintained, Harvey Clark principal, and Mrs. Frank Hill assistant.

Dr. Cook states that when he began to practice there was one store and tavern kept by Galen Otis. Not long after, Thomas King opened a similar establishment, combining trade and entertainment. Corwin & Tryon were afterwards in trade for some years.

The post-office at Otisville was established in 1819, and Isaac Otis was the first postmaster. He held it for about five years, and was succeeded by Galen Otis for about the same time. Other incumbents since then have been Elisha Cadwell, about two years; Charles Conkling; Ferdinand Seybolt; Alsop

* Isaac Otis was of Puritan descent, and resided in early life in Massachusetts, where he married the daughter of Capt. Oliver Smith, of Walpole. He removed to Orange County in 1816, and established a country store, around which other buildings clustered, and to which a post-office was given under the title of Otisville. Mr. Otis removed to Philadelphia in 1831, where he served as a member of the Common Council from 1835 to 1849. In 1841 he was appointed by President Harrison marshal of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, and held the office two years. In 1851 he removed to New York, where he became the head of the firm of Otis & Co., and also served as president of the Hanover Bank. He retired from that position in 1853, and was instrumental in founding the Atlantic Bank, of which he became president. He died in Boston.

W. Dodge, for seven years, until 1871; Harrison Reed, until Feb. 17, 1879; and the present incumbent, A. J. Ketcham.

NEW VERNON

is situated upon the north line of the town, and is partly in Sullivan County.

FINCHVILLE

is a hamlet in the southwest part of the town. It is named in honor of John Finch, the first immigrant of that name to this section of country, and in honor of his descendants, many of whom have been prominent citizens in this vicinity. The hamlet is situated at the eastern base of the Shawangunk Mountains. In later years it can hardly be described as a village, as there are no stores there at the present time and no hotel. The neighborhood is somewhat noted as the place to which many persons fled from the Mamakating Valley during the Indian troubles. The names of Finch and Finchville are very common in the ancient annals.

is situated on the western slope of the Shawangunk Mountains, and is a station on the Erie Railroad. It also has a post-office. There is much fine scenery in the vicinity, and the place is something of a resort for picnic parties and pleasure excursions, as well as for more permanent summer boarders. The name is the old French form of the family name Gumaer. The post-office was established July 1, 1866. Peter L. Gumaer was appointed postmaster, and has retained the office to the present time (1880). The village owes its existence principally to the discovery of lead on the lands of the Gumaer Brothers, situated on the west side of the Shawangunk Mountains, and near the line of Deerpark. The lead was first found while building a road from the old turnpike to Gumaer's, on the canal. The Erie mine, the most important in this section, being at the immediate site of Guymard, secured a rapid growth to the village, very soon including stores, hotels, shops, and private residences.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

The town books having been destroyed by fire, it is not possible to give the names of the school commissioners and inspectors from 1823 to 1843, during which time the schools were under that method of supervision.* From the records we only have the town superintendents from 1850 to 1856, viz.: 1850, Wm. C. Terry; 1851, Avery Cook; 1853, Charles B. Halstead; 1855, Nelson Newton.

The office of this last incumbent was terminated by the new law authorizing district commissioners, which took effect in June, 1856.

Dr. Cook mentions as other teachers, cotemporary

* In the records of Wallkill and Deerpark, given elsewhere, the names of school officers upon the territory of Mount Hope between 1813 and 1825 will be found.

with himself in that field, John Whiting, Corwin Swezey, Harvey Taylor, and Hiram Shons.

VII.—CHURCHES.

THE OLD-SCHOOL BAPTIST CHURCH, NEW VERNON.

The following sketch of this society was furnished by the late Elder Gilbert Beebe, its pastor for about fifty-five years:

The Old-School Baptist Church at New Vernon, N. Y., was constituted under the ministry of Elder Ebenezer West in 1785. The constituent members, 16 in number, viz.: Elder Ebenezer West, Richard West, Wm. Smith, Jedediah Fuller, Solomon Wheat, Asa Worden, John Harding, David Smith, Wm. Patterson, Lydia King, Keziah Jillett, Abigail Smith, Elizabeth Godfrey, Dealia Rogers, Anna King, Rhoda Harding.

Elder Ebenezer West held the pastoral care of this church until his death, which occurred in October, 1793. Soon after the death of Elder West, Elder Benjamin Montanya succeeded him, and held the pastorate of the church thirty-three years, and until his death, which occurred Dec. 25, 1825. In May following, viz., 1826, Elder Gilbert Beebe was called to the pastoral care, and he held the position almost fifty-five years.

In about the year 1800 the first church-house was built, and called the Deerpark Baptist Church, located very near the line which divides Orange and Sullivan Counties, and what is now the towns of Mount Hope and Mamakating. This was a frame house, built in ancient style, with galleries on three sides, and a capacity to seat from 300 to 400 persons.

A new frame house was erected by the church, near the site of the old one, about twenty-five years ago, of about the same capacity. In the rear and east side of this house the church has a large cemetery, in which many of the first settlers of the vicinity are buried. The church now numbers 85 members,—Gilbert Beebe, pastor; John C. Harding, Samuel Jordan, Samuel B. Beyea, deacons.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH AT WALLKILL AND DEERPARK PATENT effected a legal organization May 14, 1810. Erastus Mapes and David Corwin signed the proceedings as inspectors of the election. The meeting was held at the school-house in which said church usually met, and the trustees chosen were David Corwin, Selah Mapes, and Jonathan Coleman. This was the old church at the place known as Mapestown. There was a comfortable house of worship, and services were maintained for many years. At a later period it was deemed necessary to file a new certificate, probably because the names Wallkill and Deerpark were no longer applicable to this town. The new incorporation was under the name of "The Congregational Church of Mount Hope," July 6, 1847. The proceedings were signed by Erastus Mapes and Amzi Mapes. The trustees chosen were Daniel Mapes, James Bell, and Isaac Davis. Not long after this renewed organization it was deemed best to remove to Howell's, a station upon the Erie Railroad not far away. (See churches of Walkkill.)

had its origin in the last century. On March 25, 1770, Oliver Delancy, Esq., of the city of New York, executed a deed or perpetual lease, conveying to Messrs. W. Gillett, David Smith, and Simeon Marsh fifty acres of land lying in the town of Deerpark, to be held in trust for the use of a Protestant minister, "who must be elected and chosen by the tenants and freeholders for the time being residing in said town, to do divine service and preach the word of God among them." March 2, 1771, David Johnston, Esq., also of New York, executed a deed, conveying to the same persons in trust, for the same purpose and on the same terms, twenty-five acres of land lying next to the previous lot. This land lay near the locality long known as Otis' Factory. There was at that time no regular Presbyterian Church in the town of Deerpark. Two congregations, however, assembled regularly for religious worship. One was of the Baptist communion, and was served by Rev. Eleazer West. The other held services and had occasional preaching at the house of Elijah Reeve, a large stone house near Otis' Factory, recently removed. After the close of the war of the Revolution a law was passed by the Legislature of New York, April 20, 1784, enabling congregations to incorporate. In accordance with this, Feb. 9, 1785, the congregation worshipping at the house of Elijah Reeve met, and were regularly incorporated by the election of the following six trustees, viz.: David Smith, Sr., Joshua Corwin, Sr., Joseph Smith, John Ketcham, William Shaw, William Rose. They assumed the corporate name of "The Trustees of the First Presbyterian Church in Deerpark." Steps were at once taken to secure possession of the land conveyed by the deeds of Messrs. Delancy and Johnston. It was occupied by Mr. West. But as the Baptists had failed to secure an organization, after some arbitration and the payment to Mr. West of ten pounds as remuneration for improvements made by him, the land was yielded to the trustees of the organized body. A portion of it was used for a time as a place of burial, but no building was erected thereon. After this, upon application by Messrs. Thomas White and Wm. Shaw, Lewis A. Scott, Esq., of New York, gave the promise of a deed for five acres of land on "The Plains," near the present village of Otisville, for the erection of a house of worship and other church purposes. The deed for this land was given ten years afterwards, in March, 1795, by the executors of Mr. Scott, and conveyed a clear title to the trustees of the church. A portion of the lot had in the mean time been fenced in and used as a place for burial, and the whole of it is now used for that purpose, and known as the "Mount Hope Cemetery."

It was not, however, till 1791 that a house of worship was erected on this land. It was built under a subscription-paper headed "For a Presbyterian Congregational Meeting-house." The house was not finished for several years. This building was a very plain structure, about fifty feet square, with lofty pulpit and high-backed seats, and without paint. It was used for purposes of worship more than forty years, until about 1835, when it was removed from the ground and put to other uses.

In the mean time there had been a large removal of Presbyterians to Mount Hope, mostly from Long Island. Rev. Mr. Kerr, of Goshen, preached occasionally for the congregation. The church as yet, so far as is known, had only a civil existence. Just when its first board of elders was elected is not known, as the first book of records of Session cannot be found. The question of the ecclesiastical connection of the church was settled Sept. 3, 1792, when by a large majority of votes the congregation resolved to join the Presbytery of New York. A considerable portion of the people had a strong preference for Morristown Presbytery or Platform, the latter body being an association chiefly of Congregationalists. It is probable that about this time the first elders were elected, William Shaw, William Rose. These matters disposed of, the congregation, April 1, 1793, made a "call" upon Rev. Jonathan Freeman, then of Hope-well, to become their pastor for one-third of his time. Mr. Freeman accepted, and was installed the first pastor of the church, Aug. 29, 1793, by a committee of the Presbytery of New York, consisting of Revs. Kerr, Close, and King, and Elder Reuben Hopkins. His pastorate was not successful. Contending elements existed in the church. The Congregationalists had become a well-defined party and claimed the property. Appeal was made to the courts, which confirmed the title in the trustees of the Presbyterian Church, after which the Congregational element drew off and formed the church now worshipping at Howell's.† The pastoral relation of Mr. Freeman was dissolved by Presbytery April 19, 1797.

In 1801 the Rev. Mr. Baldwin, for many years the pastor of the church at Scotchtown, served the Mount Hope Church a part of his time. June 10, 1803, Rev. Benjamin Prime became pastor of the church, preaching three-fourths of his time. After several years the relation was dissolved. Mr. Prime resided in the community until his death, June 25, 1823.

During this period the church languished, having only 17 members. Three persons were now elected to the eldership, who served the church long and faithfully in that office. They were Alexander Bodle, Marshal Stigney, and John Boyd. But a brighter day was now to dawn upon the hitherto struggling church. Oct. 2, 1816, Rev. William Blain was installed its pastor. He preached also a part of his time at Ridgebury. Mr. Blain was the first student who entered the theological seminary at Princeton. Under his effective ministry the church enjoyed its first revival of religion, resulting in large additions to the membership. After six years of successful labor, in 1822, Mr. Blain accepted a call to the church at Middletown. When he left the Mount Hope Church it was united and strong, with a membership of 117. Four elders were added to the Session during his pastorate, viz.: Joshua Penny, William S. Little, David Swezey, and Abijah Norris. Mr. Blain was a man of high character as a preacher and pastor, and after leaving Middletown was for many years pastor of the ancient church of Goodwill. During the two years following Mr. Blain's removal, Rev. Thomas Grier, of Westtown, acted as stated supply for one-half his time.

In 1824, Rev. Edwin Downer, a young man from New Jersey, became pastor. He remained four years, in which time there were 17 additions to the church. Failing health compelled him to relinquish the charge Oct. 22, 1828. He continued to reside many years in the bounds of the congregation, but at length removed to Westfield, N. J., his native place. He died May 31, 1868, in the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church of that place, just as he was commencing service. Following him, for a short time, Rev. James Russel acted as stated supply, but declined to become the pastor.

In 1829, Rev. Sylvester Swezey became stated supply of the church. By his efforts the Congregational Church, which years since had gone out from the congregation, were induced to unite with them in the support of one pastor. The two congregations worshiped together, as Mr. Swezey preached alternately in the church on the "Plains" and the building of the Congregationalists, long known as the "Yellow Church," near the village of Mount Hope. The union seems to have been a happy one, and during this time the church enjoyed its second revival of religion, resulting in the addition of 57 persons to its communion. This union ceased when Mr. Swezey left, in the spring of 1833. He was soon succeeded by Rev. Andrew Thompson, who had been serving the churches of Nyack and Greenbush, in Rockland County. As early as 1811 the tract of 75 acres deeded to the church by Messrs. Delancy and Johnson was sold, under an order granted by the chancellor of the State, and the money placed at interest. With these funds a parsonage was purchased in the spring of 1833, consisting of a comfortable house and 25 acres of land, lying near the village of Mount Hope. This was first occupied by Mr. Thompson. With his coming the subject of the erection of a new house of worship was discussed. The village of Mount Hope had now grown to be a thriving place of considerable business importance, and here the congregation decided, not without strong opposition, to erect its new building. It was a neat edifice, 70 by 45 feet, with spire, and sittings for over 400 people, built at a cost of $4000. The building was the exact counterpart of the then new house of worship at Montgomery, in this county. It was finished and dedicated early in 1835, when the old church on the Plains was abandoned. After a successful pastorate of five years Mr. Thompson died, Feb. 27, 1838, and was buried upon the Plains. He was a man of thorough culture and high character as a preacher, and left his impress upon both the church and the community. He was the father of A. P. Thompson, now of Port Jervis.

He was succeeded by Rev. W. G. Johnston, a Scotchman, who was installed pastor in 1839. He remained about two years. For two years following there was no pastor, until May 3, 1842, when Rev. Edward B. Edgar, who had accepted a call, was installed. Under his labors the church assumed a higher position. Regular contributions to the great missionary enterprises were commenced; the interests of the Sabbath-school were advanced; the church grew stronger in piety and influence. Thirty-six persons were added to the membership during his pastorate of eight years. Amid the general regrets of the people, Mr. Edgar left early in 1850 to become pastor of the church in Westfield, N. J., where for twenty-two years he labored successfully. He is now living without charge at Plainfield, N. J.

His immediate successor was the present pastor, Rev. Luther Littell, who came to the congregation a young man, direct from the theological seminary at Princeton. He was ordained and installed pastor of the church by the Presbytery of Hudson, Sept. 25, 1850. During the thirty years of this pastorate there have been five seasons of special religious interest, resulting in additions to the church varying from 10 to 60 persons. The Sabbath-school grew to more than double its former number, and the yearly contributions to religious and benevolent objects were much increased. In these years, at various times, the congregation has expended over $1500 in renovating their house of worship. On May 2, 1864, by act of the Legislature, the corporate name of the church was changed from the "First Presbyterian Church of Deerpark" to the "First Presbyterian Church of Mount Hope." Such change seemed desirable, as, by changes in the towns, the church had long been miles away from the boundaries of the town of Deerpark. Also, in the spring of 1867, by order of the court, the recent parsonage premises were sold, and a more convenient and spacious house, with four acres of land, lying near the church in the village, was purchased at an additional cost to the congregation of $1000. During this period of thirty years there have been 229 additions to the church. But, as in all our rural churches during these years, there has been a heavy drain upon the membership of this church by death and removal of families to railway villages, so that the membership of 160 a few years since has now declined to 120. During the last two pastorates the following persons were chosen to the eldership, viz.: John K. Davis, Barna Horton, Robert Thorn, Joshua Corwin, Daniel T. Boyd, A. W. Mapes, J. W. Canfield. Some of these persons are deceased, others have removed to other churches. At present the officers are as follows: Pastor, Rev. Luther Littell; Elders, John K. Davis, Daniel T. Boyd, Alsop W. Mapes; Trustees, Charles Mapes, John Borland, Danl. T. Boyd, Theodore Moore, Isaac E. Ketcham.*

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF OTISVILLE

executed a certificate of incorporation Aug. 7, 1848. The proceedings were signed by Richard Van Horn and Ferdinand Seybolt. The trustees chosen were Ferdinand Seybolt, Russel R. Smith, John K. Seybolt, Algernon S. Dodge, and Samuel K. Wheat. The meeting was at the house of Ferdinand Seybolt, there being then no house of worship. The society subsequently erected a comfortable church edifice, and has maintained services steadily since that time.

The more active founders of the church were Joseph Ketcham, Mrs. Dr. Cook, Mrs. Sidney Dodge, Mrs. Smith Loomis, William A. Brown, Elisha Holsapple, and others. Early ministers, preaching here before the house was built, were Rev. Mr. Reed and Rev. Mr. Vandewater. Rev. Fletcher Loomis was here when the house was erected. The present organization (November, 1880) consists of Rev. R. B. Lockwood, pastor; W. F. Dewitt, local preacher and class-leader; O. B. Tyrrell, Wm. Wood, Harrison King, J. Vanduser, Samuel K. Wheat; Trustees, Charles T. Wheat, James Cranse, O. B. Tyrrell, John D. King, Wm. Wood. Mr. Dewitt has been in the ministry about forty years, and has resided here twenty-five years, doing a large amount of Christian work in connection with this church.

THE FINCHVILLE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH was duly incorporated July 3, 1850. The certificate was signed by Walter Chamberlain and Samuel S. Ketcham. The trustees named therein were Ferdinand Seybolt, Samuel S. Ketcham, Jasper N. Writer, Joseph Ketcham, Chauncey L. Ketcham. This church was located in the south part of the town, and maintained services for some years. After the congregation became too small to support a society at that point it was dissolved, the property sold, and the members mostly attend at Otisville.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF OTISVILLE effected a legal organization June 27, 1855. The proceedings were signed by Daniel G. Beyea and Benjamin W. Dunning. The trustees named in the certificate were William A. Gerow, A. Sidney Dodge, Dr. Avery Cook, John Mulock, James McBride, Daniel G. Beyea, and John N. Dunning.

The church was organized March 24, 1855, by a committee of the Presbytery of Hudson, consisting of Messrs. Daniel T. Wood, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Middletown; O. M. Johnston, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Denton; and Augustus Seward, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Port Jervis, together with George M. Newman and Moses Sawyer, elders in the Denton Church. The following persons united with the church at its organization, namely: Mrs. Pamela Cook, wife of Dr. Cook; Mrs. Sarah Ann Dodge, wife of A. S. Dodge, Esq.; Mrs. Kezia Dunning, wife of B. W. Dunning, Esq.; Mrs. Sophia Gerow, wife of Wm. A. Gerow, Esq.; Mrs. Esther E. McBride, wife of James McBride, Esq.; Mrs. Frances Loomis, wife of Ephraim S. Loomis, Esq.; Mrs. Charlotte Beyea, wife of Daniel G. Beyea, Esq., who presented letters of their membership in good standing in the Methodist Episcopal Church of the place, together with Benjamin W. Dunning, who made profession of faith. These eight persons constituted the First Presbyterian Church in Otisville.

The first elder elected was Benjamin W. Dunning.

On April 18th following the church was taken under the care of the Presbytery of Hudson.

A suitable house of worship was erected at a cost of over $5000, on a lot given for the purpose by Ephraim S. Loomis, Esq., on the west corner of Orchard and Main Streets. The building was completed, and Sept. 24, 1856, was dedicated to God for public worship.

The congregation had much to contend with during the first years of its history. A heavy debt rested upon it, the membership was small, it had no pastor to feed the flock, yet it increased steadily, and bravely met every discouragement until March, 1858, when Rev. Moses H. Wilder was invited to supply the pulpit for one year. During the next twelve months the Rev. Wm. W. Page supplied the pulpit also with ability. In December, 1862, the Rev. Wm. R. S. Betts accepted a call to become the pastor of the church; this office he discharged faithfully for three years, resigning April 18, 1865. Two years afterwards Rev. F. W. Farries was invited to preach as a supply for one year, at the end of which time he was called to be the pastor, which relationship continued until Feb. 1, 1871, when the pastoral relation was dissolved amid much regret of the congregation. Rev. R. H. Craig was then called to the pastorate of the church, May 1, 1871, which relationship is still maintained

* Upon the church history given above it should be remarked that the pastor appears to trace the same church organization that is given in part in the account of Howell's Congregational Church. (See Wallkill.) It seems that both claim the same origin, and that each is the legitimate successor of the one church of 1782. The old book, still preserved at Howell's, bears unmistakable evidence that the organization was Congregational at the outset, though it might have been somewhat Presbyterianized at a later period. There seems no better way than to let the two accounts stand as they are prepared. If they are in any respect conflicting, that very fact may lead both to the exact truth in the case.

by an affectionate people and a devoted pastor. A debt of $1500 resting on the church building was liquidated Jan. 1, 1870, and in 1874 the laudable enterprise of erecting a parsonage was entered upon with much zeal by the congregation. It was completed at a cost of $3000, and occupied in the following year, but with a debt of $1200 remaining. At the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the church this debt was all paid, the entire congregation subscribing liberally, even the children of the Sabbath-school being glad to take a part in the work.

Among the good friends of the church who have passed away stood the late Ephraim S. Loomis, Wm. A. Gerow, and S. A. Dodge.

The elders of the church at present are J. K. Austin, D. G. Beyea, A. L. Corwin, H. Willis, G. Beebe, and S. N. Gerow.

Two revivals of religion have taken place during the history of the church, one under the pastorate of Rev. F. W. Farries, in connection with the efforts of the evangelist, Mr. Parker, when about thirty persons united, chiefly on profession of faith; and the other in 1876, when the present pastor, Rev. R. H. Craig, received thirty-nine, nearly all on profession of faith.

A prosperous Sabbath-school is maintained in the church, taught by devoted teachers; the society is free of debt; the people are united; and altogether there is much to be hoped for in regard to the Presbyterian Church of Otisville.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH OF OTISVILLE,

a fine brick edifice, plain but substantial, was erected a few years since. It is not, however, an independent charge, but is connected to that of Middletown, and the priests from that congregation officiate at Otisville. The society, with wise forethought, secured a spacious lot just beyond the village, and have devoted a part of it to burial purposes. Quite a number of fine monuments have been erected. With their usual energy, the Catholic pastors will doubtless continue to improve these grounds and render them worthy of the sacred objects to which they are devoted. Father Brennan, of Port Jervis, began the work here, and the church was built about 1867. It will seat about 400. Fathers Riley, Gorman, and Clancy, of Middletown, have officiated here. A large Sunday-school has been steadily maintained. James Shields is an active layman, steadily looking after the interests of the church.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

Half a mile or more from Otisville to Mount Hope village is the old burial-place of the town. In later years it has been enlarged by the purchase of several acres, and the whole is in a very good state of preservation. It is referred to, in the history of the Mount Hope Presbyterian Church, as being located on the "Plains." Jeremiah Mulock, who died Dec. 24, 1802, aged ninety-one years, was the oldest of the pioneers buried here, and 1790 is the earliest date recorded on the ancient headstones.

The other principal burial-places are the following: A very old one in the woods, two miles or more from Otisville, on the road to New Vernon, and near the Whitlock place. This doubtless contains many graves of pioneers, all unmarked and nameless. There is another old burial-place above Finchville, on the side of the mountains. This is a tangled mass of bushes, but there are very early graves, and a careful search may discover valuable dates bearing on general or family history. There is also one in Mapestown, near where the old Congregational church stood.

The new cemetery at Howell's is over the line in Mount Hope.

At Otisville there is the Catholic burial-ground in connection with the church. There is also a beautiful private cemetery on the hill back of Otisville.

IX.—TOWN SOCIETIES, LIBRARIES, INCORPORATIONS, Etc.

An early Masonic lodge existed at Mount Hope village. The lodge-room was in the upper part of the school-house. Nathaniel Green, Eleazer Harding, Stephen W. Palmer, Benjamin Woodward, Benjamin Dodge, the Colemans, and others were connected with it. It went down under the excitement following the Morgan troubles, and no attempt has been made to revive it. In an old newspaper we find the following:

"MOUNT HOPE, May 20, 1852.

"St. John's day will be celebrated at Brother Henry Coleman's, in the village of Mount Hope."

THE FARMERS' LIBRARY

was incorporated Oct. 13, 1807. The meeting for organization was held at the house of Benjamin Woodward, and the trustees named in the instrument were Benjamin B. Newkirk, Benjamin Woodward, William Mulock, James Finch, Jr., Peter E. Gumaer, Daniel Green, William Shaw, Jr., Stephen Farnum, Peleg Pelton. The last-named person certified this paper before Judge John Steward. A library was established in pursuance of this certificate. Mr. Harvey R. Cadwell states that he obtained books there; that a valuable collection of historical works was kept; that his first reading of history was stimulated by those volumes. It is doubtless true that many young men shared in the educational influences of this early library. The attempt to sustain such a library of such books in this day in the same quiet country town might not prove complimentary to the present age. The old library lasted twenty or thirty years, but the books were finally scattered and the enterprise was discontinued.

THE WASHINGTON LEAD COMPANY was organized March 3, 1865. The capital stock was stated at $500,000, divided into 100,000 shares. The trustees named were John Wiggins, Henry A. Chopin, George Wiggins, and E. B. Brown. Their mines are located about a mile from Otisville, on the Erie Road. Two shafts were sunk about 60 feet deep, about 100 feet apart, and the drift about 180 feet. They found a good vein of lead, and a vein of zinc about five feet wide. The work was suspended because of the low price of lead and the general depression of mining interests, but no doubt exists that there is a valuable deposit of minerals at this point.

THE EMPIRE MINING COMPANY was founded about 1864. The mines were located about one and a half miles from Otisville, along the Erie Road, on the property of John Wiggins,—trustees, John Wiggins, A. W. Dodge, George Wiggins, E. B. Brown, and others. They sunk one shaft 105 feet, two others about 20 feet each, another about 25 feet. The vein found was abundant, and of excellent quality, yielding lead and zinc. The work was suspended for the same reasons that caused the closing of the Washington.

THE WALLKILL LEAD COMPANY

executed a certificate of incorporation Oct. 9, 1863. The capital was stated at $500,000, divided into 100,000 shares. The trustees named were Edward A. Quintard, Leverett E. Rice, George B. Satterlee, Livingston Satterlee. This was entirely by New York men. The mines were located about a mile north of Guymard. Considerable money was expended. Good lead ore was found, but the company ceased to work after a few years. Rumors of renewed operations arise occasionally, and it is understood the company is still in existence.

THE SAVOSS COPPER-MINE

is located about half a mile from Otisville, near the Erie Railroad, and just at the summit of the Shawangunk range. A shaft 80 feet deep was opened about 1864. A good vein of copper was found, but work was discontinued in a short time, and has never been resumed.

THE CHAMPION LEAD-MINING COMPANY was incorporated Aug. 19, 1864. The capital stock was declared to be fixed at $500,000, divided into 100,000 shares. The object was the mining and sale of lead and other minerals. The trustees named were Thomas T. Davis, Marvin Beeman, Ambrose W. Green, F. V. Booth, John T. Willis, Albert H. Hager, Thomas C. Robbins, John Eager, and James H. Gage.

THE NEW YORK CENTRAL MINING AND MINERAL COMPANY.

This association executed a certificate of incorporation Oct. 27, 1863. The objects were stated as "the mining of lead ores and other minerals, and vending the same unmanufactured or manufactured." The trustees named were Alanson Gillespie, of Goshen; Ambrose W. Green, of Otisville; Oliver Green, of Mount Hope; Roswell Plummer, Marvin Beeman, James P. Keeler, William A. Keeler, of Brooklyn; and Rufus H. Wood, of New York City. The capital stock was stated at 50,000 shares of $10 each.

THE MOUNT HOPE MINERAL COMPANY was incorporated by certificate executed Dec. 17, 1862. The place of business was declared to be "in the township of Mount Hope, and also in the city and county of New York." The objects were stated as "the mining of lead ores and other minerals, and vending the same manufactured and unmanufactured." The trustees named were Alfred McIntire and William Blauvelt, of New York City, and Josiah R. Sturgis, of Brooklyn. Their mines were on the top of the mountain, east of Guymard.

GUYMARD SILVER-LEAD COMPANY

executed a certificate of incorporation Jan. 3, 1877. The capital stock was stated at $100,000, divided into 40,000 shares. The trustees named were Charles Place, John H. Small, Hon. George W. Green, William A. Keeler, John K. Ruckel, Samuel A. Banks, and George B. Curtiss.

THE ERIE MINING COMPANY.

This is the strongest organization formed for mining purposes in this section, and the one whose success doubtless led to all the other enterprises. The mines are located at Guymard. A large amount of ore has been taken out, though the work has always been an intermittent one, pushed effectively at times, and then stopped for some years. At the present time (November, 1880) it is in one of its suspended intervals. There seems to be no doubt in the minds of the community that the deposit of ore is rich and abundant, and that the work need never stop on account of failure of materials.

THE EMPIRE MINERAL COMPANY

was formed July 18, 1863. The trustees named were John Wiggins, George Wiggins, and John Mulock. The object was declared to be the "mining of lead ores and other minerals, and vending the same unmanufactured and manufactured." The capital stock was fixed at $300,000, divided into 60,000 shares.

X.—PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR OF SPECIAL NOTE.

Perhaps there is little under this head to require special remark. The Shawangunk range is, however, full of rare attractions to students of geology, to all who desire to read the great lessons of creation traced by a divine hand upon the rocky strata. Cabinets of rare value may be easily made by gathering specimens for a few days along these hills and in the excavations of the mines. The "Pass of the Mountains," at Otisville, too, is worthy of some study. Though not grand and ruggedly sublime, like the wonderful passes of lofty mountain ranges, yet the depression is decided enough to attract much attention. The engineers, in laying out the Erie Railway, traveled north along the range for ten miles or more from Port Jervis, to find a place to break through. Here they found it almost ready made for their purpose.

THE FINCH HOMESTEAD.

This was directly opposite the present McBride house, at Finchville. The old residence was burned a few years since. Here the militia of Goshen and vicinity halted on their way to the fatal field of Minisink. Here the captain directed Mr. Finch not to accompany them, but to be ready to feed them on their return. From their hurried meal they commenced their march over the mountain, doubtless winding their way along the slight depression where the present road is laid, past the burial-ground, in which the dead of earlier years had already begun to be buried. From the summit of the pass they took their last look of the eastern slopes they were leaving behind them. Alas, how few survived to recross the mountains or to receive the hospitality of the Finch homestead!

THE PEDDLER'S SPRING.

This is so called from the tradition that a peddler was murdered at some former time while drinking there. There seem to be no facts, however, known either of the supposed murderer or of his victim, and very likely it is only an idle story of the past. The spring is romantically situated on the summit west of Otisville, near the old "half-way tavern," on the stage-road from Goshen to Cocheton.

OLD COIN.

A quantity of coin was dug up a few years since in a field near Otisville, at the entrance of the mountain pass now traversed by the Erie Railroad. It proved to be counterfeit, but of rare and unusual design. Many conjectures were made about it, some supposing it to have been the work of counterfeiters, who at a very early date may have had a retreat in this vicinity; others, that it was used to cheat the Indians in the purchase of lands. Dr. Theodore Writer has specimens of the coin.

THE LOCATION OF THE MASTODON

exhumed some years since was upon the present Mitchell farm, a mile from Otisville. It was formerly known as the Alison farm. Here one may pause to reflect upon that ancient era when these gigantic animals roamed along the valleys and over the hills of the Shawangunk region. The imagination may revel at its "own sweet will," and weave its own fancies of that titanic age.

THE OLD ORCHARDS

in different parts of the town give some proof of the very early settlement. At Finchville, out in the field back from the old Finch homestead, is one of the oldest in the county. The time-scarred trunks, the gnarled, rough limbs, the broken tops, tell of the winds and the storms that for a century have swept down the mountain-sides and roared along the valleys.

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The town is largely agricultural. The eastern slopes of the Shawangunk Mountains, the alluvial lands of the Shawangunk River, and the plains lying between form a tract that seemed desirable to settlers at an early period, and the cultivation of which has proved reasonably remunerative from that time to the present. All the crops common to this section of country are raised here. As in all the other towns of the county, or nearly all, the facilities for freighting milk to New York are so convenient that dairying is one of the most important industries. Yet the direct shipment of milk has had the effect to cause the almost complete extinction of that once famous article, "Orange County butter." Orange County farmers in many instances now sell milk so close that they are obliged to buy butter for their own family use, and find it economical to do so.

Judging by the number of mining companies mentioned above, it might be supposed that mining would be an important industry of Mount Hope, but mining here resembles the modern institution of Masonry in one feature,—it is "speculative," not "operative." That valuable ores exist in the mountain range is undoubtedly true, but whether in paying quantities and convenient for digging sufficient to render labor remunerative is yet an unsettled question.

In the vicinity of Otisville and also at Guymard summer boarding has been of some importance for a few years past. At the latter place a very large and handsome hotel was erected a few years since to accommodate summer visitors. The tide of travel is, however, so variable and uncertain that it is scarcely safe to erect a costly building at any one point, because very likely the throng next year may pass on to some new and wilder locality.

Near Mount Hope village is the grist-mill known as Little's. It was established at an early date, and is now owned by J. E. Ketcham. The woolen-factory of Otis & Co. lasted for some years, but was afterwards burned down. At this same place is now an establishment for tanning skins used in the glove manufacture.

XII.—MILITARY.

In the various Revolutionary annals of Deerpark and Wallkill many of the incidents refer to the present territory of Mount Hope, which was taken from those two towns. Especially was the east side of the mountains a place of safety to which families often fled to escape the dangers arising from Indian attacks in the Mamakating Valley.

As in other portions of the county, a few men were "out" in the war of 1812, and here and there a pensioner yet remains. The Wallkill Regiment was ordered out in full. The One Hundred and Twenty-eighth, of Sullivan, was subjected to a draft. This included a part of what is now Mount Hope. Among those that went may be mentioned Joseph Stanton, Amzi Mapes, John Mulock, Zebulon Giffen, Frederick A. Seybolt, Richard Penny, Capt. William Mulock.

CIVIL WAR, 1861-65.

No very large number of men volunteered from this town. In proportion to the population, however, the record is a creditable one. Liberal sums of money were voted to secure additional recruits and fill the quota, as shown by the following official action.

At a special town-meeting, held Aug. 9, 1864, to consider the question of paying bounties to volunteers, Wm. S. Little and Horton Corwin were present, and presided as justices of the peace, and R. Fraser was appointed clerk.

A committee was appointed to report resolutions, viz.: Wm. S. Little, John Mulock, George C. Strickland, Horton Corwin, and H. R. Cadwell. The resolutions reported were voted upon by the meeting, and carried,—157 to 29. By this action a tax of $35,000 was authorized for the payment of bounties to the amount of $500 to each volunteer for one year, $600 for two years, and $800 for three years. The town clerk and supervisor were authorized to issue the necessary bonds to raise the money.

The above meeting was informal, and to ratify the action another special meeting was held August 20th, Wm. S. Little, Horton Corwin, and John Penny present as justices of the peace, and R. Fraser, town clerk. The committee on resolutions were Charles Hoyt, John Wiggins, Amos Ketcham, W. W. Shaw, and John Mulock. The tax was limited to $37,000, instead of $35,000. The bounty was made uniform at $800. It was offered also to any man furnishing a substitute in anticipation of a draft.

The resolutions of this meeting were ratified by a vote of 168 in favor, and 62 against. At a special town-meeting, held Feb. 2, 1865, to consider the subject of bounties, William S. Little acted as chairman, and R. Fraser clerk. A tax of $10,000 was authorized for the payment of bounties, at the rate of $250 for one year's enlistment, $350 for two years, and $500 for three years, with $50 hand money in each case. The resolutions were adopted, 113 voting in favor, and 34 against them.

In pursuance of these resolutions recruits were obtained, and the several quotas required of the town were filled. We regret to add, however, that there is no record in the office of the town clerk of the operations of the town in filling its quotas, or of the men who went into the service. From a carefully-prepared statement by Charles S. Woodward, Esq., one of the most useful supervisors the town ever had, we gather, however, the following facts:

The quotas of the town were:

The claim of the town for reimbursement of bounties paid to fill quota under call of Dec. 19, 1864, and for excess of years of service on filling the quota under call of July 18, 1864, was:

For 42 years' excess of service, $200 each.....	$8,400

" 3 volunteers, $400 each.....	1,200 and the claim was allowed by the Paymaster-General.

To promote enlistments a subscription of $413 was raised in 1862, and, in addition to this voluntary contribution, there was sent to the Sanitary Commission the sum of $500 prior to December, 1863.

Bonds for the payment of bounties were issued in 1864 as follows: Call of July 18, 1864, $20,450 for volunteers, $15,025 for substitutes.

The quota of July 18, 1864, was filled by contract (except substitutes put in) at the rate of $700 cash or $800 in town bonds per man. $10,000 was paid in cash and the balance in bonds. $3975 was paid to volunteers and principals furnishing substitutes under call of Dec. 19, 1864.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

GEORGE SMITH.

The progenitors of the family to which George Smith, the subject of this biography, is allied, were of Dutch extraction, though tradition has not preserved the date of their first settlement in the New World. George, his grandfather, early resided in Goshen, but subsequently removed to Wallkill township, where his death occurred. He was married to Mary Tyler, and became the father of a family of children, among whom was Ira, the father of George, who was born

September, 1800, in Wallkill township, and remained with his parents during the early years of his life. After growing to man's estate he made Mount Hope his residence, and became one of the enterprising agriculturists of the township. He was married to Miss Sallie, daughter of Robert Crawford, of Crawford township, and had children,—Robert C., Charles, William H., Gabriel S., Mary E., George, Oran, Ira, and Sarah F. After a life of unusual activity, the death of Mr. Smith occurred at Otisville, Feb. 28, 1879. His son George was born Feb. 8, 1835, in Otisville, where his early life was spent. After gaining by study at the neighboring public school such knowledge as enabled him to embark with success in the active duties of life, he began his career as a clerk in Otisville. A copartnership was formed in 1856 with Benjamin W. Dunning, and subsequently other business relations were established. He is now the senior member of the firm of Messrs. Reed & Smith, of Otisville, and extensively engaged in mercantile pursuits. Mr. Smith has for years identified himself with the public interests of the township of Mount Hope, and been chosen by his constituents for fourteen successive terms as supervisor, besides filling other minor positions of trust. He represents in politics the principles of the Democracy, of which he is an active exponent.

While his enterprise and capacity have rendered his life a successful one, his integrity and manliness have won for him the esteem and regard of his associates.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

GOSHEN is the central town of the county. It is bounded north by Wallkill and Hamptonburgh, east by Hamptonburgh, Blooming-Grove, and Chester, south by Chester and Warwick, and west by Wawayanda. The area of the town, as expressed in the equalization table of the board of supervisors, is 22,691 acres. The assessed valuation of the town was $2,975,805. The total tax paid upon that basis (1879-80) was $23,861.27. The town is wholly upon the territory of the Wawayanda Patent. The first settlement was made just within the limits of the present town of Hamptonburgh. Various subdivisions of the patent soon took place. The laying out of the "township" of Goshen is mentioned in another place.

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

The surface of this town is rolling or moderately hilly. The hills are bordered by long and gradual slopes, and may be cultivated to their summits. In the southwest corner, along the Wallkill, is a considerable tract of drowned lands. In later years much of this has been reclaimed by skillful drainage. The principal stream is the Wallkill, which forms the boundary on the west. Quaker Creek also constitutes the boundary line for some distance on the southeast, and unites with the Wallkill at the extreme southern part of the town. There are two branches of the Wallkill, one flowing directly south and then west from the vicinity of Mapes' Corners, the other from Goshen village, where it is formed of two rivulets, one from the north and the other from the south. There are also two small streams tributary to Quaker Creek. Across the northeast part of the town the Otterkill flows through a rich and productive valley, having one branch from the east and one from the south. Several swamps have local names, as Big Swamp, Cedar Swamp, and Pumpkin Swamp, which

"The above is the list of all the men in my district, as witness my hand, September, 1775. JOHN STEWARD."

SPECIAL NOTES ON FAMILIES.

Maj. John Wood was engaged in the battle of Minisink, and was the only prisoner whose life was spared by the enemy. At the time of his capture he was a farmer and blacksmith, and owned what is now known as the Wallace property, and lived in the house now or lately occupied by John Bradner. His blacksmith-shop was in front of his residence, west on the hill, at the junction of Church Street and Murray Avenue. He was a captain in Col. Allison's regiment of militia, and as such moved to the defense of the Minisink settlers with his company. After his return from captivity he was commissioned major in the militia. During his captivity his first wife married another, and after his return he married Hannah Carpenter, of Goshen, sister of James Carpenter, and also of Benjamin Carpenter, of Carpenter's Point. Solomon C. Wood, of Bangor, Wis., was the only son by the last wife, although he has descendants by his first wife. Maj. Wood died in 1812, and was buried with military honors at Slate Hill Cemetery.

Widow Christian Wood, who died in Goshen on July 5, 1825, aged fourscore and five years, was at Wyoming with her family when the battle took place there, and narrowly escaped with her life. She had a son and husband killed in the battle.

Samuel Moffatt lived a mile northwest of Goshen, where his son, John Moffatt, resided at a later period. He was a surveyor and a school-teacher, well known as "Master Moffatt."

Phineas Case lived where Michael Burke now resides. A daughter of Mr. Case, Mrs. John Brown, is still living in Newburgh about ninety years of age.

Thomas Gale probably lived above Phillipsburgh; Coe Gale, in the village of Goshen, just above the Episcopal church.

Carman Carpenter lived in the West Division.

Silas Horton's homestead was a short distance north of Goshen village.

William Thompson settled in the south part of the present town of Goshen, about two miles from Florida. He was a man of considerable means, and purchased 600 acres or more. One daughter became the wife of Dr. Nathaniel Elmer, and one son was the well-known Judge William Thompson. Sons of the latter were Morris, William, and Thomas, all of whom lived for a time in this county. One daughter became the wife of Col. John Cowdrey.

Nathaniel Conkling emigrated from Long Island, and settled at what has since been known as Conklingtown, in Goshen. This was near the close of the Revolutionary war, 1780 to 1781. His sons were Nathaniel, Samuel, Enos, Joshua; one daughter, Elizabeth, died unmarried, and one became the wife of Joseph Conkling. Samuel Conkling removed to Middletown. Joshua succeeded to the old homestead, while Nathaniel and Enos lived on farms adjoining. Elijah Reeve lived northeast of Goshen village.

Jonathan Swazey's homestead was north of Goshen. The name is now generally written Swezey, although there are those who still write it Swazy—a distinction which we may not correctly recognize in all cases. Indeed, one of the most difficult problems in local names is to secure uniformity in orthography.

Col. Tusten, Sr., some years before the Revolution, had left his son, Dr. Tusten, on the Denne homestead (Mrs. Price's), and removed to the head of Main Street, Goshen. After the death of the young physician the father moved back to the early homestead. This accounts for the two being assessed separately in 1775. Children of Dr. Tusten were James, Thomas, Catharine, Sarah, Abigail.

Capt. Michael Jones resided on the Drowned Lands, three miles from Goshen village. Andrew, Anthony, Michael, and Samuel Jones, of a later generation, were his grandsons.

Gabriel Wisner was the son of Hon. Henry Wisner, of Goshen.* The children of the latter were Gabriel, Henry, Jr., Mrs. John Denton, Mrs. Phineas Holmes, and Mrs. Moses Phillips. Henry Wisner was a member of the first Continental Congress, and is said to have remarked, when the decision to resist England's oppression was made, "The next thing we want is gunpowder;" and arrangements were soon after made to manufacture it at Phillipsburgh.

Capt. Bezaliel Tyler† was the first man killed in the battle of Minisink. He had four children,—John, Phebe, Elan, Oliver. It is sometimes said that he was really the only officer on that fatal day who had had any previous experience in fighting Indians. He was making a reconnoissance of the Indians' position when he was killed.

Capt. John Duncan resided in Goshen village. He was a tanner by trade, and lived in the old stone house which formerly occupied the site of William M. Sayer's residence.

Gamaliel Bailey was in the battle of Minisink, from Goshen, and was killed.

Capt. Benjamin Vail and Gilbert T. Vail were in the battle of Minisink. William Vail was taken sick on the way and returned. Capt. Benjamin had two brothers, William and John.

* Grandson of Johannes Wisner, whose deed is the oldest in Goshen.

† Not a resident of Goshen.

Roger Townsend's old homestead was opposite the present brickyard. As one of the incidents attending the destruction of old graveyards (incidents that ought forever to prevent such desecration) it may be added that in excavating in the church park the tombstone of a little five-year-old daughter of Mr. Townsend was dug up bearing the date of her death in 1765. Gen. Joseph W. Wilkin married a daughter of Roger Townsend.

Lieut. John Wood lived at Summerville, in the town of Goshen. It seems there were four of the name, who must be distinguished from each other, viz.: Capt. John Wood, Lieut. John Wood, Maj. John Wood, John Wood, Jr., the last named of whom was a son of the major.

Adj. Nathaniel Finch was a descendant of one of the earliest settlers of Goshen, and the early burials of the family were on Prospect Hill, in Goshen village.

Maj. Thomas Waters lived just beyond the milestone on the Florida road. He had four children, Thomas, Henry, Mrs. Thomas Thorn, and Mrs. Robert Seeley. He was one of the early sheriffs of the county.

Rev. Nathaniel Kerr was pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Goshen for thirty years, including the Revolutionary period. He was a grandson of Walter Kerr, who was born in Scotland in 1653, and of whom it may be briefly said that he was a strict Presbyterian, and was arrested as a Non-conformist, stripped of his property, and sentenced to perpetual banishment; that he came to America and settled at Freehold, N. J., where he became one of the founders and a ruling elder of the famous Tennent Church, of which the brothers William and Gilbert Tennent were successive pastors. His grandson had many of the traits of his ancestor; was a strict Presbyterian, and hated the name of king. We have referred to him briefly elsewhere. (See General History—"Churches.") His children were Oliver L., Catharine (Mrs. Simon Hasock), Hannah (Mrs. Theodorus Van Wyck), Margaret C., Mary, and Elizabeth. At the time of his death he was one of the regents of the University of the State of New York. He died in 1804.

John Steward was a prominent citizen, a near neighbor of Hon. Henry Wisner. He was born in Goshen in 1747. He had five sons.

Richard Halstead was an early settler of Goshen. He lived on the Florida road, near the present Snyder place, over the "Rio Grande," and it is claimed by his descendants that he was the first merchant in Goshen. He afterwards bought 600 acres of land in what is now Wawayanda, adjoining the Fullerton farm. The tradition in this family is that his son Michael was born there. If so (as Michael died in 1820, at the age of seventy-two), it determines the settlement of Richard in Wawayanda to have been as early as 1747 or 1748, not more than ten or twelve years later than the Dolsens. Michael Halstead left several children,—Michael, Jr., Jesse, Aaron, Mrs. William Hemingway, Mrs. Silas Hemingway, and Mrs. Alma Bailey. Michael, Jr., had one daughter, Mrs. Charles T. Jackson, from whom most of these particulars are obtained. It is understood that the pioneer Richard Halstead had a brother Joseph, who came to Orange County about the same time. He had no children, but an adopted son, bearing the family name, became the owner of the well-known Cash farm in Wawayanda.

There are four Jacksons mentioned in the assessment-roll of 1775,—William, twice (probably father and son), Henry, and Richard. The late Charles T. Jackson, postmaster of Goshen, a citizen, and warden of the Episcopal Church for more than thirty years, was a son of John C. Jackson. That there were two or more branches of this early family and but slightly related is evident from the fact that the wife of John C. Jackson was Fanny Jackson, a daughter of William Jackson; and through this line the family chain is linked to the names upon the assessment-roll. William Jackson, the father of Mrs. John C., was a captain in the Revolutionary war, and subsisted a company of soldiers for some time at his residence in the West Division, and at his own expense. He was from Ireland, educated in Dublin, and a certificate of his qualifications was extant among the family papers a few years since. Judging by the assessment-roll, his son William was a young man of age at the time of the Revolution. It is of this stalwart young patriot that an exploit is told among Revolutionary traditions. Goshen had some Loyalists, and the discussions between Whig and Tory were violent, and sometimes came to blows. Young Jackson caught a Tory one night trying to cut down a liberty-pole. Seizing him on the instant, he compelled the Tory prisoner to throw his arms around the pole and hug this patriotic symbol while he administered a good sound flogging, thus teaching the Tories that liberty-poles had rights on this continent which must be respected.

Returning to the names on the assessment-roll, Richard Jackson had one daughter, who became the wife of Thomas Wilkin. Mrs. Hoffman, of Goshen, is a daughter of the latter.

The pioneer members of the Vail family in Orange County were three,—Josiah, Samuel, and Benjamin. They all settled near each other, south of the present residence of Thomas Crist. There was the old Vail mansion, a shingle house, which stood down to about twenty-five years ago. The three then made a clearing in what is now Walkkill, beyond the Phillipsburgh bridge, half a mile or so down-stream. The clearing was made under perpetual danger of the Indians, one man to work and two to watch with old smooth-bore rifles,—sure death every time to an Indian in range. Josiah moved there and settled, having married a member of the Corwin family. Benjamin settled on what is now known as the John Tuthill place, in Goshen, east of the Otterkill. Samuel remained on the place first bought in Goshen. Josiah Vail married Patience Corwin. Their children were Isaiah, who occupied his father's homestead; Daniel, who settled in Western New York; John, who remained in Orange County; Phebe, who became the wife of her cousin, William Vail; and Irene, who died unmarried. Samuel Vail married Hannah Petty. Their children were Gilbert T., killed at the battle of Minisink; Michael, who settled in Vermont; Phebe, who married David Horton; Experience, who married Silas Horton; and Hannah, who married Wm. Carpenter. Benjamin Vail married Miss Alsop. Their children were William, of Chester; John, who settled on the homestead; Benjamin, killed at Minisink; Mary, who married John Payne; and Lydia, who died unmarried.

William Barker lived two miles from Goshen village, on the Lagrange road.

John Payne was probably father of the John Payne who died recently at the age of ninety.

Capt. Silas Pierson, Mr. Victor M. Drake states, lived near the old stone house in Hamptonburgh. His wife was a DeWitt, and a relative of Mrs. James Clinton. Capt. Pierson had two children,—Jubal, who removed to Ithaca, and Rhoda, who became the wife of Rufus J. Drake, and mother of Victor M. Drake, the well-known publisher of Goshen village, and for thirty years a resident of Newtown, N. J. The father of Rufus J. Drake was Francis Drake, of Blooming-Grove, an early citizen and a deacon in the Blooming-Grove Church.

Caleb Smith probably lived where Mrs. Phillips now resides in the village of Goshen. But there are so many Smiths named in the early papers that it is difficult to locate them.

Solomon Carpenter lived over the hills west of Goshen. Samuel Dunning resided at Goshen village. Elisha Goldsmith was two miles or so south of Goshen village, where his descendants now reside. Abraham Springsted lived in the same neighborhood. David Moore's homestead was immediately adjacent. Isaiah Vail lived near David Moore before the Revolution, but must have removed to Phillipsburgh soon after the war. Eliud Tryon must also have removed from Goshen to Walkill at an early day. Daniel Reeve resided where Charles Reeve now lives, near the old Tusten place. Peter Clowes and wife are said to have been buried in the garden at this homestead. Hezekiah Watkins' homestead was the place now owned by William Watkins. Zaccheus Case lived in what was known as "Casetown." There were three early homesteads on that road,—Phineas Case, Zaccheus Case, and David Case.

Benjamin Coleman's homestead was a short distance beyond the Carpenter place, on the Montgomery road. The present recollections of old citizens locate Aaron Cortright in what is now Walkill, but he may have moved over the line soon after the Revolution. William Mapes lived on the Montgomery road, two and a half miles from the court-house. Phineas Salmon and his son, Gideon Salmon, lived in "Casetown."

Joseph Conkling was probably the early latter. John Barker lived out on the Montgomery road, perhaps three miles.

A very early pioneer was Henry Smith, who probably came to Goshen about 1743. He had at least one son, Caleb, whose name appears in the old records. The children of Caleb were Henry C., Stephen, John, Caleb, and Mrs. James Tusten. Stephen, Jr., a son of the Stephen named above, is still living at the age of eighty-one. He states that Caleb Smith's homestead was near where S. L. Everett now lives.

Maj. Henry Brewster was a lieutenant in Col. Allison's regiment of militia, and was taken prisoner at Fort Montgomery, Oct. 7, 1777; exchanged Dec. 17, 1780. He was wounded at the battle in which he was taken prisoner, and confined for a time in the old prison-ship at New York. Capt. James Brewster, a brother of Henry, was also in the army of the Revolution,—captain-lieutenant New York Artillery. Both left an honorable record. The latter was a member of The Society of the Cincinnati.

Colville Bradner lived about half-way from Goshen to Florida. He and Colville Ludlum married two sisters Denton.

William Denton lived where the railroad crosses South Street. Moses Gale lived above the Episcopal church. John Ludlum on the old road to Florida. Timothy Wood, Jr., or his father, lived on Greenwich Street, where William H. Snyder now lives. Wood owned a small farm. Joshua Wells lived near the railroad, where Alfred Wells now owns, west of the village. Stephen Crane lived towards the Drowned Lands, probably where the Cranes now reside. Samuel and Charles Webb lived near what is known as the Webb Cemetery.

William Knapp, brother of the two Knapps killed at Minisink, beyond the Webb Cemetery, the present Knapp neighborhood. James Sawyer also, still farther west. Samuel Jones near Sawyer's. Daniel Carpenter lived near the Orange County farm, where a descendant of Daniel resides. Dr. Thomas Wickham lived in Goshen village.

Nathaniel Tuthill, overseer, father of O. B. Tuthill, lived in the stone house now owned by O. B. Tuthill, now a tenant-house in Hamptonburgh. Moses Polly lived in what is now Hamptonburgh,—house gone,—on land recently sold to Thomas B. Jackson. William Mapes lived in Hamptonburgh, where James Lewis now owns. William Moore on the same Lewis farm. Samuel Horton was a son of Silas Horton. Joshua Tuthill lived where Horace Tuthill now lives, in Hamptonburgh. John Conner lived in a tenant-house on the Joshua Tuthill farm. Widow Springsted lived in the town of Goshen, in a shingle house now owned by O. B. Tuthill, which goes back of the Revolution. A store was kept there in the war by Christopher Hunter. The husband of the Widow Springsted was Christopher H. Springsted.

Mary Arnold (widow), of the Dr. Arnell family,* lived in Hamptonburgh, where Thomas Crist now lives; the early Arnold house was removed only within a few years.

William Borland lived in Goshen. He was a son-in-law of Capt. David Swezey, and both lived near the Widow Arnell house, but in Goshen. Timothy Tryon lived a little nearer Goshen, where Mr. Howell now owns. Thomas Payne lived about ten rods nearer Goshen, where Ezra F. Tuthill recently lived. William Wells lived in Goshen, where David E. Case now owns,—occupied by a tenant. "Flanigan, the tailor," lived in a tenant-house belonging to Mr. Wells. Alexander Corey was a son-in-law of William Wells. Silas Horton lived where Samuel Rumsey now resides. Mathias Horton was a son of Silas. Barnabas Horton lived about a mile and a half from Silas Horton, west. Jonathan Swezey lived a little nearer Goshen village. David Steward where Widow Coholan now lives. Joseph Wood, commissioner of highways, lived a mile and a half west of Goshen village, where Mr. Everett now resides. Phineas Case where M. Burke now owns. There is also mentioned "Brown, the weaver."

Of William Allison, whose assessment was the largest on the list, very little is now known. That he was a man of standing and influence, however, is sufficiently attested by the fact that he was the commanding officer of the Goshen regiment of militia, and in that capacity was in action at the Highland fort in October, 1777, where he was taken prisoner by the enemy. He was a representative from the county in the Provincial Convention from 1775 to 1777; State senator from 1783 to 1786, and member of Assembly in 1795. Further information has been sought in vain. The prayer of Dickens, "Lord, keep my memory green," is very suggestive in connection with men of his class.

The early physicians of the town appear in the accounts of early settlement already given,—Dr. Tusten, Dr. Thomas Wickham, Dr. Swezey, and Dr. Arnell. Somewhat later Dr. Thomas Evans, Dr. Ostrom, Dr. Egbert Jansen, Dr. Wm. Horton, Dr. Smith, and Dr. Elliot, and there were doubtless others, for which see chapter on medical profession.

OLD TAVERNS OF GOSHEN.†

In the year 1729, March 31st, William Mapes, a descendant of Thomas Mapes, one of the first English settlers of the State of New York, came to Goshen. He bought of Madame Elizabeth Denne, the widow of Christopher Denne, for the "sum of six hundred and twenty-five pounds lawful money of the colony of New York, all the remaining part of a certain tract of land on the west side of the Otterkill, computed to contain eleven hundred acres of land," upon which he erected, within a short distance of the "old county line," at what was subsequently called "Emtintown," a building which he kept as a tavern previous to the French and Indian war. His next-door neighbor was David Moore, "the weaver," whose large house, coming into the hands of William Mapes at the beginning of the Revolution, was soon occupied by Mapes, where he continued business for many years. This house in the days of the Revolution was the scene of many remarkable gatherings. In this immediate neighborhood were a few friendly Indians, who remained about Goshen for years. These, with the negro slaves, now about as numerous, and the newly-arriving white settlers, made this country tavern a great resort. William Mapes was an active, middle-sized man, with prominent features, well fitted for his business, which he followed nearly his entire life. He died in his eighty-fourth year. His wife was Eunice Loring, who survived him, and attained the age of nearly one hundred years. The old Moore house was demolished by James Lewis, Jr., in the year 1870, about one hundred and twenty-five years after its erection.

James Denton kept what is now known as the "old Josey Sayre house," situated at "Carpenter Mill," as a tavern as early as 1796. He was a stocky-built man of vigorous constitution. Here in the year 1801, March 4th, was celebrated the inauguration of the first Democratic President, Thomas Jefferson. The celebration had obtained a genuine success, when, late in the day, the crowd in the bar-room becoming large and active, the flooring gave way, precipitating the entire party into the cellar, producing an uncalculated amount of confusion. One account, published a few years since, says this breakdown produced a free fight.

Following Main Street, the next place of note as a public-house was near the present residence of Henry Bacon, once the family mansion of the Burrills.‡ Here it is said the first tavern in Goshen village was kept by Birdseye Yarrington. It was not, however, as important as that of Anthony Dobbin, in the house now occupied by John J. Heard. Here, while courts were held under the old custom, the judges were wont to march from the court-room to their dinner and back wearing their official robes. In the stables of this hotel, which stood near the present residence of J. D. Staats, Esq., in the year 1801 was kept the celebrated horse "Imported Messenger," the progenitor of more trotting-horses than any other in the country.

Southeast of this, on the same side of the street, where the present residence of Horton Smith now stands, was a tavern, erected soon after 1800 by the father of Colville Bradner, which was kept by him, by Daniel Gale, Peter Gale, George Moore, and others, with little or no success. It afterwards passed into the hands of Capt. Lebbeus L. Vail, who kept the house for ten years with great popularity, until he was elected to the office of county clerk. It had a splendid sign, painted by Phillips the artist, with an eagle on each side. It was known as "Vail's tavern," until a new proprietor, O. Ensign, looking at the swinging sign-board, exclaimed, "Why, this is the Eagle Hotel. Eagle it has been, Eagle let it be." It was destroyed by fire April 17, 1841, with the Mansion House, immediately adjacent.

‡ Charles Burrill was a Federalist; was appointed postmaster of the city of Baltimore by the senior Adams; was continued in office, notwithstanding his political principles, by Thomas Jefferson eight years; then removed to Goshen and fitted up this residence, where he lived until his death, May 2, 1836.

The Mansion House was re-erected soon after 1800, and enlarged in 1830 by Hector Craig.*

The Mansion House, kept for many years by Evans, Lewis, Barker, Drake, Blain, Dolsen, Hathaway, and others, was the headquarters of the Whig and Anti-Regency parties in this county. The spacious salons were frequented for many years by Ludia Grant and Sanford Robinson, the celebrated teachers of dancing in Orange County. This was a first-class house in the modern sense.

The well-known Orange Hotel has been occupied for hotel purposes more than a hundred years.

On South Main Street was the Kitchel tavern, the present residence of Mrs. Weymer, adjacent to the race-course. It was kept by Josiah Kitchel and his family until his death, May 5, 1826. He was a Jerseyman from Monmouth Co., and a model landlord. A few rods further south was the well-known Washington Hotel, in which Professor Wilson now holds his institute. John Bailey was the proprietor from 1833 to 1842, when this hotel was the headquarters of the civil engineers then surveying the New York and Erie Railroad. John Daily succeeded John Bailey. He was a brother-in-law of Col. Theron Feltor, of Newburgh. Daily erected the piazza and balconies, giving the building its present form.

Sidway's tavern, kept by William Sidway, a drummer of the Revolution, was the present building in part of Mrs. D. Denton Young. Here, for the war of 1812, the several drafts for this district were made. The landlord was an eccentric character, and many interesting anecdotes might be told of him. At the time of his death he was living in the old Minchin residence, opposite the present place of Charles J. Everitt.

The "Yellow Tavern" was a large frame building a few rods farther south, on the site of the present dwelling of Capt. Ellis Post. It was kept by Robert Seeley and others, and was very much of an "upper ten" affair. In 1825, at this hotel, was celebrated the inauguration of John Quincy Adams, headed by Gen. George D. Wickham, and many distinguished politicians from other places, including New York, were present. It closed with a grand ball. The hotel was subsequently kept by Robert L. Hathaway in 1841 and 1842, after which he kept Hathaway's Hotel, in Greenwich Street, New York, until the death of his wife, a woman of many estimable qualities.

Coming down to modern times, the Occidental Hotel, on West Main Street, was built by Gen. George D. Wickham in 1841, and was opened in September of that year, at the celebration of the opening of the Erie Railroad from New York to Goshen. It was first known as the Pavilion Hotel, taking that name from a sulphur well in the rear of the building. Capt. Barney first kept it, a well-known Hudson River man. Afterwards Gilbert Gale, whose large family of sons have for thirty years past kept with great success fashionable hotels at Lake George, Saratoga, Niagara, and Lebanon Springs, also in New York and in Philadelphia. John S. Edsall, the owner of the famous horse "Edsall's Hambletonian," afterwards known as "Alexander's Abdallah," also kept this hotel. It took the name Occidental when Col. Abbott took possession in 1872.

Soon after the completion of the Erie Railroad to Goshen, William Lovelace, an old river boatman, came to Goshen, and made the acquaintance of Andrew Tucker, a colored man, who had for some years lived on the present site of the Van Nort House. This was soon changed into a fish-market and green groceries, which they kept with success until 1844, when Joseph S. Van Nort came in possession of the property and continued the business. He finally procured license, and kept a restaurant and oyster saloon until 1869, when he erected the present brick building. It had been intended to extend it to the corner of John Street, but finally he finished it in its present form. In the failure of the experiment the project died.

It was afterwards kept by many different proprietors until Mr. George N. Remer, the present proprietor, took possession and made it a complete success.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

The precinct formed by the name of Goshen was the first in Orange County north of what is now Rockland. It is a tradition, though of little authority, that the name was selected for its scriptural associations. As ancient Goshen included the best land in Egypt, so the modern Goshen was supposed to include the best land of the Wawayanda Patent. This explanation might be admitted were it not for the fact that the name was then applied to an immense territory stretching from the Hudson to the Delaware, and not to a small fertile tract.

The boundaries of the early Goshen Precinct, formed, it is supposed, about 1720, were evidently the following: On the north by the "old county line," extending from Plum Point, on the Hudson, to the Delaware

* James Craig and his son, Hector Craig, were Scotchmen. The son was elected to Congress about 1828, when he became intimate with Gen. Jackson, who appointed him collector of the port of New York. Hector Craig, a grandson, resides in Newburgh.

River in the vicinity of the present hamlet of Sparrowbush; on the east by the Hudson River; on the southwest by the boundary line between New York and New Jersey. As this line was in dispute for a period of fifty years or more, it might be inferred that the southwest line of Goshen was a movable and uncertain boundary. Perhaps this was so to some extent. Yet there is some evidence that the present boundary between the two States was from the first the New York view of the southwest line of the Goshen Precinct; for as early as 1738 New York had organized the "Precinct of Minisink," lying wholly below Carpenter's Point, in what is now the State of New Jersey. The name Minisink Precinct has no place in New York documents after the settlement of the State line. It is certain that the next year after the final settlement of the disputed line (that is, in 1775) Goshen extended up to Sparrowbush, taking in the triangular portion of the present town of Deerpark, south of the old county line. This is proved by the assessment-roll of that year.

In 1764 the precinct of Goshen was divided by a line which was nearly that of the present west line of Monroe. The west part retained the name of Goshen, and the east part was named New Cornwall. After that year the territory of Goshen was still an immense tract, covering the present towns of Warwick, Goshen, part of Chester, Wawayanda, Minisink, Greenville, and the south part of Deerpark. This continued until 1788, when Goshen was reduced largely by the formation of the towns of Warwick and Minisink.

The precinct records which would have furnished names abundantly for the period 1720 to 1775 are destroyed. Little or nothing can therefore be given of the civil history of Goshen from 1720 to 1798, more than three-quarters of a century. Even a list of supervisors can only be obtained back to the latter date by consulting the county records. Dismissing, then, these lost records, we give the following list of supervisors and town clerks from 1798 to 1880, and the justices of the peace chosen by the people:

V.—VILLAGES.

GOSHEN VILLAGE

is situated in the northern part of the town, and nearly central from east to west. Its history is very largely the history of the town, as well as of the ancient precinct of the same name, extending back one hundred and sixty-six years. Goshen was the place of public business; courts held their sessions here; military movements were arranged here; prominent men of early times resided here; the prisoners of ante-Revolutionary years were incarcerated here, and the condemned were executed here. It is not possible to study Orange County without finding material relating to Goshen in almost every direction, and extending through the records of more than a century and a half. Much of this material will be found in the General History of the county included in this volume. The General History of the county must be referred to also for a large amount of valuable and interesting material bearing upon the history of Goshen. It may be remarked that the proprietors laid out the village by running a broad street or avenue nearly north and south through the plat, some half a mile in length, and then by laying off four lots of 80 acres each on the east and west sides of it. The church and academy lots were at the south end of the street.

In addition to laying out the site of a village, the patentees, at or about the same time, laid out on the patent an oblong square, lying northwest and southeast, of several miles in extent, and known on the old maps as "Goshen Township." The village of Goshen is in the northwest part of this oblong square.

The "old township" was laid out in accordance with the early custom of conferring certain civil rights upon the inhabitants of a small, clearly-defined tract, and then attaching to that outlying settlements, as "precincts of" the township thus created. This original idea had but little application. Very soon the term precinct came to mean a civil division, in nearly the same sense as "town" is now used. In fact, precinct powers were gradually enlarged until, after the Revolution, it was only necessary to substitute the word town for precinct, and the modern system was legally established. The proprietors of the township laid out the ministerial lots they were required to in the northwest part of this oblong square, and naturally a village was established around in that section. The act incorporating the village was passed April 18, 1843. The bounds were described in the act as follows: "Beginning at the one-mile stone on the road leading from Goshen to Montgomery, and running thence in a southerly direction to the east corner of the dwelling-house formerly owned by Phineas Case; thence in a direct line southwesterly to the most southerly corner of the house-lot of William B. Tuthill; thence northerly to and including the dwelling-house of Dr. James S. Horton; thence northerly to and including the dwelling-house of Lebbeus S. Vail, and the whole of the house-lot of John B. Booth and Asa D. Jansen; thence in a direct line to the place of beginning."

The annual meeting was fixed for the first Tuesday of May in each year. The first election was held May 13, 1843, called by F. A. Hoyt, one of the justices of the peace in the town, pursuant to the provisions of the act. The following officers were duly elected: James S. Horton, Charles W. Reeves,* Charles Monell, John C. Wallace, Asa D. Jansen, trustees; John J. Hurd, Charles T. Jackson, Victor M. Drake, assessors; John S. Crane, treasurer; Samuel B. Kitchell, collector.

This election was held and certified to by F. A. Hoyt, Esq., and by James C. Johnson and Lester L. Robinson, secretaries.

The first meeting of the board was held on Monday evening, May 15, 1843. Charles Monell was chosen president, James S. Horton, vice-president, and Jeromus Johnson, clerk. Stated meetings were ordered for the third Monday of each month, except when some court of record for Orange County should meet upon that day, and in that case the meeting was to be held on the second Monday.

Messrs. Jansen and Reeves were appointed a committee to procure a seal for the corporation. It was voted to call a meeting of the inhabitants to vote on money to be raised, such meeting to be held on the 26th.

At a meeting of the board held on the 26th, the village was divided into three districts,—Northern, Western, and Southern.

The meeting of the inhabitants on the same day authorized the raising of a tax of $350; $300 to be applied to the construction of drains, sewers, and sidewalks, and $50 to the purchase of hooks and ladders. At a subsequent meeting of the board, May 31st, Messrs. Horton, Jansen, and Monell were appointed a committee on by-laws; Messrs. Wallace and Reeves to provide hooks and ladders; Messrs. Monell and Wallace to see and consult with the commissioners of highways.

June 19th, the committee upon by-laws reported twenty-one sections, which were duly adopted, ordered to be printed in the village papers, and to go into operation on the first day of July, 1843.

June 29th, the trustees appointed Schuyler P. Owen pound-master, and made the yard attached to his barn the public pound. They also adopted as their temporary seal the impression of the eagle upon the American quarter of a dollar.

Aug. 29, 1843, seems to have occurred the first auditing of bills, and it included the following:

Henry Gale's, for timber and lumber, repairing bridges on Main Street, $7.75; John C. Wallace, for making sidewalks and sewers, $58.88; Patrick Dunn's bill for sewer and walk, $9.25; Charles W. Reeves, for sewer and sidewalk, $25.70.

Oct. 26, 1843, the board adopted a resolution providing names for the streets of the village.

WATER-WORKS.—The water-supply of Goshen was provided for in 1872. The water of Prospect Lake was used, an excellent body of water lying between two hills a mile and a half from the village. The expense was about $60,000, and is being paid in installments of $3000 each. The first commissioners were Benjamin F. Edsall, John Cooper, and N. C. Sanford. The present commissioners (December, 1880) are J. D. Day, Philip A. Power, James Scott, A. J. Moore, clerk; P. A. Power, treasurer.

POLICE DEPARTMENT.—This was organized Jan. 1, 1876. The present police-justice is A. D. B. Staats. Three uniformed policemen are employed,—William H. Wood, Hiram Van Keuren, and George Smith.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.—Soon after the incorporation of the village steps were taken to organize fire companies and procure the necessary apparatus. Aug. 29, 1843, the following ten persons were accepted as members of Hook-and-Ladder Company, No. 1: Charles S. Tappan, Archibald Smilax, Ogden K. Dunning, Joseph W. Gott, Robert A. Smith, William M. Sayre, Alexander Ross, Benjamin F. Dunning, Samuel Mofatt, and William W. Morris.

A meeting of the taxable inhabitants was called for Thursday, September 14th, to vote on the question of raising money for the purchase of a fire-engine, and at that meeting the sum of $450 was authorized to be raised for that purpose.

At a subsequent meeting of the trustees, A. D. Jansen and Charles W. Reeves were appointed a committee to procure the engine. At the same meeting (Dec. 4, 1843) the board adopted rules for the government of the Goshen Hook-and-Ladder Company.

Jan. 22, 1844, the board approved the organization of "Orange Fire Company, No. 1," consisting of the following members: Asa D. Jansen, Dennis McLaughlin, Joseph D. Pardee, Samuel Van Voorhees, John L. Riker, Oliver D. Corey, George Maze, William Bedford, Charles H. Smilax, William V. Ray, Robert Wilson, Andrew J. Jones, James McCaw, William Kinsey, Jacob Vreeland, Harvey Wallace, Gilbert Chandler, Edward J. Ayres, Patrick Moore, Henry B. Murray. By-laws for the government of this company were adopted at the same meeting.

The present Fire Department (December, 1880) comprises three companies, with C. G. Elliott, chief engineer; N. M. Jay, first assistant engineer; James Scott, second assistant engineer; John T. Larue, treasurer; William T. Newkirk, secretary. This general organization has been in force about ten years.

Cataract Engine and Hose Company, No. 1, is the one early company formed soon after the village was formed. It has an engine for use beyond the limits of the water system of the village. Within those limits the hydraulic pressure is sufficient to enable the company to dispense with an engine and operate with hose only. At the present time the officers of Cataract Company are Barto Wright, foreman; D. F. Deming, first assistant foreman; Alonzo Reed, second assistant foreman; Wellington McBride, treasurer; Casper Reinart, secretary; J. E. Loud, assistant secretary; William Tierney, steward. The company consists of about 40 members.

Dickerson Hose Company, No. 3, was organized in 1872, and has about 20 members. Charles E. Wright, foreman; William McNish, assistant foreman; Thos. Farrell, Treasurer; William O'Neil, secretary; Miles Shafer, assistant secretary; Hugh Dougherty, steward.

Rescue Hook-and-Ladder Company, No. 1, was organized in 1870, and has about 30 members. A. J. Moore, foreman; William Ackley, assistant foreman; John L. Kniffin, treasurer; Frank Drake, secretary; F. C. Hayne, assistant secretary; E. M. Thurston, steward.

The Department is in an efficient condition, well supplied with apparatus, and managed by active and energetic men. Happily, the village has been fortunate in not requiring their services to any great extent, few fires having occurred for some years past in Goshen.

PRIVATE RESIDENCES.—Goshen at the present time includes a large area, within which are many elegant private dwellings. Some of the more elevated streets in the outskirts of the village are especially fine, and few pleasanter drives can be found than through the principal streets and along the outer lines of the corporation. The village has had a large growth in recent years, despite the fact that the location of heavy manufacturing enterprises at Middletown many years ago gave to that place a decided advantage. It is said that a more liberal policy in the sale of lands should have secured a part of them at Goshen. Perhaps no one in the last twenty-five years has contributed so much to the actual extension of the village as ex-Sheriff Van Sickle. He has erected forty or more dwellings. They are not only convenient and spacious, but many of them show much attention to correct taste and proper architectural beauty in the exterior. They are an ornament to the place. One portion of the village has been so exclusively built by him that it is popularly known by his name.

THE POST-OFFICE.—This is doubtless one of the earliest post-offices in what now constitutes Orange County. It is a matter of regret that so little can be obtained concerning its history. The present postmaster, Charles T. Jackson, is a popular and efficient officer. He was appointed to succeed his father upon the death of the latter, in March, 1876, and holds a commission renewed for several years.

His father, Charles T. Jackson, Sr., held the office from July, 1853, until his death, a period of nearly twenty-three years. That he remained in office despite the great political changes of 1861 indicates his popularity with men of all parties, and the successful way he conducted the office to the satisfaction of the people.

Virgil Seward was postmaster during the Taylor-Fillmore administration, and prior to him was Horace Elliott for a long series of years. Between Mr. Seward's term and that of Mr. Elliott, Frederick A. Hoyt was postmaster for a time.

HOTELS.—The Occidental is conveniently situated, near to the depot, and reached quickly without crossing the railroad,—a point of considerable importance with the wide track of the Erie road and the numerous trains in the way. The present proprietor is Mr. A. Brownson, a gentleman of long and varied experience in the management of hotels. Guests are sure of courteous attention, an excellent table, good rooms, and ready assistance to and from trains over all the roads. It is the favorite stopping-place of commercial travelers, of the board of supervisors, and of attendants upon courts.

The Orange County Hotel is further up-town. It has been a public-house back to the "time when the memory of man runneth not," and has had a long succession of proprietors. It stands upon the site of the early court-house of 1738. It shares with the other hotels in the ordinary travel and the general business of the county-seat, and besides has quite a patronage from summer boarders, who like its distance from the railroads and its consequent quiet.

The Erie, the Van Nort, and the Union are the other principal hotels of the village.

MAPES' CORNERS

is a village in the south part of the town, near Mount Lookout. It is situated on the old public road leading south from Goshen, and which afterwards became the "Plank Road." At the opening of the Pine Island Branch Railroad, Mapes' Corners was made a station. It bears the name of a well-known citizen of that place, as well as that of one of the oldest families.

COUNTY FARM.

The latest established post-office in the county dates from Jan. 26, 1880, and the postmistress is Miss C. Augusta Goodale. At this place is located the Orange County farm and the County House, the present superintendent being Harvey H. Goodale. (See chapter on county buildings.)

EAST DIVISION AND WEST DIVISION

are two terms found in early writings and continually recurring in all descriptions of the village of Goshen. They need to be clearly defined. The explanation is this: The oblong square known as the "township of Goshen" was divided into four parts, North Division, East Division, South Division, and West Division. The names East and West have ever since been in frequent use, but North and South have not. That the latter existed is, however, clearly proved. In a deed of land given to encourage the settlement of the first blacksmith, bearing date July 17, 1721, it is recited that certain lands lying in the South Division are granted to William Thompson for the purpose of encouraging him to locate there.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

A large amount of information upon the schools of the town and the names of the school officers, such as we have given for other towns, cannot be obtained for Goshen in consequence of the loss of records, already mentioned. From the records of the late years which are preserved we obtain the names of most of the town superintendents: 1846, Benjamin F. Duryea; 1847, Benjamin F. Dunning; 1848, Charles T. Jansen; 1850, Benjamin F. Dunning; 1852, Benjamin F. Dunning; 1854, John H. Thompson; 1856, John H. Thompson. At this latter date the schools passed to the control of the district commissioners.

FARMERS' HALL ACADEMY.—A select school of a classical character was maintained for some years before the incorporation of an academy. Noah Webster, the subsequent author of the dictionary, was the first teacher of note. To meet the expense of his education he had resorted to teaching.

In his itinerancy as a pedagogue he came to Goshen, and is said to have been at that time poor, and comparatively without friends. Indeed, it is a local tradition that he had but seventy-five cents left in his pocket after reaching there and securing a school. It is evident that he taught about one year. No list of the pupils is preserved who enjoyed the teaching of this afterwards illustrious lexicographer. He may have practiced upon them the lessons of his first spelling-book, for it was issued very soon after he left Goshen. On leaving he received from Hon. Henry Wisner the following note of introduction:

"GOSHEN, August 26, 1782.

"SIR,—The bearer, Mr. Noah Webster, has taught a grammar school for some time past in this place, much to the satisfaction of his employers. He is now doing some business in the literary way, which will, in the opinion of good judges, be of great service to posterity. He being a stranger in New Jersey, may stand in need of assistance of some gentlemen with whom you are acquainted. He is a young gentleman whose moral as well as political character is such as will render him worthy of your notice. Any favor which you may do him will be serving the public, and accepted as a favor done your friend and very humble servant,

"HENRY WISNER.

"His Excellency GOVERNOR LIVINGSTON."

The school building in which Mr. Webster taught had been erected in 1773, not long after the court-house of that period. The builder is said to have been James Webster, a Scotch Highlander, who fought at the siege of Quebec. The school established was known as Farmers' Hall Academy, and was incorporated by a charter bearing date April 1st, "in the fourteenth year of American independence." The incorporators named in the instrument were William Thompson, Jesse Woodhull, Birdseye Young, John Carpenter, Phineas Case, Reuben Hopkins, Samuel Gale, Jonathan Swezey, Seth Marvin, John Hathorn, Henry Wisner, Elihu Marvin, Hezekiah Howell, Thomas Moffatt, Moses Phillips, Joseph Wood, James Carpenter, David Arnold, Coe Gale, James Denton, Anthony Carpenter, Timothy Dunning, Joseph Denton, Joshua Wells, Joshua Brown, Jr., Nathan Kerr, Henry Wisner, Jr., John Everett, Israel Wells.

The first principal of the academy was Benjamin C. Carpenter. He taught until Dec. 30, 1791. Mr. Minor appears to have been the next teacher, and he was followed by John K. Joline, whose service closed in 1808. The next principal was Abijah Carrington.

Horace Swezey became principal of Farmers' Hall. He remained until some time in 1828, when Mr. Rogers taught for one quarter first and then for a longer engagement to 1831. Victor M. Watkins then became principal for two years.

In April, 1833, John C. Slack was employed, but left unexpectedly, and Nathan Stark, a former teacher, was employed. Nathaniel Webb then became principal of both schools for about two years. About 1837, Rev. B. Y. Morse was appointed, and made a longer stay than some of his predecessors. Stephen D. Bross, afterwards Lieutenant-Governor of Illinois, taught one year, commencing April 15, 1843. His successor was Henry Fitch, to Sept. 19, 1846.

Then David L. Towle became principal, and con-

NATHANIEL WEBB.

He was succeeded by William Danielson, and on Oct. 15, 1815, Mr. Kenyon was appointed. He was followed by Joshua Boyd, for a few weeks only. About this time the Female Academy was established, and put under the care of the trustees of Farmers' Hall. William Ewen became the first principal.

John Decker, Jr., was appointed principal of Farmers' Hall, April 19, 1822. He remained only one term, and August 5th of that year Wm. C. Hasbrouck was placed in charge. He taught only a single term, and his successor, taking control in November, was Nathan Stark. He taught for some years, his labors closing Aug. 1, 1826.

Nathaniel Webb then taught for a few weeks, when he became a teacher in the female department, and continued eleven years. In the fall of 1857, Wm. H. Foster took charge and taught one year. Mr. Phillips followed for a short time, and then, Oct. 19, 1859, C. W. Davenport became principal.

Goshen Female Seminary was established in 1851 by those who preferred an independent school for girls to the Female Academy in connection with Farmers' Hall. Elizabeth Phillips was the first principal. Her successor was Julia Seward, and then Mrs. M. P. Bradley took charge of the seminary.

NATHANIEL WEBB, whose connection with the schools of Goshen is above noted, was the son of Benjamin, and grandson of Benjamin Webb. He was born on the old homestead farm near Middletown, N. Y., Aug. 16, 1798. His preparatory education was obtained in the academy of his native place, and he was graduated from Union College soon after reaching his majority. His early inclinations were for the profession of the ministry, but ill health compelled him to relinquish his cherished desires in that direction, and immediately after graduating he traveled in the South for his health, which he partially recovered. Returning, for some time he was a teacher in the public school at Goshen.

He married, May, 1827, Louisa, daughter of Xenophon and Abigail (Burr) Mead, of Wilton, Conn., and sister of Charles Mead, of Goshen. She was born June 20, 1802, and survives in 1881, well preserved in body and mind. After his marriage Mr. Webb opened a private school at Middletown, which he continued for only six months, and for the following two years was principal of the academy of that place. He was afterwards principal of the academy at Montgomery for one year, and in 1831 opened a private female boarding-school in Goshen, which was the origin of the Female Seminary of that place, that obtained such a wide repute for high scholarship and moral influences. For thirteen years Mr. Webb devoted his entire energies to the work of this school, and continued to teach and to take an interest in it until his death, which occurred April 20, 1855.

In 1843 he purchased the interest of J. W. Gott in the Democrat and Whig, and was afterwards, until his decease, associated with Charles Mead in editing and publishing that newspaper.

As a writer for his paper he possessed solid abilities, and a quiet, chastened humor, which lurked beneath a terse and pleasant style. As a teacher he had both experience and judgment, and acquired and preserved the confidence and patronage of the public. His gentle manners, and the familiar sympathy which he exhibited towards his pupils, endeared him to both old and young, and wherever the fame of the Goshen Female Seminary reached, his name, as the scholarly, gentlemanly, efficient, and beloved teacher, was inseparably connected with it.

He was emphatically a self-made man. Industry, honor, and sagacity were the implements with which he made himself useful to others and carved out an enviable reputation for himself.

As a man, he was foremost in every good work. As an instructor, his reputation is identified with the prosperity of some of our best schools. As the editor of a leading political journal, he acquired and judiciously wielded an extensive influence. As the superintendent or teacher of the Sunday-school, he became endeared to his pupils and fellow-teachers; and as a Christian from early manhood, and an elder for many years in the Presbyterian Church of Goshen, he left a name for purity and holiness of life which shall long,

"Like the memory of the just,
Smell sweet, and blossom in the dust."

Daniel Wells' Classical School for boys, limited to about twenty, was commenced in 1849, and continued for some years.

The Young Ladies' Institute was started in the old Washington Hotel by Prof. D. L. Towle, who had taught for some years in Farmers' Hall.*

Miss Jennie Bishop at the present time maintains a select school in the village.

The Goshen Institute, an academic boarding and day school, is held in the ample rooms of the old Washington Hotel. It has had many successive proprietors. Prof. Joel Wilson is the present principal. He came to this place in January, 1877, and has been successful in maintaining an excellent school and securing a large number of pupils.

The present public school is simply the long-standing organization of an ordinary school district. The building is of brick, arranged for three departments, and four teachers are employed,—Wellington McBride, principal; Mrs. Wellington McBride, Miss Sarah Houston, Miss Julia Kane, assistant teachers.

A school for colored scholars is maintained by the trustees of the district, Miss Elizabeth Drake teacher. The trustees at the present time are R. C. Coleman, N. J. Kelsey, and William E. Mapes, and the clerk is Charles G. Elliott.

VII.—CHURCHES.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF GOSHEN executed a certificate of incorporation May 19, 1784, in which the trustees named were William Bodle, John Steward, John Wood, Joshua Brown, Jr., Samuel Moffatt, Benjamin Conkling, David M. Westcott, James W. Wilkin, and Thomas Borland. The paper was signed by Saml. Carpenter and Reuben Hopkins.

There is ample evidence of a collateral nature to show that the church of Goshen was organized as early as 1721. The dates of legal papers conveying property to the church of Goshen, and the regular call and settlement of a pastor, establish this fact. There are, however, no church records in possession of the society showing either facts, dates, or names for the succeeding sixty years. The founders of the church were doubtless in the main the founders of Goshen, and their names may be inferred from the list of early settlers, already given, and from the information which families of the present time have in relation to their ancestors, and this is all that can be given as to the names of members prior to the Revolution.

For some reason not now apparent, the above certificate of May 19, 1784, was not considered sufficient, as another one appears in a few months, executed Dec. 7, 1784. The meeting effecting this organization was held at the meeting-house, and was called by Benjamin Gale and Samuel Carpenter, two of the elders of the church. The trustees chosen were Benjamin Gale, John Carpenter, John Steward, Reuben Hopkins, Peter Gale, Henry Wisner, Jr., James Carpenter, Joseph Wood, and Daniel Hall. The paper was verified before Judge William Allison.

At the laying of the corner-stone of the present house of worship, May 11, 1869, the pastor, Rev. Dr. Snodgrass, read the following paper:

"The congregation of the Presbyterian Church in Goshen have come together to-day—the 11th of May, 1869, at 3 o'clock P.M.—to lay the corner-stone of the third edifice erected by them for the worship of God. They have been in existence in an organized form since the year 1720; and are therefore in the one hundred and forty-ninth year of their age. During this long period they have had but eight pastors, in addition to the present incumbent,—a number unusually small when compared with the number of years of which this period consists. It makes the average length of time during which their pastors have lived and labored among them between sixteen and seventeen years.

"During the year 1720 there was preaching in the settlement occasionally by a clergyman whose name was Treat, and in 1721 a call was made upon the Rev. John Bradner, who accepted the invitation, and was installed during that year as the first pastor. He was ordained to the ministry in 1714, and was settled for some years before his removal to Goshen at Cape May, in the State of New Jersey. He died in 1732, and his remains are with us to this day.

"Mr. Bradner was succeeded by the Rev. Silas Leonard, whose pastorate extended to the year 1754, and was terminated by his decease. He was succeeded by the Rev. Abner Brush, who was installed in the fall of 1758, and whose term of office covered a period of between seven and eight years. His connection with the congregation was dissolved by the Presbytery in May, 1766. In the fall of the same year Rev. Nathan Kerr was installed as pastor, and continued in office until his death in 1804, a period of nearly thirty-eight years. Rev. Isaac Lewis was called near the close of 1805, and was installed Jan. 1, 1806. His pastoral relation was dissolved in June, 1812. The Rev. Ezra Fisk, D.D.,* was called in June, 1812, entered upon his labors in August of the same year, and was installed April 21, 1814. He was dismissed on the second Tuesday in September, 1833, and died Dec. 14, 1834. Before his dismissal the pulpit was supplied for some time by Rev. John N. Lewis. Dr. Fisk was succeeded in the pastoral office by Rev. James R. Johnson, who was installed April 30, 1835, and was dismissed Oct. 17, 1839. The Rev. Robert McCartee, D.D., was installed May 6, 1840, and resigned his charge July 31, 1849. The present pastorate commenced shortly afterwards, and if continued, by the favor of Providence, till the 7th of November next, will have reached the termination of its twentieth year.

"In 1724 a committee was appointed to superintend the erection of the first house of worship. There are no particulars on record as to the character, dimensions, or completion of this building, but it is well known to have been a wooden structure, and to have occupied the ground on which the court-house now stands. It seems to have been occupied for many years in a somewhat unfinished state, as measures were taken, long after it was built, to have pews constructed in the gallery. With repairs and improvements from time to time, it continued to accommodate the congregation up to the year 1810. In January of that year a committee was appointed to take into consideration the propriety of erecting a new building. Their report, favorable to the measure, was made, considered, and adopted on February 5th. On April 16th a committee was appointed to draft a plan, and the edifice in which we now worship was the result. An effort was first made to raise the necessary funds by subscription, but this plan failing to produce a sufficient amount, was afterwards abandoned, and resort was had to a sale of pews in the contemplated building, which took place on the last Thursday in December, 1810.

"The structure took rank among the best and most expensive church buildings of its time. The plan in the main, and especially that of the pulpit, was taken from the Second Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, worshipping at that time at the corner of Second and Arch Streets. Its cost was $14,500. It was completed early in 1813, and was dedicated in August of that year. During the fifty-six years of its existence there have been but few Sabbaths on which it has not been opened for the worship of God and the news of salvation published within its walls. It is now waxing old, and is about to vanish away, but there cluster around it sacred memories that will not die as long as any of this generation shall live. It has been the scene of some of the most remarkable displays of awakening and renewing grace which the churches in this land have witnessed. In addition to other seasons of unusual interest, during one year between 80 and 90 stood up within its walls to profess their faith in Christ, and during another, 120; of this latter number 104 were received into the communion of the church at one time, 55 of whom received the ordinance of baptism together.

"It is not, therefore, because we are wanting in veneration for the old church, or ingratitude for the service it has rendered in its day, that we propose soon to give it into the hands of those who are to demolish it, and thereby make room for the new structure which is rising by its side. For several years it has been too small to accommodate all who have desired to have a Sabbath-home under its roof. At the same time the impression has become general that something more in accordance with the architectural improvements of the last half-century is demanded by a due regard to the past history and present character of the congregation, to the prominence, amplitude, and beauty of this plot of ground on which they have always been accustomed to meet for the worship of God, and to the favorable influence which an ample, commodious, and even beautiful house of worship in this locality may be expected to exert upon the interests of morality and religion in this community and in the country around. It was therefore declared by the congregation, in a resolution passed July 21, 1866, to be 'proper and expedient that a new church edifice be built.' Since that time the object aimed at in this resolution has been kept in view. Various consultations have been had as to what the new structure should be as to its character and cost. It was important, on the one hand, not to undertake what the congregation were unable conveniently to accomplish; and, on the other, to produce, if possible, a structure which would adorn and beautify the eligible ground on which it was to stand, and at the same time be best suited to the wants and conveniences of those who were to worship in it for years and perhaps for generations to come."

In pursuance of the plans submitted the new edifice was erected. The first contractor was W. A. Wilkison. The first ground was broken Sept. 7, 1868, and the first stone laid the 28th. On July 7, 1869, Mr. Wilkison abandoned the contract, and Peter H. Terhune, of Binghamton, was employed to complete the edifice.

From the time Mr. Terhune took hold of the building of the church till the last stone was laid, in September, 1871, there was no cessation of the work.

The building committee were Rev. Dr. Wm. D. Snodgrass, Rev. Dr. John A. Staats, Ellis A. Post, D. J. Steward, John E. Howell, R. M. Vail, and N. C. Sanford.

The trustees of the church were at that time Adam H. Sinsabaugh, chairman; George M. Grier, clerk; Stephen Smith, John C. Wallace, James S. Hopkins, Alfred Wells, George M. Sayer, George H. Crans, and John Wallace. The elders were Dr. John S. Crane, Hannibal M. Hopkins, Adam G. Crans, Adam H. Sinsabaugh, John Valentine, and James G. Thompson.

The new edifice was built of blue limestone, cut on the grounds, and quarried from the Orange County farm, about four miles from the village. The doorways, windows, and copings are of dressed Syracuse stone, very closely resembling the dressed native limestone of which the upper portions of both towers are built. The main tower was 186 feet high from the ground. The bell, weighing with its appurtenances about 4000 pounds, was about 120 feet from the ground. It was cast in Troy, N. Y., and bears the inscription, "Holiness unto the Lord." The clock was about 130 feet from the ground, and a very excellent time-piece. It was made by George M. Stevens & Co., Boston, and cost, put up, $650. The body of the church is capable of seating 1000 persons very comfortably. There is a gallery around both sides and the organ end of the church.

The organ occupies the western end of the church, in the gallery. The architectural design of the case is in conformity with the church, made throughout of solid black walnut, with gilded front pipes. The pulpit is in the eastern end. It is approached by three steps at either side, from within the church, and by side doors from vestibules connecting with the two rear entrances. The communion table in front is of beautifully polished black walnut, and bears, in beautifully-carved letters of lighter colored wood, the inscription, "In remembrance of me."

The ceiling is of wood, in panels, profusely ornamented with a variety of brilliant colors. The pews, pulpit, doors, wainscotings, etc., of the inside of the church are of solid black walnut. The outer doors are of heavy oak. At the eastern end of the galleries are illuminated texts in golden letters bearing these words: "Give unto the Lord the glory due unto His name: bring an offering, and come into His courts."—Ps. xvi. 8. "O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our maker."—Ps. xcv. 6.

The windows are Gothic, and are of beautiful stained glass, arranged in corresponding colors on opposite sides of the church. In addition to the many beautiful designs and arabesques in color, the windows have each some fitting symbol or ecclesiastical design at the top. Some of these are, we believe, for the first time now introduced into the architecture of a Presbyterian church. Certainly such designs in stained-glass windows would not have been adopted or dreamed of by Presbyterians fifty years ago, but a wiser and more enlightened policy takes the good and beautiful in allegory, art, church, and Bible history, and keeps them as living symbols of the faith from which they spring. Among these emblems are the cross and crown, the Holy Spirit in the form of a dove, the heart and hand, the trefoil and other emblems of the Trinity, and even an Agnus Dei. Behind the pulpit is a beautiful and large triplet window, in which the richest colors of all are found. On this window are nearly life-sized images of Christ, St. John (the beloved Apostle), St. Gabriel, and St. Michael. The colors also bear at the bottom of the window the following inscriptions: "Lo! I am with you always, even unto the end." "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

The lecture-room is a wing built on to the campanile, and is designed for the use of the Sunday-school and prayer-meeting. It is a very handsome room, beautifully frescoed overhead, and having very tasty windows, and trefoil dormer-windows. This room will seat about 200 persons. The campanile is a tower about 70 feet high, standing between the main edifice and the wing, and serves admirably to harmonize and add to the effect of the front or side view of the whole structure.

At the rear of the main body of the church there are two turrets with louvre windows, and over the large triplet window is a circular window. With the foregoing description and the following table of measurements, a pretty fair idea of the size and style of the edifice may be formed: Extreme frontage, 114 feet; depth, 105 feet; width, 62 feet; height of main gable, 63 feet; area of campanile, 15 by 15; lecture-room, 46 by 39; height of lecture-room gable, 34 feet; windows, 21 by 6 feet; 149 pews on main floor; 48 pews in gallery; 46 pews in lecture-room; 4000 cubic yards of masonry; there were 16,070 days' work done here, besides considerable which was done abroad.

The architect was Daniel T. Atwood, of New York City.

The dedicatory services were held Nov. 22, 1871. The sermon on the occasion, by Dr. Snodgrass, was from the text, "And I saw no temple therein."

This beautiful edifice, thus completed and dedicated, has had an unfortunate history in one respect. The handsome tower, which was of neat and graceful proportions, proved defective, and in a few years it was found necessary to take it down rather than incur the danger of its fall. This was done, and its ruins lie upon and disfigure the otherwise fine grounds.

A movement to rebuild the tower has been made the present year. The sum of $9000 has been subscribed, materials are being drawn (December, 1880), and the work will doubtless be completed early in the ensuing year.

The present organization (1880) consists of the following officers: Rev. Wm. D. Snodgrass, pastor; Rev. Arthur Newman, assistant pastor; A. H. Sinsabaugh, George Crans, Adam Crans, John Valentine, Dr. H. H. Robinson, Daniel Carpenter, James Gabby, Charles G. Elliott, elders; Stephen Smith, Nathaniel Tuthill, N. C. Sanford, Charles E. Millspaugh, J. W. Corwin, N. J. Kelsey, B. R. Champion, R. C. Coleman, John Wallace, trustees.

GOSHEN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

It is said that the first Sabbath-school in Orange County was held in the old Female Seminary at Goshen. It was intended for the improvement of slave children, and besides reciting Bible and catechism lessons, reading and writing were taught. The school prospered, and finally white children attended it, and the school was removed to the Presbyterian church. This was in the early days of the Rev. Dr. Fisk's preaching.

REV. BENJAMIN SNODGRASS (father of Rev. W. D. Snodgrass) was born in Doylestown, Pa.; graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia, and studied divinity under Rev. Dr. Sproat, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia. He settled in West Hanover, Dauphin Co., Pa., in 1784, where he remained pastor of the church until his death, which occurred in 1846.

His wife, Martha Davis, of Philadelphia (the mother of Rev. W. D. Snodgrass), was a successful helpmeet of her husband in matters pertaining to his pastoral work. She had six children who survived the period of infancy. One of the daughters became the wife of a clergyman, and another became the mother of three ministers, one of whom was the Rev. Ashbel Green Simonton, who went as missionary to Brazil, was the founder of the first Presbyterian Church in Rio Janeiro, and died in early life, greatly lamented by the church generally.

The subject of this sketch was the youngest but one of the six children, and was born on June 30, 1796. His parents bestowed upon him much care and solicitude in regard to his mental training, and as a result he resolved to devote himself to the service of Christ in the work of the gospel ministry. With this view he remained in his father's family, attending a select school in the neighborhood, where the usual branches of an English education were taught. At the age of fourteen he began the study of Greek and Latin, under the tuition of the Rev. James Sharon, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Derry, Dauphin Co., Pa.

In the fall of 1812 he entered the sophomore class in Washington College, Pa., graduated in 1815, receiving the first honors of his class; studied Hebrew under the tuition of Rev. James R. Wilson, then of Philadelphia; entered the theological seminary at Princeton in the summer of 1816, passing through the entire course of study, and in the fall of 1818 appeared before the Presbytery of Carlisle, and entered on the usual trials for licensure to preach the gospel. After leaving the seminary he filled an appointment from the Young Men's Missionary Society of New York for the period of six months, in the section of country lying south of the James River, and between Norfolk and Petersburg, Va.

At the request of Dr. Alexander, visited the Presbyterian Church at Fayetteville, N. C., afterwards receiving a call to be its pastor; was ordained to the work of the gospel ministry; installed pastor by the Presbytery of Fayetteville July 30, 1819.

During the winter of 1822 received a call to the Independent Presbyterian Church of Savannah, Ga. (Rev. Dr. Kollock's, deceased.) Filled this pulpit until the summer of 1823, when he received a call from the Session of the Murray Street Church, New York (Rev. Dr. Mason). Arrived in New York August, 1823, and was installed pastor by the Presbytery of New York the same year.

Married, Dec. 9, 1823, to Miss Charlotte H. Moderwell, of Lancaster, Pa., a niece of William Kirkpatrick, of the same place, who was an elder of the Presbyterian Church, who had superintended her education in the seminary under the care of Mr. Judson, in Philadelphia, and who was an active and liberal friend to all Christian institutions and interests.

The above pastorate continued for about ten years, during which time (in the year 1826) the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by Columbia College. After leaving the Murray Street Church, he was elected and served as assistant secretary of the Board of Domestic Missions for the period of about two years, the field of labor being in the States of New York and New Jersey; after which was called to the pastorate of the Second Street Presbyterian Church, in Troy, and installed as its pastor Oct. 3, 1834, for the period of about ten years. In the spring of 1844 called to found the new church built by Mr. James Lennox, in Fifteenth Street between Irving Place and Third Avenue; installed its pastor March 15, 1845, laboring in building up this (then) waste place for five years, besides serving as a member of the Executive Committee of the Board of Foreign Missions.

Received a call in the summer of 1849 to the Presbyterian Church in Goshen, N. Y., made vacant by the resignation of the Rev. Robert McCartee, D.D.; pastoral relation with the church in New York dissolved by Presbytery Oct. 8, 1849; installed by the Presbytery of Hudson on the 7th day of November, 1849, preaching his inauguration sermon on the ensuing Sabbath. From the date of the beginning of this pastorate up to the present time has faithfully fulfilled all of its requirements, passing through scenes of the Spirit's quickening power, dedicating a new church, celebrating his golden wedding, witnessing the leveling and raising of the church steeple, and at a green old age of eighty-five fulfilling acceptably with an assistant all the duties and requirements of a full pastorate, and patiently waiting for that last summons to "go up higher."

His grandfather, James Snodgrass, whose parents came from the north of Ireland about 1700, settled in Doylestown, Bucks Co., Pa. There his father, James Snodgrass, was born in 1761.

ST. JAMES' EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF GOSHEN

effected a legal organization March 27, 1801. Rev. Frederick Van Horne, rector of the Episcopal Church of St. Andrew's, presided at the meeting, and the following officers were chosen, whose names appear in the certificate: William Wickham and William Thompson, wardens; Christian Hurtin, Anthony Dobbin, Jacobus DeKay, Joseph Drake, George D. Wickham, Thomas DeKay, William M. Thompson, Dr. John Gale, vestrymen. In the absence of any statistics from the officers, we have obtained the following items from Mrs. Charles T. Jackson. The succession of pastors includes the names of Rev. Messrs. Smith, Cadle, Hubbard, Kingsbury, John F. Clark, James Mallaby, Jesse H. Spencer, Wm. Page, John T. Cushing, Stephen Thrall, John Robinson, Albert Wood, Edmond S. Rowland, and the present pastor, Rev. Wm. Delancey Grannis.

The first house of worship was a plain wooden building, erected soon after the formation of the church. It stood upon the site occupied by the handsome edifice in which the society now worship. The latter was erected in 1852-53, and Rev. Mr. Cushing, the pastor under whose leadership the work was completed, preached the dedicatory sermon. The contractor was Mr. Brown, of Florida, and it is understood that the expense was about $15,000. A few years since a chapel was added to the church, conveniently arranged for Sunday-school and for miscellaneous purposes. The church also have a rectory, constituting a handsome and convenient residence for the pastor, which cost nearly $7000.

The interior of the church is handsomely furnished. A new organ has recently been placed in it, and all the appointments are in keeping with the sacredness of the place and the ritual of the church. Upon the walls there is a very handsome tablet to the memory of Mr. George D. Wickham, for a long time warden of the church, and one to his wife, Bridget Wickham, erected by their nephew and heir, Charles B. Hoffman, son of Ogden Hoffman, Esq. There is also a tablet to the memory of Henry B. Wisner, who was for many years a warden of the church. The rich communion set of solid silver was presented by Martha, daughter of Henry B. Wisner, as a memorial of her sister, Alma Wisner.

The church has a vested fund of about $4000, donated by the will of Mr. Wickham, the interest of which is used towards the support of the rector.

The present organization (December, 1880) consists of Rev. W. D. Grannis, pastor; George C. Miller, warden (the senior warden, Mr. John J. Smith, has recently died, and the vacancy has not been filled); J. F. Matthews, Wm. T. Russell, William M. Sayer, Henry C. Duryea, David F. Gedney, A. S. Murray, Herbert Gedney, vestrymen; J. W. Gott, Sunday-school superintendent.

The church has no debt, owning its valuable property free of all incumbrance.

Mr. Charles T. Jackson was very active in support of this church, a heavy and regular contributor, and a warden for over thirty years.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF GOSHEN.

In 1776 there was but one church in the town of Goshen, worshipping in a small, unfinished building, without steeple, standing near the location of the present court-house, and occupied, according to a former grant of lands for that purpose. The majority being Presbyterians, the service was conducted according to their forms and by the officers of their denomination. Their pastor at this date was the Rev. Nathan Kerr, who lived two miles northeast of the village, where he owned a house and seven acres of land, and had the use of the church lands, consisting of about 160 acres. A parsonage was commenced for him in this village about 1802, in which he died two years later, 1804. The Rev. Isaac Lewis was his successor. During his pastorate the officers of the church gave some offense in administering discipline, or in general management, and the Episcopalians formed a parish of their own. About this time William Seymour (a slave) was converted under the preaching of Rev. John Robertson, of the New Windsor Circuit, and joined a class at Craigville, where he attended preaching, prayer- and class-meetings. He was a zealous worker, full of the Holy Spirit, and was afterwards licensed to preach. He died in Oxford, October, 1846, leaving a good record of a useful life. About 1810 James Cunningham bought a house in Goshen village, on what is now Greenwich Street, and here, in company with Mr. Seymour and a few others, kept up regular prayer- and class-meetings for a few years, when Mr. Cunningham sold out and left the place.

In 1811, William Goldsmith, from the old Bethel Methodist Church, built a house two miles north of Goshen village, and as soon as it was inclosed invited the ministers of New Windsor Circuit to make it a regular appointment, which they did for some years. In the absence of a minister, Mr. Goldsmith, Mr. Seymour, Isaac Denton, of Ridgebury, Smith Benedict and James Manny, of Phillipsburgh, and some others, kept up interesting prayer- and class-meetings. In the mean time Rev. Isaac Lewis left the Goshen Church, and Rev. Ezra Fisk succeeded. There were converts from time to time, through the efforts of the Methodist ministers and other workers. These for some years united with the old church of Goshen.

In 1822, Mr. Goldsmith seeing no prospect of establishing a Methodist Church, applied for and received admission into the Goshen Church. He was accepted, not on a certificate nor on confession of faith, but as a Methodist. He there maintained an excellent standing for a half-century under the Presbyterian ministers Fisk, J. R. Johnson, Robert McCartee, and for a quarter of a century under the preaching of his esteemed friend, Rev. William D. Snodgrass. He died Feb. 14, 1877, aged ninety years. In 1823, Rev. John Kennedy, a Methodist minister, preached regularly in the school-house of the Goldsmith district. He, and others succeeding him, occasionally preached in the old stone court-house at the village during the next fifteen years, down to 1838, when Revs. Seymour Landon and Thomas Newman preached regularly Sunday evenings at the same place.

After the old court-house was taken down there was no convenient place for meetings. In 1844 some one hired the ball-room in the old Orange County Hotel, and preachers from Sugar Loaf Circuit—Rev. Messrs. Runnels, Van Duzen, and Blakesley—preached there. The room was uncomfortable, and meetings had to be discontinued at the approach of cold weather.

In 1845 application was made for the use of the old Farmers' Hall Academy, but it was not granted. Permission was, however, obtained to use an unoccupied building in the churchyard, known as the Goshen Female Academy. Here services were maintained by Rev. Edward Oldren, C. H. Dibble, and John P. Hermance regularly each Sunday evening.

At the meeting of the New York Conference of 1847, Rev. Charles Isham was appointed to take charge of the work at Goshen. A church organization was completed July 26, 1847. The trustees chosen were Matthew Koons, Oliver B. Tuthill, William McCoy, Sr., Samuel Beyea, Charles W. Reeves. William McCoy, Sr., was made chairman, O. B. Tuthill treasurer, and C. H. Reeves clerk.

The site for a house of worship was purchased of the widow of George D. Wickham, Nov. 22, 1847, 90 by 100 feet, for $100. The edifice cost $2769.14. At the dedication a balance of $254.57 which was unprovided for was promptly raised, and the society began its labors in the new house out of debt. The dedication was Aug. 30, 1848. The money for the erection of the church was quite largely raised in small sums, there being about two hundred subscriptions of one dollar or less. There were a few subscriptions of large amount,—O. B. Tuthill, $135; Asa D. Jansen, $35; M. Koons, $51; A. S. Murray, $25.

The early members of the church are shown by the class record of 1848,—Oliver B. Tuthill,* leader; Elmira Tuthill, William O'Neal, Asenath O'Neal,* John Conklin, Phebe M. Conklin, Hannah Case,* Samuel J. Purdy,* Simeon Goldsmith,* Matthew Koons, Jane Koons, James McCoy, Lydia J. Meafey,* David E. Case,* Cynthia Caldwell,* Sarah Beyea, William L. Langrege,* Mary Langrege, Nicholas Messenger,* Martha Odell, Mary Fullerton, Catharine Little.

The successive ministers have been as follows, the appointments being for the spring of each year named:

1848, Rev. Charles Isham; 1849-50, Rev. Henry Lounsbury; 1851-52, Rev. O. V. Ammerman; 1853-54, Rev. Peter C. Oakley; 1855, Rev. George E. Kerr; 1856-57, Rev. Wm. Blake; 1858-59, Rev. Thomas B. Smith; 1860-61, Rev. Wm. Ostrander; 1862, Rev. Matthew Van Duzen; 1863-64, Rev. Thomas W. Curroy; 1865-66, Rev. Elias E. Osborn; 1867-68, Rev. J. W. B. Wood; 1869, Rev. J. Chester Hoyt; 1870-72, Rev. Z. N. Lewis; 1873-75, Rev. Ezra Tinker; 1876-77, Rev. D. H. Hannaburgh; 1878-80, Rev. J. W. Selleck.

The present officers (December, 1880) are: Pastor, Rev. J. W. Selleck; Leaders, Oliver B. Tuthill, Henry B. Montanye; Stewards, Wm. A. McCoy, C. E. Wright, Wm. H. Snyder, J. W. Dayton, Wm. V. Ray, S. F. Barnes, T. T. Hetfield, N. C. Coleman, M. G. Lewis; Trustees, F. H. Reeves, Wm. V. Ray, J. A. Holbert, George McEwen, O. B. Tuthill, T. T. Hetfield, T. L. Kyte; Sunday-school superintendent, John W. Dayton; Assistant, Coe L. Reeves.

A noted revival may be mentioned as occurring in 1850, meetings being held from January 19th to the latter part of March. The movement was very extensive, about 600 having been understood to obtain a hope, but many of them united with several surrounding churches. Another very noted revival may be mentioned as occurring in 1873. There have been several other years when considerable religious interest was manifested, and several new members were added to the church.

THE SEPARATE METHODIST CHURCH OF GOSHEN.

This body executed a certificate of incorporation June 29, 1849. The meeting was held at the old brick academy, so called, then being used as a district school-house. The proceedings were signed by George W. Harding and John W. Green. The trustees chosen were George W. Harding, Robert Thorne, and Ebenezer Green.

The church was organized Dec. 20, 1847. At that time, or previous to that time, the colored people of Goshen had no church of their own, or no religious society of any kind. There were a few persons there at that time who were members of a white Methodist Church,—some three or four,—and there were about the same number belonging to the Presbyterian Church, but the remainder, numbering 150 or more, were not church-members or church-goers. Peter W. Brister, a member of the Colored Separate Methodist Congregational Church of Philadelphia, Pa., came to Goshen in the spring of 1847. He was a traveling missionary of the church mentioned above, and seeing the deplorable condition that the colored people were in, and being aware that they had no church organization of their own, concluded to consult the ministers of the different white churches on the subject of calling the colored people together and establishing a Separate Methodist Congregational Church. He was advised by them to do so, they promising to use their influence and to do what they could to forward the enterprise. The names of these men are here mentioned, so that it may be seen that the interest that they took in the welfare of the colored people in Goshen was not in vain, nor have their good deeds been forgotten. They were the Rev. Dr. McCartee, of the Presbyterian Church; the Rev. J. T. Cushen, of the St. James' Episcopal Church; and the Rev. Chas. Isham, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Being thus encouraged, Brother Brister began to preach in the old brick academy on Greenwich Street, a little above where the post-office now is, and in December of the same year he organized a society of eight or nine members.

In the spring of 1848 the Rev. David James, of Philadelphia, came to Goshen, having previously preached and established several societies in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. During his preaching in 1848 and 1849 nearly 40 persons were added to the society, and it was about this time he came to the conclusion that it was best to purchase a lot and build a church, and for this purpose the congregation was duly called together in the summer of 1849, a board of trustees chosen, and a lot purchased with a building on it, on what is now called High Street, for the sum of $300. Subscriptions were made out, and collectors appointed to raise the funds in the surrounding neighborhood to purchase the house and ground. Those clergymen of the white churches previously mentioned each signed their names to the subscription. Among those who were appointed to collect for that purpose were Rev. J. W. Green, G. W. Harden, Joshua Swartout, Sylvester Jervis, and others. By this means the house and lot were soon purchased, and dedicated to the service of Christ in the spring of 1850. Such was the beginning of the Separate Methodist Congregational Church in Goshen.

Rev. J. W. Green is the present pastor (December, 1880). Services have been steadily maintained from the date of organization to the present time.

THE AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL ZION CHURCH OF GOSHEN

was organized a few years subsequent to the Separate Methodist Church. They erected a house of worship on West Main Street, and maintain regular services. Rev. Mr. Prime is now the minister in charge.

CATHOLIC CHURCH OF GOSHEN.

This church has been in existence in Goshen for many years, and is understood to be doing a vigorous work. It has a comfortable house of worship, in which a large congregation gather for the services of the Sabbath. The pastoral residence is a handsome and costly edifice, standing on one of the finest streets in Goshen, and from which most delightful views extend in every direction. The pastor is fortunate in the possession of this pleasant dwelling. Other charges have from time to time been connected with Goshen, and the village has been the centre from which much Catholic influence has extended to other parts of the county. The present pastor, Father Keoghan, is in the prime of active life, devoted to his calling, and administers the affairs of the parish with great ability and success. For some reason which we do not understand, there is an apparent reluctance to furnish information by pastors of this denomination, a fact which will sufficiently account for the absence of more extended histories in this as well as in other instances.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

The earliest burial-place in Goshen was doubtless upon what are now the public grounds around the Presbyterian church, the clerk's office of the county, and the Minisink monument.

There may have been sufficient reasons for the obliteration of this old historic graveyard, but they hardly satisfy the descendants of those whose remains were buried there, and whose monuments, even if they were rude, bore undoubtedly some dates and names that were inevitably lost in the wholesale destruction. It is sometimes claimed that all the stones with names were removed to Slate Hill or otherwise saved, but this can hardly be possible, when three or four still lie around the church, and none are at Slate Hill of such age as must have stood in this yard, laid out in 1721. The finding of a Townsend monument in recent years, the striking of human remains the present year in the excavations near the county clerk's office, and many other incidents, all tell a story of lost graves, lost names, and lost dates.

SLATE HILL CEMETERY ASSOCIATION was incorporated Oct. 8, 1861. The chairman of the meeting held to organize was Simon Bradley, and the secretary Samuel S. Wickham. The trustees named in the certificate were James F. Dolsen, Benjamin W. Bradley, Alva Bennett, Daniel Reeve, Theophilus Dolsen, William M. Dolsen. Owing to some alleged informality in the proceedings of 1861, or for other reasons, a new organization took place at a meeting held in the Presbyterian church, April 19, 1867. John S. Crane was appointed chairman and George M. Grier secretary. The trustees named were Thomas Edsall, G. M. Grier, Ellis A. Post, Henry Merriam, John J. Heard, S. L. H. Jackson. The proceedings were verified by the officers before Charles J. Everett, notary public, April 27th, and recorded the same day. This was simply organizing under the modern law for the control and management of the Slate Hill burial-ground, which had been in use from about the year 1795. The older portion is on the higher ground at the further end from the road. The newer portions, down the hill and next the street, are laid out with some view to landscape adornment, though but little attention is given to mowing and trimming the lots. It is evident that there are also very many unmarked graves. In some parts the rows of mounds lie thick, with neither name nor date.

THE WESTCOTT BURIAL-PLACE.

There are a few graves near the court-house, on the grounds of Mrs. Denton, sometimes mentioned by the above name.

CEMETERY OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

This is in a beautiful section of the village, and is pleasantly situated. It seems to have been opened for use about 1810 or 1812. The old Wickham family vault was located there, and used earlier than the establishment of the general burial place. The ground is in very good condition, though it needs much more care than it is receiving in the way of mowing, trimming, etc.

THE WEBB BURYING GROUND is situated about a mile southwest of Goshen village. This comprises an old part and a new, both in a fair condition.

THE VAN DUZER FAMILY LOT.

a mile and a half south of Goshen, dates back to early times, and is to some extent kept in repair.

THE HAIGHT FAMILY CEMETERY, GOSHEN, was incorporated by a certificate executed Feb. 4, 1873. D. Henry Haight was chairman of the meeting held for organization, and Henry G. Piffard secretary. The trustees named were David Henry Haight, Henry G. Piffard, and Charles H. Haight. There is a mausoleum erected at a great expense, and located at the junction of Main Street with the road leading to Newburgh. The cemetery proper is some distance from this structure, and is neatly walled. It incloses the early dead of the Jansen family, with others of the same neighborhood.

THE CASE FAMILY

burial-place is about a mile beyond the line of the corporation.

THE CATHOLIC BURIAL-PLACE

occupies a fine site of excellent sandy soil for burial purposes. It needs much additional care to render it the place of beauty it might be. Its very high mounds and deep-cut walks are inconvenient for the mowing and trimming which can alone keep a burial-place in that clean, neat condition which should indicate the love of the living for the memory of the dead.

THE WALLKILL VALLEY CEMETERY ASSOCIATION executed a certificate of association Nov. 14, 1859. Samuel W. Tryon was chairman of the meeting held to organize, and Oliver B. Tuthill secretary. The trustees named were Daniel C. Wisner, Benjamin Hulse, Oliver B. Tuthill, Noah Gregory, William P. Smith, James S. Hopkins, William Jackson, John P. White, and William A. Booth. This is on the east side of the Wallkill, not far from the Goshen line. It is in excellent preservation, is laid out in lots, has several fine monuments, and one family vault. It is within the town of Wallkill.

At the county house there is the burial-place of the poor who die while being supported at the public expense on the Orange County farm.

At Conklingtown there is an old burying-ground, dating back to early times, and fenced with some care in later years.

The Bradner family lot is in the south part of the corporation or near the line. This is in good preservation.

On Prospect Hill was an old burial-ground, probably not very large,—an almost forgotten place. Mr. O. B. Tuthill is of the opinion that bodies were removed from there to some extent. Remains were, however, found in excavating for gravel recently. This was the Townsend ground.

On the Craigville road is the Vail burying-ground, still in use, and receiving some care as to its preservation.

The Ramsey ground is further east, not far from the line of Chester.

The Thompson burial-place in the south part of the town is an old ground, where many of the pioneers were buried.

On the Bradner farm, so called, southwest of Goshen, there are a few graves carefully fenced.

IX.—TOWN SOCIETIES, LIBRARIES, BANKS, INCORPORATIONS, Etc.

ORANGE COUNTY LODGE, No. 45, F. & A. M., was organized March 12, 1796. The officers of the present lodge are not in possession of any information concerning it, but it had a prosperous existence for some years. The present lodge is modern in its origin. It was preceded for some years by a lodge of Odd-Fellows, the leading members of which entered into the movement to found a Masonic lodge.

THE GOSHEN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

was formed Aug. 9, 1831. The trustees named in the certificate were Ezra Scott, Nathan Kingsbury, Isaac R. Van Duzer, Samuel Wilkin, John J. Smith, Albert S. Benton, John S. Crane, John E. Phillips, William Horton, Jr. This library was established according to this certificate, and maintained for a time quite a collection of valuable works. They, however, disappeared after a few years and the institution died out.

THE GOSHEN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

executed a certificate of incorporation Nov. 9, 1858. The trustees named were Ambrose S. Murray, Henry Merriam, George M. Grier, Benjamin F. Edsall, John C. McConnell, John C. Wallace, Benjamin F. Duryea, Stephen L. H. Jackson, and William Murray. John C. McConnell was chairman of the meeting. They organized "for the purpose of erecting a public library." This movement was not continued. It was designed to secure a public building for literary purposes, including a library, hall, and reading-rooms, but the encouragement was not sufficient to justify further effort.

THE GOSHEN GAS-LIGHT COMPANY

effected a legal organization Sept. 13, 1867. The capital stock was fixed at $30,000, divided into shares of thirty dollars each. The first directors named in the instrument were Robert H. Berdell, David H. Haight, A. S. Murray, Thomas Edsall, George M. Grier, Ellis A. Post, John E. Howell, John Wallace, Henry Merriam. It was organized "for the purpose of supplying gas for the streets and for public and private buildings in the village of Goshen," and its time of duration was stated at fifty years. For various reasons this organization did not enter into business nor construct buildings.

The Goshen Gas-light Company now supplying the village was chartered in July, 1879. The officers then chosen and still in office were J. W. Hodges, president, William Blakeman, secretary and treasurer. The franchise was obtained from the trustees by Mr. B. Van Steenberg, conferring the right to manufacture gas in the village, lay gas mains along the streets, supply private and public buildings, and light the streets. The buildings were erected in July, August, and September, 1879. In the manufacture of gas a new method was adopted known as "the Averell Water Gas Process." It has been a great success and has been adopted by the Singer Sewing Machine Company, Elizabethport, N. J., in Norwood, Mass., and is now being introduced into Ellenville, Ulster Co. The gas-works were built by the firm of A. Vanderweiken & Co., of which Mr. Van Steenberg was a member. The latter, desiring to enter into the foundry enterprise mentioned elsewhere, retired from the management of the gas-works, and Mr. Vanderweiken is now the principal stockholder and the manager in charge. Four and a half miles of mains have been laid. The company supply at the present time seventy-two customers and sixty-nine street lamps.

ORANGE COUNTY MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, GOSHEN, was reorganized April 16, 1875, by papers filed in the office of the county clerk.

The commissioners appointed by the State department to examine the affairs of the institution were Matthew H. Robertson, George C. Willis, of Albany, and George W. Green, of Goshen. The authorization by the department was granted by Orlen W. Chapman, superintendent of insurance, Aug. 16, 1875. This institution thus newly authorized by the State department has a history of considerable age, and is one of the only two county mutual insurance companies remaining in the State, the other being that of Dutchess County. The Orange County Mutual was organized under a charter which was granted March 15, 1837. The directors named in the act were Isaac R. Van Duser, Horace W. Elliot, John J. Smith, John E. Phillips, John S. Crane, John B. Booth, Charles Monell, John Bailey, John W. Smith, Miles Hughes, Henry S. Beakes, Robert Denniston, Stephen W. Fullerton. The officers were John S. Crane, president; Miles Hughes, vice-president; David M. Westcott, secretary; Charles Monell, attorney and counselor; John Bailey, general agent. The first policy was issued to Jonas King, of the town of Chester. John S. Crane continued president until his death. Jan. 13, 1876, Benjamin F. Edsall was chosen to that office; he resigned March 3, 1879, and was succeeded at that date by Henry Bacon, the present incumbent. David M. Westcott, the first secretary, continued in office until his death. May 14, 1841, Horace W. Elliott was appointed his successor; he also remained in the office until his death. Oct. 8, 1863, John C. Wallace was appointed as the successor of Mr. Elliott; he resigned March 3, 1879, and on the same date Dudley Murray, the present incumbent, was appointed. The present directors (December, 1880) are George W. Sanford, F. H. Reeves, B. C. Sears, W. D. Van Vliet, A. B. Post, R. C. Coleman, N. H. Sanford, John C. Wallace, A. S. Dodge (deceased, vacancy not filled), H. A. Wadsworth, Ellis A. Post, Henry Bacon, John R. Halstead, Wm. M. Murray, J. W. Corwin. Wm. M. Murray is the present vice-president, and E. S. Turner is general superintendent.

NATIONAL BANK OF ORANGE COUNTY.

This institution was originally chartered in the winter of 1812 as "The President, Directors, and Company of the Bank of Orange County." The organization was made June 7, 1813, and the first board of directors comprised the following names: Richard Trimble, George Monell, John Barber, Abraham Schultz, James W. Wilkin, George D. Wickham, John Duer, David W. Westcott, John G. Hurtin, Moses Phillips, Jr., John Bradner, Alanson Austin, and Reuben Hopkins. George D. Wickham was chosen president and continued in that office until November, 1845. He was succeeded by Ambrose S. Murray, who is the present incumbent, after a service of thirty-five years in that position. Henry A. Townsend was cashier from the organization until July 31, 1813, when James W. Wilkin succeeded temporarily. He was followed, Sept. 3, 1813, by Morris Robinson, who remained cashier until June 2, 1820. Jonathan Burrill was then appointed and served until April 19, 1824. Henry Seward was then chosen cashier, and he continued in that capacity until Aug. 1, 1834. Ambrose S. Murray then served until November, 1845. On his election to the presidency, as above noted, Thomas T. Reeve became cashier, who continued until April 3, 1857. William T. Russell then served until November 27th of that year. He was succeeded by Charles J. Everett, the present cashier. George W. Murray is the present vice-president, and George A. Denniston clerk.

At the reorganization of 1832, the board of directors comprised the following: George D. Wickham, John W. Smith, Moses Phillips, Isaac Jennings, Hudson McFarlan, D. H. Moffatt, Jr., I. R. Van Duser, Samuel Williams, Oliver Davis, James W. Wilkin, James Hulse, Isaac Van Duser, Richard Trimble.

The bank was reorganized Jan. 1, 1862, under the General State Banking Law. The directors at that date were Albert S. Murray, George M. Grier, Richard M. Vail, George F. Talman, Algernon S. Dodge, Wm. H. Houston, George T. Wisner, Wm. F. Sharpe, Charles B. Hoffman, John H. Morris, George Mapes, John Wallace.

The present directors (December, 1880) are A. S. Murray, A. S. Dodge, Charles J. Everett, George W. Murray, R. M. Vail.

The original capital paid in was $105,600. At the new organization of 1862 the amount was increased to $110,000. The institution became a national bank Jan. 1, 1865. The banking-house was originally "up town," at the place which is now the residence of Ambrose S. Murray.* There it remained for forty years.

* It was temporarily opened first in the parlor of the house now owned by Charles J. Everett.

In 1853 the present building was erected. It is not large and showy, according to the modern usage in the erection of banks, but is nevertheless a very convenient building. The stock of the bank is valuable, the price for any shares which may happen to be put upon the market reaching to $180 and over; in one instance $200 is said to have been paid.

It has been able to declare large dividends through all its history, and especially during the last fifteen years. It represents a long and honorable career. The management has been conservative. Unity of control has produced its usual valuable results. There have been but two presidents in a period of sixty-seven years; and Mr. Murray's term of service in this bank approaches very nearly to half a century.

AMBROSE S. MURRAY.—Among the influential and substantial business men of Goshen is Hon. Ambrose S. Murray, who was born in the town of Wallkill, Orange Co., N. Y., Nov. 27, 1807, and for the past fifty years has been closely identified with the financial and business interests of the county, and the growth and prosperity of Goshen, where he has spent most of his active business life.

His paternal grandfather, George Murray, was born at Inverness, Scotland, and emigrated to America while a young man, as a soldier in the British army. He settled at Reading, Pa., where he married a Miss Snyder, and subsequently removed to Orange County, where he reared a large family of children, and where he spent the remainder of his life. His children were Alexander, John, George, William, James, Jacob, David, Charles, and one daughter, all of whom were married and reared families.

William, son of George Murray, born in Orange County, in 1773, married Mary Ann Beakes, of the same county, who died in 1847, aged seventy-two years. He died in 1849. He was a farmer by occupation, and resided in the town of Wallkill, where for many years he was an active and influential citizen. He was among the zealous and devoted members of the Baptist Church of that town, and officially identified as deacon.

In matters of religion and education he was a man always interested in their propagation, and a liberal contributor in their permanent establishment and prosperity.

He was identified politically with the Democratic party, and although naturally of a retiring disposition he held various places of trust and responsibility in his town, and was chosen one of the Presidential electors in New York State, to cast his vote for James K. Polk for President of the United States.

His children are Archibald Y.; Sally, who became the wife of William A. Sayer; Cynthia, who became the wife of Jonas Hulse; Amelia, wife of Tustin Moore, of Orange County; William; Edmund B.; Ambrose S.; Mary Ann, wife of Gabriel Dunning, of Wantage, Sussex Co., N. J.; and Henry B.

Ambrose S., son of William Murray, and subject of this sketch, spent his boyhood on the home farm, and in obtaining such an education as the common schools then afforded.

Coming as he did from a Scotch ancestry, he inherited that resolution and force of character that early in life gave him a place among business men, and made him esteemed for his integrity and early-developed business ability.

At the age of seventeen he became a clerk, at Middletown, N. Y., in the store of his uncle, Stacey Beakes, where he remained until the year 1831, when he came to Goshen as clerk in the Orange County Bank. Here was an opportunity for his business qualifications to develop, and such was the confidence reposed in him by its directors, that in 1834 he was elected its cashier, which place he creditably filled until the death of its president, George D. Wickham, in 1845, when he was chosen president of the bank, which position he has held since, a period of thirty-six years.

Before the reorganization of this bank under the national banking law, and while transacting business under its charter from the State, its bills were printed upon fine yellow tinted paper, which in consequence of their peculiar color, and the locality from which they originated, were known not only throughout the county, but the country, as "butter money."

Mr. Murray's yellow money, in consequence of his strict integrity and business capacity, was considered wherever and whenever presented equal to gold, and many of these notes may still be found in the possession of those who sacredly treasure them as mementoes of the past.

For a short time prior to the reorganization of the Wallkill Valley Railroad, and continuously since that time, Mr. Murray has been one of its directors.

He was a director of the Erie Railway for fourteen years ending in 1867, and is one of the directors of the "Farmers' Loan and Trust Company" of New York. He was formerly identified with the old Whig party, and upon the organization of the Republican party in 1856 he was active in the propagation of its principles, and has since unswervingly advocated its progressive measures. He was elected county treasurer, and served for three years beginning with 1851.

In the fall of 1855 he was elected in the Tenth Congressional District of New York to the Thirty-fourth Congress, and by re-election was a member also of the Thirty-fifth Congress of the United States.

Mr. Murray married, in 1836, Frances, daughter of Henry G. Wisner, a prominent lawyer of Goshen, whose wife was Sarah Talman. The children born of this union are Ellen, widow of the late John V. Beam, Jr., for many years a merchant in New York City; George W., who carries on mercantile business in New York, and officiates as vice-president of the National Bank of Orange County, at Goshen, of which his father is president; Wisner Murray, who for several years was in the bank at Goshen with his father, died in 1876, aged thirty-two years; Ambrose S., Jr., a graduate of Trinity College, is a practicing lawyer in New York; Russell, was graduated at Trinity College, and is a merchant in New York; and Francis W., who, after graduating at Yale, was graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, and by appointment is a surgeon in the Chambers Street Hospital of that city. Both George and Wisner Murray served in the late Rebellion; enlisted and went out with the Seventh New York Regiment.

THE GOSHEN NATIONAL BANK.

The preliminary meeting for organization was held Sept. 6, 1851. It was called by the subscribers to the stock, and there were present Barret Ames, B. F. Edsall, John S. Crane, Charles Reeves, Henry Merriam, William M. Graham, Henry S. Beakes, and Alexander Wright. Barret Ames, chairman. A resolution was passed directing a certificate of organization to be filed in accordance with law; the name at that time being "The Goshen Bank."

A formal meeting of stockholders was held Sept. 13, 1851, to complete the organization. Jeremiah Knight, of Monroe, was appointed chairman, and William Montgomery secretary. All the steps necessary to open the bank for business were then taken, and the following board of directors chosen: Henry S. Beakes, Benjamin F. Edsall, John S. Crane, Gabriel Seely, Jeremiah Knight, Marcus Sears, Alexander Wright, Henry Merriam, Charles M. Reeves, Barret Ames, Peter Townsend.

At the first meeting of the directors, held on the same day, Barret Ames, chairman, Alexander Wright was duly elected president, and William L. Beakes appointed cashier. The bank was opened for business Nov. 12, 1851. Mr. Wright continued in office until his resignation, Nov. 17, 1857; and under the same date, William Murray was chosen his successor. He served until his death, Aug. 25, 1875. Aug. 31, 1875, William T. Russell was chosen president, and is the present incumbent (December, 1880). He had previously served as vice-president for several years.

Mr. Beakes, the first cashier, served until his resignation, Nov. 21, 1857. He was succeeded by William T. Russell, chosen the same day. He continued cashier until April 9, 1866, when he resigned, and was succeeded by William M. Murray, the present incumbent of that office. Charles S. Edsall served as teller from November, 1866, to November, 1879, when he was succeeded by John Ogden Smith, the present teller. The present board of directors (December, 1880) comprises the following names: William T. Russell, Benjamin F. Edsall, Henry Merriam, James Durland, Nathan C. Sanford, George Grier, William M. Murray.

The change to a national bank was made under the authorization of the comptroller of the currency, bearing date July 8, 1865. The bank commenced doing business under this authority soon after. The business was first transacted in the building now owned by John Sturtz; not long after it was moved to the building now owned by L. and W. Poppino, on Main Street.

The present building was erected by the bank in 1869, and occupied in April, 1870. The expense of the lot, building, and fixtures was about $15,000. The capital of the bank was originally established at $110,000, in shares of $100 each, and remains the same at the present time. Since Nov. 17, 1857, in addition to making large semi-annual dividends, the bank has accumulated a surplus of $22,000, and of other undivided profits, $26,000. The stock of this bank is exceedingly valuable, bringing at times when put upon the market $160, and one sale was made a short time since at $162.50. The bank building is a very fine edifice of modern construction, with high ceiling and a convenient arrangement of rooms. It has a burglar-proof vault with walls of great thickness, and closed with the latest improved chronometer lock.

HON. WILLIAM MURRAY.—His paternal grandfather, George Murray, was born at Inverness, Scotland, and while a young man came to America as a soldier in the British army. He resided at Reading, Pa., but for many years prior to his decease was a resident of Orange County, where he died. His wife was a Miss Snyder, who bore him eight sons and one daughter, of whom William was father of our subject, and was born in Orange County in 1773. William Murray was a farmer in the town of Walkill, an active and influential citizen of the county, and one of the deacons in the Baptist Church where he resided.

Politically he was a Democrat, and by that party in the State was honored as one of the Presidential electors to cast his vote for James K. Polk. He died in 1849. His wife, Mary Ann, a sister of Stacey Beakes, died in 1847, aged seventy-two years. Of their family of five sons and four daughters, William, subject of this memoir, was second son, and was born in the town of Walkill, near Middletown, Orange Co., Oct. 1, 1803. He obtained a good education in boyhood in the schools of his native place, and at about the age of sixteen began his business life as a clerk in the store of his uncle, Stacey Beakes, of Middletown, N. Y., where he laid the foundation for business capacity for which he afterwards became so distinguished. He subsequently became a clerk in a dry goods jobbing-house in New York city, and after a few years became a member of the partnership, under the firm-name of Ira Smith & Co., in which successful business relation he remained until 1841, when he removed to Goshen, where he continued to reside, with the exception of ten years spent at Phillipsburgh on his farm, until his death, which occurred Aug. 25, 1875.

For more than thirty years after his early retirement from a prosperous mercantile career, Mr. Murray was a resident of Goshen and vicinity, and during the most of those years he occupied in the community positions of trust and responsibility. Public and private interests were largely committed to his care and watchfulness, and it is faint praise of him to say that he was true to every trust, and that if he had enemies, the most censorious of them could not point to one instance wherein infallible judgment and perfect integrity failed to govern his actions.

In 1850 he was elected to Congress on the Democratic ticket, and served in the Thirty-third Congress. By re-election he was a member also of the Thirty-fourth Congress of the United States, and none deserved a higher position than Mr. Murray for ability, sound logic, sagacity, and unspotted integrity.

During his second term he was called upon to cast his vote upon Mr. Douglas' Territorial bill, which involved the repeal of the Missouri Compromise Line of 1820. The position was not void of embarrassment. Mr. Murray had been elected, at the time of President Pierce's election, by the suffrages of the Democratic party. Mr. Pierce favored the bill, and his party showed a disposition to sustain him in such support. Mr. Murray's support was eagerly sought and strongly urged by the administration. The President and the cabinet held him in high estimation, and knew that his name would be a tower of strength if it could be procured to indorse the new policy. But to Mr. Murray the line of duty did not seem to lie in that direction, and no inducement availed to secure his co-operation in the disturbance of this long-sanctioned compromise. His opposition was steady, vigilant, and unyielding, and his vote was cast against the Douglas bill on its final passage, and for this he was read out of his party. He was instrumental in the organization of the Republican party, and generally afterwards acted with it.

On the expiration of his second term he returned to his farm on the banks of the Wallkill, and there remained until 1857, when he was called to take the presidency of the Goshen Bank. How useful and skillful he was in this new field of labor, the success of the bank demonstrated before his decease; and the flourishing financial condition of that institution over which he presided was in a great measure due to his foresight and good management.

His sterling patriotism deserves grateful mention. He was not only liberal in his monetary contributions towards the conduct of our late civil war, but he further contributed two of his sons to the defense of the nation's honor, thereby making his patriotism practical. He loved his fellow-men, and he was always, and to all, just, generous, and true. The close of his life was marked by a universal expression of personal bereavement.

Mr. Murray married, July 13, 1837, Ellen Maria, only daughter of Capt. White and Abby (Robertson) Matlack (formerly spelled Matlock), of New York City. She was born May 22, 1809, and had an only brother, Robert R. Matlack, who was for several years a merchant in New York, and died in middle life in Virginia. Her father was a sea-faring man all his life, traded between Lisbon and Cadiz for several years, and for thirty years he traded between New York and Liverpool. This was in the early part of the century, and his business was done in sailing vessels. He was born in Philadelphia, Feb. 16, 1778, and died in New York about 1834. His wife survived him only about two years. Her paternal grandfather, White Matlack, born at Hatten Field, N. J., Nov. 7, 1745 (O. S.), married, June 21, 1768, Mary Hawkshurst, who was born on Long Island, at Hempstead Harbor, Nov. 22, 1747.

The progenitor of the Matlack family, a Quaker, emigrated from Derbyshire, England, and settled at Philadelphia about the time of the settlement of William Penn; and one of his descendants, Timothy, was father of the last named, White Matlack.

Mrs. Murray's mother, Abby Robertson, was born at Portsmouth, N. H., and her grandfather, Robert Robertson, was a native of Dalkeith, Scotland.

The children of William and Ellen Maria Murray are William M., who began a clerkship in the Goshen Bank in 1863, and was elected its cashier in January, 1866, which position he retains in 1881.

Maj. Henry Spencer Murray enlisted in the Seventh New York State Militia, which was employed to guard Washington in the beginning of the late civil war, and subsequently to guard Baltimore. In the fall of 1862 he raised a company for the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment of Volunteers, and joined the Army of the Potomac; was in the battle of Chancellorsville, in May, 1863, where he was wounded and captured, but afterwards paroled. At the battle of Gettysburg, the major and colonel of his regiment being killed, he was promoted from captain to the rank of major, and assigned to duty at the camp of paroled prisoners at Annapolis, where he remained until regularly exchanged, about January, 1864. He again joined the regiment, and followed the events of the army until the battle of Boynton Road, Oct. 27, 1864, when he was again wounded, captured, and placed in Libby Prison, where he remained until about the close of the war, when he was regularly discharged. He never recovered from the effects of his first wound, and died at Goshen, March 6, 1874.

Robert R. Murray enlisted in 1862, in the company commanded by his brother, Capt. Henry S. Murray, and remained in constant service until the close of the war. He was wounded at the battle of Chancellorsville in the hand, but recovered from its effects, except the loss of a finger. He was regularly discharged upon the closing of hostilities, returned to Goshen, and has been engaged in mercantile business there for the past six years. The youngest of this family of children is Miss Abby M. Murray.

H. S. Russell

WILLIAM T. RUSSELL.—His paternal ancestors were early settlers in New England, and his great-grandfather once owned the land where New Bedford, Mass., is located. His father, John W., son of Humphrey and Berthia (Wady) Russell, settled in New York City while a young man, where he married Frances M., daughter of Samuel Talman.

He was an enterprising business man of New York for many years, where he was engaged in shipping interests, and he is said to have established the first line of sailing packets between that city and New Orleans. In 1829 he settled in the town of Goshen, Orange Co., where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1842. His wife survived him, and died in 1858.

Their children are Edward C.; Phebe A., wife of John D. Monell, of New York; and William T. Russell, who was born in New York, Dec. 12, 1821, and was therefore eight years of age when the family settled in Orange County.

He received a sound, practical education during his minority, being for some time a pupil of the well-known scholar and teacher, Rev. Clarkson Dunn, of Newton, N. J., and was also a student at Hartford grammar school. Leaving school in 1840, for three years he remained at home on the farm. From 1843 to 1857 he was a partner with David Redfield in the dry-goods trade in Goshen.

In 1857 he was chosen cashier of the Orange County Bank, but after serving for a few months he accepted the position of cashier of the Goshen Bank, which place he satisfactorily filled until the spring of 1865 and resigned. He acted as vice-president of that bank from January, 1870, until August, 1875, when, upon the death of its president, Hon. William Murray, he was chosen president of the bank, which position he retains in 1881.

GOSHEN SAVINGS-BANK

was organized under a special act passed April 11, 1871. The meeting to organize under the act was held April 14th, and the bank was opened for business May 1, 1871. The first depositor was Charles H. Westervelt.

The first trustees were E. A. Post, Henry Morrison, A. B. Post, Benjamin F. Edsall, Lewis Cuddeback, George D. Wilson, Charles W. Thompson. E. A. Post was chosen president, B. T. Edsall first vice-president, Henry Merriam second vice-president. These officers continue to the present time (December, 1880). Other members of the board now are Dudley Murray, Henry Bacon, Charles J. Elliot, Charles M. Thompson, A. B. Post, Lewis Cuddeback.

The first secretary and treasurer was Lewis Cuddeback. He was succeeded by Dudley Murray, the present incumbent of that office.

The amount of deposits Dec. 1, 1880, was $192,-380.35.

X.—PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

These are mostly the old homesteads, around which family traditions cluster. There are neither battle-grounds nor encampments of armies to be traced in Goshen. The central part of the village is a place fruitful in suggestions of the past. Courts of justice were held here a hundred and fifty years ago. Here is where the earnest discussions that preceded the Revolution occurred. Here the symbol of royal supremacy was broken by the hammer of a sturdy patriot, whose hatred of kingly authority did not wait for the breaking out of the war. Tradition points to the spot also where Claudius Smith was executed, not far from the present band-stand at the lower corner of the park. The Orange County Hotel occupies the site of the court-house of 1738, and a portion of the wall belonging to the early building constitutes a part of the present south wall of the hotel. There are doubtless some other ancient structures in the village, but nearly all have given way to buildings of modern times.

THE OLD WESTCOTT WELL.

This was found forty years ago or more on the land of David M. Westcott, in Goshen village. It was several feet beneath the surface, and covered carefully with a large flat stone. Beneath that it was regularly stoned up. It has been suggested that it was dug by French explorers traveling from north to south soon after the discovery of this country; but there is no proof of this, nothing but conjecture.

It has been supposed that it was dug, stoned up, and covered by early surveyors, about the time of Christopher Denne's settlement, perhaps earlier, perhaps later; that it was near one of their temporary cabins, in which they lived while surveying. They needed such a well; made its covering somewhat down in the ground, which in after-years became easily covered and lost during the early cultivation of the field.

There has also been another supposition: that during the colonial period, either in the war of 1756 or earlier, a rude block-house fort or building of some kind for protection was erected by the people of Goshen at this point, and that this well was sunk within the fort as an absolutely secure source of water in case of an attack, or especially a prolonged siege.*

If buildings and places of historical significance are few, it is evident, from the collection of relics at a Martha Washington tea-party in 1876, that certain families of Goshen are in possession of many curiosities of the past. Among these may be named the original assessment-roll of 1775, copied for this county history, O. B. Tuthill; a wooden trunk of 1620, Victor M. Drake; deed from Cadwallader Colden to Wm. Bull, 1723; black-flint Indian pestle, Miss Fanny Denton; salt-cellar from the "Mayflower," Mrs.

* This wonderful discovery was probably only the uncovering of an old well dug for the first minister's residence, and needs no historic explanation.

Moody; copy of the Declaration of Independence, printed in Boston on cotton, 1776, Miss Ethalinda Drake; snuff-box one hundred years old, Silas Horton; a silver token, which the newspaper that we quote from gravely affirms was given by Queen Anne to the Reformed Church at Neelytown, 1710,* Mrs. James P. Hoffman; deed from John Tuthill and David Horton to Barnabas Horton for a farm in Goshen, 1730. There were many others, "too numerous to mention." Mr. Montanye, of the Goshen Independent, has a small collection of old newspapers, very valuable,—Goshen Repository, vol. ii. No. 570, Dec. 31, 1799, in mourning for Washington; The Orange Patriot, vol. ii., Aug. 4 and Aug. 11, 1801; Goshen Repository, Sept. 26, 1797.

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

Goshen is very similar in its agricultural capabilities to the other towns in the central part of the county. The surface is rolling or moderately hilly. The soil is good, and many valuable farms abound. The labor of the industrious farmer is rewarded in every part of the town by abundant crops. All the grains usual to this section of the country are successfully produced. The trade in milk is extensive, and the conveniences for daily shipment to New York are excellent, by means of the Erie Railroad, the Wallkill Valley and the Pine Island branch of the Erie. Much attention is given to the raising of fine cattle, and many choice specimens may be seen upon various farms in all parts of the town. Superior horses are bred in Goshen. A driving-track at the village affords a convenient place for testing their speed, and during quite a portion of the year horses may daily be seen in training, whose value would often excite the astonishment of a stranger unacquainted with Orange County stock.

It ought to be added that recently the Drowned Lands, in Goshen, are now being devoted to onion culture; that the product, both in size, quantity, and quality, rivals the best Chester onion-fields, and it is confidently expected that a much greater culture of this fragrant esculent may be expected in this town.

ORANGE COUNTY AGRICULTURAL WORKS.

This is an old-established foundry, William V. Ray proprietor. The line of works consists of agricultural implements and a general foundry business. Mr. Ray also manufactures small steam-engines of four or five horse-power. He has made for some years a specialty of iron fence, and sends out from his establishment very fine specimens of work.

GOSHEN BRICKYARD AND TILE-WORKS.

This business was begun about 1868 by Jacob W. Hayne and John Wallace. Mr. Peter Hayne became associated in the business in 1870, and five years later became sole proprietor. The line of work consists of brick, both common and pressed, drain tile and glazed tile of large size. The clay deposit is abundant, lying convenient to the works, and of excellent quality.

THE RIDER ENGINE COMPANY OF GOSHEN

was organized by a certificate filed Nov. 12, 1879. The object of said association was stated to be "the manufacture and sale of engines, and the carrying on of a general foundry and machine business." The capital stock is $90,000, divided into ninety shares.

The trustees named in the instrument were William M. Sayre, Henry Merriam, Jason W. Corwin, and Frank A. Merriam. The manufactory is located at Walden, in the town of Montgomery. The company from which they purchased was Rider, Wooster & Co. The business had been under their management for six or seven years.

PLANING-MILLS.

There have been two in operation at times in Goshen village, but neither of them are now in operation, though the buildings are standing.

GOSHEN FOUNDRY AND GAS MACHINERY COMPANY.

This is a new enterprise, and is an important addition to the business interests of Goshen. The company was organized in May, 1880. The officers are B. Van Steenbergh, president; H. H. Paulsen, treasurer; George E. Dougherty, secretary. The capital stock is $40,000. The buildings were commenced about the middle of April, and completed in September. The company secured a convenient lot of nearly three acres, lying near the Erie Railroad. A branch track is laid through their property, supplying facilities for shipment at the foundry. The buildings are constructed in the best manner, and furnished with the latest improved machinery. The material used in erecting them is brick. The machine building is 40 by 70 feet, and in part two stories high; the foundry is 40 by 80; the carpenter- and pattern-shop, 20 by 90. There is also a handsome office elegantly fitted up; it is 16 by 22, and two stories in height. Business was commenced about the 1st of October, 1880. Twenty-five hands are employed, and the works are in active operation. They are built of such capacity as to allow the proprietors to increase the business to any extent which the demands of the future may require. The line of work is that of a general foundry, but the manufacture of gas machinery is given special attention.

The managers are men of energy, and the enterprise is already attracting an excellent line of custom. Orders for work to the amount of $16,000 were recently received in a single day. The company have erected a handsome block of dwellings for their employés, comprising eleven separate tenements. They have also built two dwellings of wood. In the erection of all the buildings upon the property regard has been had to beauty of exterior as well as to solidity of construction and convenience.

CREAMERIES.

These will, perhaps, be too common in Orange County soon for any special notice. There are four in this town,—one by Carpenter Howells, at Goshen; one by Bailey & Co., near the Orange County farm; one by John A. Ryerson, near the village; and one at Conklingtown, by Youngs, Wells, and others.

XII.—MILITARY.

Considerable military interest seems to have existed in Goshen from the earliest settlement. Solomon Carpenter was lieutenant-colonel in the regiment of 1738, under command of Col. Vincent Matthews. James Thompson was quartermaster, and Michael Jackson adjutant. In all military matters Goshen was a rallying-point. Doubtless soon after the settlement every able-bodied man was enrolled in the militia, and trainings and military drills took place at Goshen. It was not, however, until some years after the first settlement that any troubles arose which called the militia of Goshen into actual service.

OLD FRENCH WAR.

Goshen became very early the most important, populous, and publicly-known place in the county, and its people were called upon to take an active part in all matters of a public character or which concerned their interests. These events were largely of a warlike character, commencing with the aggressions of East New Jersey as early perhaps as 1730, then continued through the old French and Indian war, and so down to the Revolution and the battle of Minisink, in each and all of which the inhabitants of this region turned out with alacrity, and discharged their duty with good will and patriotic honesty. In relation to these services in the French and Indian war, it may be said that they were principally on the frontiers of Orange and Ulster, and in the northern part of the State. (See General History.)

REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

During this struggle Goshen was an important point of military preparation, as it had been in the colonial period. For the names of those who became soldiers in that war we refer to the old militia-rolls or other papers of the General History. The one engagement in which Goshen had so large a share and suffered so severely was the battle of Minisink. For convenience, we treat of that in connection with the obsequies to the memory of the fallen in the battle of Minisink in 1822.

Public interest in gathering up the remains of the slaughtered heroes of that fearful struggle seems to have received the first public expression in November, 1821. A communication appeared in the Independent Republican, signed "Vindex Mortuorum." At a public meeting held at the house of Jesse Edsall, in Goshen, Nov. 14, 1821, Hon. James Finch was called to the chair, and Jesse Wood, Jr., appointed secretary. A committee to gather up the bones was named, consisting of John Hathorn, Thomas Waters, Nathan Arnout, Jacobus Swartwout, James Reeves, Daniel Myers, Henry G. Wisner, Maj. James Tusten, Michael A. Jones, Alsop Vail, John Barker, Col. Benjamin Webb, Dr. David R. Arnell, James W. Carpenter, Jesse Wood, Jr., Thomas Jackson, James Burt, Col. Benjamin Dunning, Col. Jonathan Bailey, James Finch, Jr., Peter E. Gumaer, and James Van Vleet, Jr.

Committees were appointed in each town to solicit donations to meet the expenses of obtaining the bones, interring them, and erecting a monument over the graves. These committees were as follows: Goshen, G. D. Wickham, James W. Carpenter, Amzi L. Ball, Townsend Seeley, Daniel H. Denton; Warwick, Samuel S. Seward, Robert Farrier, James Wheeler, Jesse Wood, Jr., Stephen A. Burt; Minisink, George Phillips, Peter Holbert, Joshua Sayre, John T. Jansen, Jr., Increase B. Stoddard; Walkkill, Erastus Mapes, Jacob Dunning, William Phillips, Joshua Hornbeck, Adam Millspaugh; Deepark, James Finch, Jr., Isaac Otis, Martin L. Corwin, Abraham Cuddeback, Benjamin Van Inwegen; Monroe, Robert Fowler, George Wilkes, Benjamin Cunningham, Joseph R. Andrews, Israel Green; Cornwall, William A. Clark, Nathan Westcott, Isaac Van Duzer, Oliver Gridley, Elihu Hedges; New Windsor, Robert B. Burnet, Joseph Morrell, Samuel Brewster, William Sly, Charles Ludlow; Newburgh, Isaac Belknap, William Wear, Jr., Cornelius Wood, Alexander Ross, Daniel Tooker; Montgomery, John Blake, Samuel Hunter, David Strahan, Moses Crawford, Andrew Bedford; Blooming-Grove, Selah Strong, Hector Craig, Moses Ely, William Horton, Henry Seeley.

The following is taken from the Independent Republican of April 29, 1822:

"All the bones that could be found of the brave men who fell in the battle of Minisink were collected from the battle-ground on Wednesday last, and brought to the village on the day following. They are now in the possession of the committee, with whom they will remain until the anniversary of the day upon which the battle was fought.

"In securing the bones neither pains nor expense were spared. The party traveled about forty miles the first day, and half of that distance was a complete wilderness. They put up for the night at Mrs. Watkins', who lived about six miles from the battle-ground, to which they proceeded the next morning. Some left their horses behind, it being very difficult to get along with a horse. The country around was a complete wilderness, scarcely exhibiting a trace of human footsteps. The battle was commenced on the banks of the Delaware, opposite the mouth of the Lackawack, and terminated about three-quarters of a mile from the river. It was a matter of astonishment to many of the party when they were shown the course taken by our troops. Some of the descents are really frightful. Most of the bones were found on the ground where the battle was fought; but some were found some distance away, which undoubtedly belonged to the wounded who had died with hunger and fatigue."

PROGRAMME OF THE EXERCISES AND THE ORDER OF THE FUNERAL PROCESSION, JULY 22, 1822.

At the separation of forty-three years the bones of forty-four of our fellow-citizens who were slain at the battle of Minisink by the Indians have been collected, and will be deposited in the old burying-ground in the village of Goshen.

The special committee have agreed upon the following arrangements for rendering funeral honors to the remains of those who fell in that battle:

1. Maj. Worth is appointed marshal of the day, and all orders proceeding from him will be respected and obeyed accordingly.

2. Col. Faulkner and Capt. Ball are appointed aides to the marshal of the day.

3. It is requested that stores, offices, and other places of business be closed, and that no carriages or persons on horseback appear on the street through which the procession is to pass from the commencement thereof to the end.

4. It is recommended to the citizens, as well as those in the procession, to be silent during the solemnities of the day.

5. The general order of the procession will be four deep.

6. The line of the procession will form on the street between James W. 7. On the arrival of the front of the procession at the gate opposite the church the whole will halt upon a signal for that purpose, and open to the right and left to admit the biers and procession, according to the order of the marshal of the day.

8. During the movements of the procession minute-guns will be fired and the village bell tolled.

9. Signal-guns will be fired in the following order:

1. Three guns will be fired in quick succession at sunrise to announce the solemnities of the day.

2. One gun will be fired at eleven o'clock as the signal of parade, when the different societies, companies, etc., will form at their respective places of rendezvous.

3. One gun at twelve o'clock for forming the line.

4. Two guns in quick succession for the procession to move.

5. One gun for the procession to halt and open to the right and left, as will be directed by the marshal of the day.

JAMES W. CARPENTER, Committee.

The proceedings were conducted in accordance with the above arrangement. It was estimated that 15,000 people were present. The procession was very large, and was conducted with becoming solemnity.

The corner-stone was laid by Gen. Hathorn, who commanded the forces of the Spartan band at the battle. The veteran, about eighty years of age, was deeply touched as the scenes of the slaughter forty-three years before swept through his mind and kindled the fearful memories of the past.

At no previous time in the history of Goshen were so many people collected together. The military of the county, and especially the corps of cadets from West Point, under their gallant commander, Maj. Worth, who had kindly consented to be present and direct the movements of the military, looked remarkably well; they performed their evolutions with the accuracy of trained soldiers. The procession formed on the occasion moved with the solemn dignity inspired by the patriot event they came to celebrate. The address of the Rev. James R. Wilson was touching, forcible, and eloquent, and his manner, as he spoke of the dried bones of our ancestors slain in Indian battle, was admirably calculated to light up anew the fires of the Revolution in the breast of the aged and time-worn patriot, and animate the youth of the land to imitate their deeds of valor in the just defense of their country.

Dr. Wilson's address consisted largely of a detailed description of the battle. In this respect it can no longer be considered as authority upon that subject. The more careful study given to the Minisink affair in recent years and the clearer light thus thrown upon it dispel very many traditions concerning it. He closed as follows:

"You will permit me to address the noble sentiments of your souls, and invite you to emulate the example of these heroes in deeds of noble daring should your country ever call. The young and those now around me under arms may see our country involved in dangers that will require even the sacrifice of life for her safety."

The monument of 1822 was not the present fine shaft which adorns the public grounds at Goshen; that was erected at a subsequent date, as shown below. The monument of 1822 was a much plainer affair. It had one central shaft, however, on which were inscribed the names of the dead. On the erection of the new monument the former block became the private property of John Edward Howell, of Goshen, and was donated by him to the committee of the Sullivan County celebration in 1879, to be erected upon the battle-ground in that county.

Among those who were in the battle but escaped with their lives were Col. John Hathorn, of Warwick; Adj. Robert Armstrong, of Florida; Maj. John Poppino, of Summerville; Maj. John Wood, of Goshen; Sergt. Caleb Goldsmith, of Goshen; Maj. Meeker and Evi DeWitt, of New Jersey; Capt. Abraham Cuddeback, of Deerpark; Daniel Myers, of Minisink, who is said to have killed more Indians than any other man during the engagement; and Jonathan Bailey, of Wawayanda. It is probably not possible to prepare a complete list of those who went to repulse Brant. Traditions differ greatly upon that point, ranging from 80 to 130. With 45 killed, the former estimate leaves 35 to account for.

It has been something of a question whether the company who were engaged with the Indians at the battle of Minisink was an organized force and called out by formal orders, or whether it was entirely a volunteer force without regular organization, except as they yielded obedience to recognized officers in the regular militia. It would appear that in part, at least, it was called out by a regular order. Mr. Victor M. Drake, a few years since, unearthed the following order:

"To CALEB GOLDSMITH, Sergt.:

"You are hereby requested to warn your class and march to Minisink, hereof fail not, as you will answer the county.

"Given under my hand this 17th* day of July, 1779.

"SAMUEL JONES, Captain."

The names of this class were indorsed as follows: Stephen Smith, Benjamin Dunning, Charles Weeks.

THE CELEBRATION OF JULY 22, 1862.

This occurred at the unveiling of the new monument erected in honor of the heroes of Minisink by the generous donation of Dr. Merritt H. Cash, of Wawayanda. Dr. Cash had always taken a patriotic interest in the Revolutionary events occurring in this section of country, and particularly in those of Minisink and Wyoming. He had a direct family connection with the latter, his grandfather having been in the fight at Wilkesbarre, and the man who broke through the Indian lines and went for help. Daniel Cash afterwards settled in Orange County, as did the Fullertons and others from the Wyoming Valley. Dr. Cash had studied the story of Minisink well, and desiring that a fitting monument should be erected in memory of that battle, he left by his will $4000 for that purpose. He died at the age of fifty-eight, April 26, 1861. The money thus donated was all expended upon the monument, the erection of the iron fence and other expenses being born by the citizens.

PROGRAMME OF CELEBRATION, JULY 22, 1862.

1. Prayer by Rev. George Potts, D.D., of New York.
2. Music by the bands.
3. Reception of the Society of the Sons of Orange and Sullivan, with an address from David F. Gedney, responded to by a member of the society.
4. Music.
5. Oration by John C. Dimmick, Esq.
6. Music.
7. Address by a member of the Society of the Sons of Orange and Sullivan.
8. Music.

This programme was carried out in full. All the proceedings were in excellent keeping with the occasion. It was impossible to restrain the speakers or the audience to the scenes of Minisink a hundred years before.

The then critical condition of the country, and the high demands of the hour, evoked a rising tide of emotion that commingled with and ennobled every thought of the past. The Rev. Dr. Potts prayed "the Divine Ruler to protect those brave men who are defending the cause of the Union upon the battlefield, and to strike from the temple of liberty the sacrilegious hand of the traitor."

Mr. David F. Gedney said, "No human being could lift the veil which now enveloped our native land. He trusted she would emerge from her darkness radiant with starry brightness."

Mr. A. S. VanDuzer said, "We have come here to meet the loved of other days, to rekindle within our hearts the fires of patriotism, and to offer prayer for the brave departed. Alas! what a chalice of woe and desolation has been presented to the lips of the American people. I seem to hear the voices of those whose bones lie under that icy marble, calling to us to march forward with cold steel and belching cannon until this accursed rebellion is subdued. My thoughts inevitably run forward into coming years. It is now our blessed privilege to teach rebellion a never-ending lesson. Future generations will erect monuments to the memory of the noble army of martyrs who have fallen in its path."

Mr. John C. Dimmick, the orator of the day, also closed his eloquent address with an impassioned appeal to the young men of the assemblage to rush to the conflict.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION, JULY 22, 1879.

The Minisink battle can never be forgotten by the citizens of Goshen. It has formed the theme of fire-side stories for a hundred years. It is embalmed in the traditions of families whose ancestors died upon those rocky heights, or shared in the struggle, only escaping with their lives.

Had it been attended with but little loss of life, the battle of Minisink would probably have never taken an important place in either State or local annals. It was the bloody nature of the tragedy which drew such forcible attention to it in the earlier years. The fact that so many lost their lives in the fight, that at its close there were thirty-three widows in the single church of Goshen, made an impression that can never die out from this community.

The simple horror of the massacre, too, obscured other considerations, and prevented, perhaps, a full understanding of the relative importance of the battle in the national contest.

The names of Saratoga, of Trenton, of Yorktown, justly have greater prominence in the records of Revolutionary valor, but on none of those fields was there more heroic and desperate fighting than on the rocky plateau where the men of Goshen met the shock of battle, and died that their homes might be saved from invasion. Brant had carried that bloody height, but it was at a fearful sacrifice of his own men, and he dared not make a further movement eastward. The militia of Goshen had died, but their valor had not been in vain. The national cause passed safely through a dangerous crisis; a few months later the large and well-appointed army under Gen. Sullivan carried death and destruction to the Indian regions of central and western New York. The tide of battle changed. The dark days of 1779 passed forever away. No Indian force ever again sought to invade the homes of a people whose heroic fighting had reddened the rocky heights with their own and their enemy's blood.

As the centennial anniversary of the battle approached in 1879 it attracted much attention, and two celebrations of the event took place, one at Goshen, from whose vicinity most of the troops had gone to the battle a hundred years before, the other on the battle-ground itself in Sullivan County. There was an appropriateness in both these celebrations, so that in no especial manner were they rivals of each other.

At Goshen the committee of arrangements consisted of A. J. Moore, B. F. Bailey, L. Cuddeback, Alfred Neafie, C. G. Elliot, J. H. Goodale, C. E. Mellspaugh, J. M. Allerton, Joel Wilson, H. A. Wadsworth, Victor M. Drake, J. W. Corwin, George W. Greene, George W. Seward, Chauncey Thomas.

The programme was as follows:

1. Prayer by Rev. W. D. Snodgrass, D.D.
2. Address of welcome on behalf of the citizens and trustees by Harrison W. Hanny, president of the village of Goshen, and introducing the orator of the day.
3. Address by Hon. James W. Taylor, of Newburgh, president of the day.
4. Music by the Goshen Cornet Band.
5. Oration by Rev. J. Halstead Carroll, of Newburgh.
6. Music.
7. Address by Hon. C. H. Winfield, of New York City.
8. Address by Gen. James A. Briggs, of Brooklyn.
9. Music.
10. Benediction.

The celebration was in every respect a success. There was a large gathering of citizens. The procession, the addresses, the music, were in every respect worthy of the occasion.

REVOLUTIONARY RECORDS.

We add the following papers, which show something of the valuable material that once existed in the office of the town clerk of Goshen:

"At an annual town-meeting of the freeholders and inhabitants of the precinct of Goshen, in the county aforesaid, on Tuesday, the 4th of April, 1775, the following question, whether any deputies should be sent from this precinct to meet deputies from the other counties of New York the 20th instant, to join with them in choosing proper persons as delegates on the part of this province, to meet in general Congress at Philadelphia on the 10th of May next, was put, and carried unanimously in the affirmative.

"A motion was then made by several persons that Henry Wisner and Peter Clowes, Esquires, be appointed deputies for the above purpose, and the question being accordingly put, it was carried in the affirmative without one dissenting voice.

"And at an annual town-meeting held the day aforesaid at Cornwall precinct, in the county aforesaid, a motion was made that Mr. Israel Seeley, of said precinct, be appointed one of the deputies for the aforesaid county, to meet deputies from the other counties at New York on the 20th instant, to join in choosing some proper persons to be sent as delegates to represent this province in general Congress at Philadelphia the 10th of next month, and the question being accordingly put, it was carried by a great majority in the affirmative."

"At a meeting of the freeholders and inhabitants of the precinct of Goshen, in the county of Orange, and colony of New York, assembled at the house of Mr. Isaac Nicoll, inn-holder, in the town of Goshen, on Wednesday, the 10th day of May, 1777, Peter Clowes chairman.

"Resolved, unanimously, That as the present critical situation of affairs makes it necessary for a Provincial Congress to be held, that Michael Jackson, Peter Clowes, Benjamin Tusten, and William Allison, or any two of them, do attend therein at the city of New York on the 22d day of this instant, May, as delegates for this precinct.

"By order of the meeting,

"BALTH. DE HEART, Clerk."

MEXICAN WAR.

A company was enlisted in Goshen and vicinity during the winter of 1846-47 for service in the Mexican war. It became Company K, Tenth United States Infantry. Capt. Alexander Wilkin, son of Samuel J. Wilkin, was the leading man in the enterprise, and it was largely due to his energy that the company was raised. He was assisted by Francis M. Cummins, who was appointed first lieutenant.

The company was attached to the army of the Rio Grande under Gen. Taylor. Lieut. Cummins was promoted, April 17, 1848, to the captaincy, in place of Mr. Wilkin, who had resigned. His commission bears the signatures of James K. Polk, President of the United States, and William L. Marcy, Secretary of War.

We give the roll of the company as it is now preserved by Mr. Cummins, though it probably lacks one or more names. They are as follows:

Alexander Wilkin, captain; Francis M. Cummins, first lieutenant; Peter H. Brewer (New Jersey), second lieutenant; N. Millett (New York City), first sergeant; Wm. Fisher (Goshen), second sergeant; S. Holly (Goshen), third sergeant; Riley Lane (Shandaken, Ulster Co.), fourth sergeant; Aaron Clearwater (Goshen), first corporal; Orris Judd, second corporal; Wm. Dickerson, third corporal; Wm. Blake, Wm. Bein, Felix Burns (Goshen), James Carrigan, Henry Champton, Wm. Davis, Jesse Enhout, Jacob Jackson, Patrick Harney, John A. Kennedy, Herman Lane, Wm. Martin, Andrew Martin, E. S. McCarter (Hamptonburgh), Wm. Muliner, John O'Brien, Jesse Middagh, Edward Nickerson, Sylvester Parrot, Wm. E. Quinn, Morris Radney, Samuel P. Smith, Patrick Stevens, Sylvanus Swartwout, Cornelius Schoonmaker (1st), Henry Terwilliger, Joseph Weed, Wm. Winno, Erastus Wright, John Winters, Washington Eastly, John Barrett, Charles Case (drummer-boy, of Unionville), Wm. Corwin, Wm. Cromley, Calvin Davis, David Hays, Edward E. Jackson (Goshen), Samuel Kelly, Lawrence Kilbride, Samuel Langdon, Patrick Martin, O. P. McCarter (Hamptonburgh), Francis McKernna, James Muliner, John F. Howard, Robert McLaughlin, James O'Malley, Jonathan Pound, Samuel Reed, Uzal Roe, Wm. S. Smith, Samuel Smith, John Sumpft, H. T. Schoonmaker, Cornelius Schoonmaker (2d), Wm. Van Tassel, Isaac White, Garrett T. Wood (Chester), Robert Wilson, Wm. B. Craft, John Doty, privates.

At the close of the Mexican war, Capt. Cummins was mustered out. At the breaking out of the Rebellion, in 1861, he was residing at Muscatine, Iowa. Fort Sumter surrendered April 14th. The proclamation for 75,000 men was dated the 15th. Capt. Cummins raised a company the 16th, rode thirty miles that night, and at three o'clock on the morning of the 17th tendered its services to the Governor of the State. A comparison of dates since shows that it was the first company (without any nucleus) that was raised west of the Alleghanies. Mr. Cummins became captain of the company, and it was ranked Co. A of the First Iowa. His command served in the Missouri campaign under Gen. Lyon. He was transferred to the Sixth Iowa, and promoted lieutenant-colonel. At the expiration of the term of service he was mustered out, came back to Orange County, and assisted in raising the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, of which he became lieutenant-colonel. July 2, 1863, Col. Ellis was killed at Gettysburg, and Lieut.-Col. Cummins was promoted colonel, his rank dating from that day. He was wounded at Gettysburg, but was with his command at the battle of the Wilderness, where he was totally disabled, May 6, 1864. He was discharged from the officers' hospital at Annapolis, Sept. 20, 1864.

Alexander Wilkin, who raised Co. K of the Tenth United States Infantry for the Mexican war, was also settled in Iowa, and in the war of the Rebellion became colonel of the Second Iowa. He was killed in Georgia.

REGULAR ARMY.

A. J. Moore, the present supervisor, enlisted, Nov. 1, 1858, in the Second United States Dragoons, and served five years, being discharged Nov. 1, 1863. He was wounded in several engagements, and once taken prisoner. June 24, 1867, he again enlisted in the Third Cavalry, and served another term of five years, receiving his discharge June 24, 1872.

WAR OF 1861-65.

This struggle called out many volunteers from this town, as well as from the other towns of the county. It may be that the history of the war of 1861-65 must wait for a future chronicler to write its story in the steady, passionless prose of a Macaulay; but it is not too soon to say that in future years men will scan muster rolls and explore old archives to read the names of the heroes of 1861-65. As eagerly as the men of to-day strive to rescue from oblivion the name of every Revolutionary soldier, so will the men of another century study the rolls of the great civil war to learn the names of those who participated in the conflict. The humblest resident of Goshen who obeyed the summons to arms and died in the service is worthy to be remembered with the heroes of other days, and to have a monument erected to his memory.

OFFICIAL ACTION, 1861-65.—At a special town-meeting held Aug. 20, 1864, resolutions were passed authorizing the raising of $50,000 for the purpose of paying bounties to volunteers under the call of the President for 500,000 men. The town officers were instructed to issue bonds for the purpose of raising the said sum, and a committee was appointed, viz.: J. E. Vail, Thomas Edsall, and George W. Green, who should have the management and disposal of the bonds.

At another town-meeting, held Feb. 5, 1865, the sum of $30,000 was voted for the purpose of paying bounties to volunteers under the then recent call.

Ellis A. Post, John D. Bradner, and David Redfield were appointed a committee to fix and regulate the amount of bounty to be paid, and were vested with exclusive and ample authority to manage the whole matter according to their judgment and discretion.

By a report of the supervisor, Mr. John C. Wallace, made at the close of the war to the bureau of military statistics, it appears that the number of men furnished by the town of Goshen was as follows:

Volunteers at the outbreak of the war.....	30
Under the calls of July and August, 1862.....	113
Under the call of March 14, 1864.....	117
" " July 18, 1864.....	54
" " December, 1864.....	24
Total.....	338

This was eight in excess of the quotas required. The town paid as follows:

For bounties	$40,350.00
Recruiting fees, hand-money, and other expenses	2,546.00
For support of soldiers' families	4,000.00
Interest on bonds issued	111.12
Miscellaneous	7,000.00
Total	$54,007.12

In its final settlement the town was allowed:

For an excess of 70 years, or 26 $\frac{1}{3}$ men	\$15,800
" 3 two-years' men	1,200
" 13 three-years' men	11,400
" 1 " "	500
" 1 " "	550
" 1 drew his own	600
Total paid town by quartermaster-general	$30,050

The following list has been prepared from the printed muster-in rolls of the State, and from the files of the Goshen newspapers, and has been revised by several citizens acquainted with the men who went.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

ALEXANDER WRIGHT.

His father, Robert Wright, born in Ireland, came to America about the close of the Revolutionary war, with his father, and settled in Pennsylvania, where, soon after, the father died. Robert returned to his native country, where, in 1793, he married a lady of wealth, and in 1795 returned to this country, and settled at Newburgh, N. Y. Here he resided for several years, and then purchased a farm of 125 acres in the town of Newburgh, upon which he resided until his death, which occurred in 1835, at the age of sixty-six years. His wife survived him, and died in 1851.

Robert Wright and wife were attendants and supporters of the Associate Reformed Church, and contributors to all worthy and local objects.

Their eldest son, William, born in 1797, was a successful business man of Newburgh, and died in 1865, aged sixty-eight years; Jane resides in Newburgh; Margaret became the wife of Robert W. Boyd, and resided at Hamptonburgh, where both died; John was a leather manufacturer in Sullivan Co., N. Y.; Francis and Robert (deceased) resided on the home farm; James removed to Indiana, where he successfully carried on business for many years, and died at Cairo; Alexander, subject of this sketch, and Susan reside at Newburgh.

Alexander Wright was born June 6, 1813, and during his boyhood obtained a practical business education at the common school and in the private school of the well-known scholar and teacher, James R. Wilson, of Coldenham, Orange Co., N. Y. At the age of eighteen he became a clerk in the general store of Judge Robert Denniston, at Salisbury Mills, in the town of Blooming-Grove, where he remained for three years. Here he earned a reputation for integrity, and upon the recommendation of Judge Denniston he obtained a situation as clerk in the Highland Bank, at Newburgh, upon its organization in 1834, where he remained until 1839, when he went to Middletown, and organized the Middletown Bank, now the National Bank of Middletown, of which he was chosen cashier, and filled the position until 1844.

In 1846 he organized the Chester Bank at Chester, and officiated as cashier until 1850, and in 1851 he organized the Goshen Bank, now Goshen National Bank, of which he was elected president, with William L. Beakes as cashier, and continued his connection with this bank until 1857, when he disposed of his interest in bank stock and retired from the more active duties of life.

During his residence in Middletown he was one of the prime movers in founding the Wallkill Academy of that place, got up the subscription for the erection of the brick building, now standing, and collected and disbursed the money.

Upon taking up his residence in Goshen, Mr. Wright was chosen one of the board of trustees of the Farmers' Hall Academy, and officially and otherwise labored earnestly for the continuation of that institution of learning, that its benefits might accrue to the rising generation of Goshen and Orange County. He has ever been a promoter of church interests, and all objects tending to the prosperity of the place where he has resided, and the general good of society.

During his active business life Mr. Wright was known as a discreet and successful financier, and his business ability was commensurate with the most progressive demands of the times.

He married, Jan. 10, 1844, Mary, daughter of Henry S. and Laura (Genung) Beakes, and granddaughter of Stacey Beakes, one of the early merchants of Middletown, N. Y. Her only brother was William L. Beakes, and her sisters, Jane, wife of the late Dr. Winfield, and Cynthia, wife of the late Charles C. McQuoid, a lawyer, all of Middletown. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Wright are Mary; Robert, died, at the age of nine years, in 1856; Frank Alexander, and Janie Laura.

ADAM H. SINSABAUGH.

In 1730 four families,—Sinsabaugh, Millsbaugh, Bookstaver, and Youngblood,—on account of religious persecution in their native country, left Germany and settled in the town of Montgomery, Orange Co., N. Y. Their first winter was spent in a dug-out, or temporary place to live. In the following spring they built a log church, and there continued worship for many years. These families purchased 1000 acres of land in the town, and part of the same property is in possession of their descendants at the present time.

The names of the heads of these families are found at Albany, where they were naturalized and swore allegiance to George III., in 1735. Of the first-named family, Jacob was great-grandfather of our subject. Frederick, son of Jacob, was born in the town of Montgomery, and reared the following children, who were married and reared families, settling in the vicinity of their birthplace, viz.: Adam, Mary, Elizabeth, Betsy, Henry, Frederick, Mrs. DeHart, and Abram. Of these children, Henry, born in 1758, married Margaret, daughter of John A. Brown, of Easton, Pa., who was the youngest in a family of fourteen children. She died in 1842, aged seventy-four.

Henry Sinsabaugh spent his life as a merchant at Nazareth, Pa., and as a farmer in Sullivan County, and in the town of Montgomery, Orange Co., where he died in 1826. He was a volunteer soldier in the war of the Revolution, and was at the battle of Fort Montgomery. His son David was a soldier in the war of 1812. His children are Susan, wife of Philip Gross; Catharine, wife of Daniel Plumley, of Montgomery; David, and Adam H.

Adam H. Sinsabaugh was born in the town of Montgomery, May 11, 1802. His minority was mostly spent at home, where he received only limited opportunities for any education from books. He married, Dec. 23, 1824, Jemima, daughter of Isaac Crissey, of Montgomery, who was born Oct. 22, 1799, and died Feb. 19, 1832, leaving one daughter, Elizabeth, who became the wife of William Sinsabaugh, of Iowa. His second wife was Jane Sinsabaugh, who was born Nov. 1, 1809, and died Sept. 22, 1844. The children born of this union were Kate, wife of Goldsmith Gregory, of Iowa; William; and James B., who served four years in the United States navy during the late civil war; subsequently enlisted in Hancock's veteran corps, and was stationed at Indianapolis, where he was accidentally drowned in the White River.

His third marriage, in 1845, was to Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Scofield, of Goshen, who was born Aug. 26, 1820, and died Jan. 11, 1861, and who bore him two sons,—George (deceased) and Henry, of Goshen.

Mr. Sinsabaugh married, Oct. 1, 1861, Maria Jane, daughter of Elting and Catharine (DuBois) France, of Ulster Co., N. Y., who was born Aug. 3, 1833. Their children are Nellie J. and Cora DuBois. Catharine DuBois was a daughter of Henry, and granddaughter of Methusalem DuBois, who was a lineal descendant of Louis DuBois, the progenitor of the DuBois family in Esopus, who was born in the province of Artois, France, Oct. 27, 1626, married Catharine Blanshan, daughter of a burgher of the city of Mannheim, Germany, and in 1660, with his wife and two sons, Abraham and Isaac, settled in Hurley, Ulster Co., and was the first Protestant of the name in this country. He was the first elder of the French Reformed Church, established at New Paltz in 1683. Elting France's mother was only daughter of Peter Elting, of New Paltz.

After his first marriage Mr. Sinsabaugh settled in the town of Crawford, Orange Co., where, in 1833, he first came to notice in politics as constable of that town. In 1834 he served as constable and collector, and was continued in those offices by re-election, without opposition, until 1840. In June, 1840, he was appointed census-taker of one-half of Orange County by Anthony J. Bleecker, marshal of the southern district of New York, and in the fall of the same year he was appointed under-sheriff of the county, removed to Goshen, and served in that capacity for three years. In 1843 he was elected sheriff of Orange County, and discharged the duties of the office creditably for one term.

Mr. Sinsabaugh headed the first temperance movements in Orange County, and became permanently identified with various organizations in town, county, and State, where his influence for the good of the cause was often acknowledged, and he was honored with the vice-presidency of the New York State Temperance Society under its president, Gen. Joseph S. Smith, of Kingston, N. Y., who was one of its founders in 1865.

Mr. Sinsabaugh was formerly identified with the Democratic party, but was always opposed to the extension of slavery. In 1848 he joined the "Barn-Burner" party, and in 1856 became a Republican. He was appointed deputy provost-marshal, and held that position through the entire late civil war. He has been a member and trustee of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen for thirty years, and has officiated as elder nearly the whole time of his residence here. He is also a life-member, and has been first vice-president of the Orange County Bible Society. Mr. Sinsabaugh is widely known throughout Orange County, and by all esteemed for his correct habits, his high moral influence, and for his integrity in all the relations of life.

HENRY MERRIAM.

His father, Thomas, son of Thomas Merriam, was born at Meriden, Conn., about the year 1765, where he spent his minority.

He married Hannah, eldest daughter of Noah Guernsey, of Litchfield, Conn., and for some time afterwards was a merchant at that place. Subsequently he removed to Schaghticoke, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., and resumed his business as a merchant. Closing this business, he purchased a farm in Saratoga County, which he carried on for ten years, and removed to the town of Harpersfield, Delaware Co., where he again engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1815. His wife was subsequently married to a Mr. Disbro, and removed with a part of the family to Cicero, Onondaga Co., N. Y., where she lived to the advanced age of ninety years. Both Thomas Merriam and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, and esteemed members of society. Their children were Philomelia (wife of Bartholomew Andrews, of Cicero); Allen was a farmer, and died at Geneva, Wis., leaving a large property there; Harvey was a farmer, and died at Cicero; Samuel resides at New Haven, where he has been a successful merchant for many years; Henry, subject of this sketch; Noah was a farmer, and died at Cicero; Mary (wife of Henry Jones, of Monroe, Orange Co.); and Clara (unmarried) resides at Syracuse, N. Y.

Henry Merriam was born in Schaghticoke, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., Dec. 1, 1802. At the age of thirteen, upon the death of his father, he went to Litchfield, and for six years resided with his grandfather Guernsey. During his boyhood he received a practical business education, and learned those inestimable lessons, economy and self-reliance. In 1822, Mr. Merriam left Litchfield, and started out in life for himself. For some three years he was engaged in the sale of Yankee notions, with his headquarters at Elizabethtown, N. J. In this he was successful, and in 1825 settled at Goshen, N. Y., and, in partnership with the late John J. Smith (Merriam & Smith), established himself in the manufacture of tinware. This firm was for many years located in business on the opposite side of the street, near the Orange Hotel, in Goshen, but on the completion of the Erie Railway, in 1841, they built a store near the Goshen Bank, at a place which has become the centre of business since that road was finished. For fifteen years they carried on the tin and hardware business, and for most of the time had upwards of a dozen peddlers on the road selling their manufactured tin goods and notions.

In 1849 the firm opened a general hardware house, and continued a successful and large business until 1869, when Mr. Merriam retired from the active duties of life. During nearly half a century Mr. Merriam was in trade in Goshen, and for many years after his first establishment here his was the only stove-store between Newton, N. J., and Kingston, N. Y., consequently his trade reached to all parts of Orange County, and into adjoining counties.

While his active business life was successful, he has never for any time forgotten the full duty of a citizen, and has been a liberal contributor to all worthy local objects, and a promoter of the best interests of society in morality and religion. For some twenty years he was identified with the educational interests of Goshen as one of the board of trustees of the Farmers' Hall Academy, and since the organization of the Goshen Bank in 1851 he has been one of its directors.

Mr. Merriam was formerly a Whig, and became a Republican upon the organization of that party. He has never been solicitous of official position, and never held office, except to serve as supervisor of Goshen for one term.

His wife is Anna Eliza, daughter of Isaac and Abigail (Tusten) Reeve, of Goshen, whom he married Jan. 1, 1833. She was born May 3, 1810, and with her husband have been for many years members of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen. Her grandfather, Col. Benjamin Tusten, was in the American army during the Revolutionary war, and was killed at the battle of Minisink, in 1779. Their children are Helen; Henry G. (a graduate of Brown University) and his brother, Charles E., are the firm of Merriam Brothers, hardware merchants, at Waverly, N. Y.; Frank A. is the successor of his father in the business at Goshen; Alexander R. Merriam was graduated at Yale College in 1872, at Andover Theological Seminary in 1877, and is the settled pastor of the Payson Congregational Church, at East Hampton, Mass.; and Alma E.

JOHN J. SMITH.

His grandfather, Job Smith, was born Sept. 26, 1745, and died Aug. 6, 1776. He was a soldier in the patriot army, was captured by the British, and confined in the old Sugar-House Prison in New York, from which he was released by the influence of friends, only to return home and die of disease contracted during his imprisonment. His wife was Sarah Ogden, born March 29, 1752, and died May 11, 1827, and who bore him three children, viz.: Mary Mitchell; Sarah, who became the wife of Elias Darby; and John Job, father of our subject.

John Job Smith was born at Elizabethtown, N. J., Oct. 27, 1772, and married, Jan. 22, 1797, Phebe, daughter of John Jewell, who was born July 11, 1774, and died Nov. 23, 1835. He carried on blacksmithing at Elizabethtown, and had connected with his business a "hay-scales," not the neat platforms upon which the farmers of 1881 leisurely drive on, but a huge frame-work, from the top of which hung a big steelyard, from which depended four chains with rings at the ends to slip over the hubs of the wheels, and thus lift the wagon bodily from the ground. He died July 9, 1814.

Their children were Job, born Aug. 20, 1798, died Jan. 10, 1800; John Jewell, subject of this sketch; and Ogden Smith, born Aug. 27, 1803, resided at Elizabeth, and died Feb. 8, 1851.

John Jewell Smith was born at Elizabeth, N. J., Aug. 19, 1800. He only received a common-school education, but early in life learned that industry and economy are the foundation of business success. He served an apprenticeship in Elizabeth at the tinner's trade with Gould Phinney, and for three years after reaching his majority worked at his trade as a journeyman.

In 1824 he settled in Goshen, N. Y., and set up business for himself, his first place of business being a part of the building now comprising the Orange Hotel. Here he remained only about a year, and having formed a copartnership with Henry Merriam, the firm of Merriam & Smith started the manufacture of tinware on the opposite side of the street from his first place of business in Goshen. They continued their business there until the completion of the Erie Railway, adding to it the sale of stoves and peddlers' supplies, and had for many years some fifteen men on the road selling their manufactured wares and notions. Theirs was the first stove-store established between Newton, N. J., and Kingston, N. Y., and for several years the only one, hence this firm controlled largely the sale of tinware and stoves in a large section of country.

In 1841 they built a store near the Goshen Bank,

John J. Smith

CHARLES W. REEVS.

His paternal ancestor first settled on Long Island, from whence Joshua Reeves, grandfather of our subject, removed and became the progenitor of the family in Orange County.

Charles W. was one in a family of eleven children of Howell Reeves (who subsequently removed to the town of Minisink), and was born in the town of Chester, Orange Co., N. Y., Sept. 1, 1805. His early life was spent on the farm at home. In 1825 he established himself in mercantile business at Westtown, in the town of Minisink, where he continued a successful trade until 1842, when, upon the opening of the Erie Railway, he removed to Goshen, where he was enabled to enlarge his business.

By his removal he drew with him almost the entire trade of Minisink. Here he engaged in a general mercantile trade and freighting business, which reached for thirty to forty miles around, Goshen being the nearest supply point to New York for the shipment of produce. Until nearly the time of his death, which occurred Sept. 2, 1865, he ranked among the most substantial and enterprising business men of Goshen, a man of integrity, whose plighted word never failed. He was a director in both the Goshen and Orange County Banks for many years.

Mr. Reeves was a man of independent thought and action, possessed a naturally inquiring mind, and always attempted to complete whatever he undertook when he had once conceived in his mind the object worthy of his support. Although somewhat skeptical and in doubt of the truth of Christianity in early manhood, his convictions finally became firm in support of it, and ever afterwards he was one of the most devoted supporters of the Christian religion. He became one of the founders of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Goshen in 1847, and from that time until his decease he was an earnest, Christian member, superintendent of the Sunday-school, and a liberal supporter of that church. He had an active mind, stored with knowledge acquired by extensive reading. His manners were affable, unobtrusive, gentle, and forbearing, and his heart was full of benevolence, kindness, and charity. The most humble felt at ease in his presence and were always assured of his sympathy. Formerly a Whig, he became a member of the Republican party upon its organization, and by his means and influence sustained the Union cause during the late civil war.

In 1825 he married Azubah, daughter of Squire Lee, of Goshen. Of this union were born seven children, three of whom died in childhood. The remaining four now living are Louisa, wife of J. Seeley Hetzel; Floyd H., married, Feb. 18, 1863, Christine, daughter of John and Hannah (De Kay) Cowdrey, by whom he has two surviving children, Hattie and Clara, and is the successor of his father in business at Goshen; Coe L., enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers in 1862, and was one of the few who remained of the original number when they were mustered out in July, 1865; and Ella, wife of Dr. J. B. Arnold, of Nebraska. The mother of these children died January, 1853, aged forty-three years. For his second wife Mr. Reeves married, in 1858, Mrs. Catharine J. Millsbaugh, of Warwick, by whom he had one daughter, Fannie.

WILLIAM KNAPP.

His great-grandfather, William Knapp, was the progenitor of the family in Orange County, settling here from Horseneck, Conn., when the Indians still claimed a right to their hunting-grounds, and the wolf and bear were frequent visitors to the cabins of the settlers. His land was a part of the Van Horn tract, and contained two hundred and ten acres, most of which remains in the possession of the family in 1881, and a part of which, one hundred and fifteen acres, is the property of the subject of this sketch.

Upon this wilderness tract of land William Knapp, Sr., resided the remainder of his life, and was among the first in the town of Goshen in the early establishment of the many interests that are enjoyed and carried on by the present generation. His wife was of Irish birth, and bore him the following children: James, Samuel, and William, the first two of whom took part in the struggle of the colonies for independence, and were killed at the battle of Minisink in 1779.

James, grandfather of William Knapp, our subject, was born in 1735, and being the eldest succeeded to the homestead, the other sons receiving other real estate which their father possessed.

James married Esther Drake, born in 1741, who died at the age of ninety years. Their children were John, Daniel, Nathaniel, James, Stephen, Polly (wife of Stephen Crane), and Sally (wife of William Lucas). Several of these children took possession of the soldiers' right of land, and settled in Cortland County, N. Y. Only John remained, and succeeded to the homestead property.

He was born Aug. 24, 1765, and died Aug. 1, 1854. His first wife, Elizabeth, daughter of James Sawyer, bore him one child, Betsey, who became the wife of Stephen Valentine.

His second wife, Eunice, daughter of Jonathan Smith, of Goshen, born Oct. 6, 1775, died May 2, 1853, and bore him the following children: Abigail, born in 1795, wife of Daniel Wood, resides near Rochester, N. Y.; Polly, born in 1797, and Fanny, next older, each died at the age of sixteen; John, born Sept. 1, 1801, died March, 1860; Gabriel, born in 1804, died in 1867; Dolly, is the wife of Calvin B. Gale, of Goshen; William, subject of this sketch, born April 13, 1812; Thomas, born July 17, 1813, resides in Schuyler County, N. Y.; Fanny Maria, is the wife of N. C. Coleman, of Goshen; and Virgil, the youngest, owns and resides upon a part of the homestead.

William Knapp, son of John, has resided on the homestead farm of four generations during his life. Like his forefathers, he has never sought public place or the emoluments of office, but has industriously followed agricultural pursuits, and been known as a man of correct habits, sterling integrity in all the relations of life, and a promoter of all worthy local objects.

He married, in November, 1857, Hannah Maria, daughter of Robert Rutan, Esq., of Vernon township, Sussex Co., N. J., and who was for many years a justice of the peace in Passaic County, N. J. She was born February, 1827. Their children are Isaac Thomas, Adelia R., William, and John.

Oliver B Tuthill

OLIVER B. TUTHILL (Nathaniel,⁶ Nathaniel,⁵ Freegift,⁴ John,³ John,² Henry¹), of Goshen, N. Y., is seventh in descent from Henry Tuthill, born in England, July 16, 1635, married Deliverance King, and settled at New Haven, Conn., in 1638, and afterwards, in 1640, at Southhold, L. I., where he reared a family, and where he died Oct. 12, 1717.

Freegift, above mentioned, was great-grandfather of our subject, born Aug. 8, 1698, at Southhold, L. I., where he learned the tailor's trade. For a time after his marriage to Abigail Goldsmith he resided at Brookhaven, L. I., but in 1730 purchased a wilderness tract of some four hundred acres of land in the town of Goshen, upon which he settled, and where afterwards he built a stone house. He died in June, 1727, leaving four children, viz.: Abigail, Nathaniel, Joshua, and Freegift, Jr. The three sons were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, and the latter died in the service.

Nathaniel, eldest son, born at Brookhaven, L. I., Jan. 17, 1730, was at Fort Montgomery when taken by the British, but escaped. He married Margaret, daughter of John Herod, of Long Island, and resided on a part of the homestead in Goshen during his life, where he erected a stone house, now standing, and in which his grandson, subject of this sketch, has resided most of his life. His wife was born Aug. 3, 1739, and bore him the following children, viz.: Benjamin, Mary (wife of Daniel Bailey), and Nathaniel. He died Sept. 16, 1803.

Nathaniel Tuthill, born on the homestead Feb. 2, 1768, married, Feb. 27, 1792, Martha, daughter of Joseph Wickham, of Hashamomock, L. I. She was born in 1768, and died in 1808, leaving children as follows: Joseph W., was engaged in Greenwood furnace making cannon balls during the war of 1812, and afterwards spent most of his life as a farmer; John H., was in the war of 1812, and was a farmer; Hector C., was a large farmer in Sempronius, N. Y., where he settled in 1827, and was a member of the State Legislature from that place in 1848 and in 1849; Daniel H., was graduated at Union College, read law, practiced his profession in Warwick, Orange Co., and for some time prior to his death was the law partner of Henry G. Wisner, at Goshen, and was also surrogate of Orange County, 1827-31, appointed by Governor Throop; Nathaniel, Jr.; and Oliver Bailey.

For his second wife Nathaniel Tuthill married Mary Bodle, of Wallkill, who bore him one son, William B. Tuthill, who resides upon a part of the old homestead. All of the children of the first family are deceased in 1881, except Oliver B., subject of this notice, who was born on the homestead Aug. 27, 1805. He resided with his brother, Hector C., from the age of fourteen to twenty, and then purchased one hundred and twenty-seven acres of the homestead farm, where he resided and carried on agricultural pursuits until 1873, when he settled in the village of Goshen. Upon the erection of the town of Hamptonburgh a part of his farm, including the buildings, fell inside the line of the new town. While a resident of Hamptonburgh he filled the various offices of school inspector, assessor, and justice of the peace. In 1845 he built a house on another part of his farm in the town of Goshen, where he resided until his removal to Goshen. He united with the Presbyterian Church at Goshen in 1842, although a Methodist in belief, and in 1847 he was one of the founders and a liberal contributor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Goshen, and since that time has been officially connected with it and influential in its councils. Mr. Tuthill is plain, unostentatious, frank, and honest, and he has ever been esteemed for his integrity in all his business relations.

Mr. Tuthill was among the foremost in the temperance movement in Orange County in 1850, and liberally gave his time and means in support of that cause, and with Charles W. Reeves and others did much to lessen the sale and effects of intoxicating liquors. He became a member of a temperance organization in the county, which was advised by the Orange County Medical Society in 1828, and has been a supporter of its principles since.

In the fall of 1852 his name was placed in nomination for member of Assembly in the First District of Orange County by the friends of the temperance cause, and a respectful vote polled for his return, one town, Blooming-Grove, giving a majority for him.

He married Elmira, daughter of George Thompson, of Blooming-Grove, June 30, 1830, by whom he had four children, viz.: Ezra Fisk, George N., Martha Elizabeth, and Oliver. His wife, born May 20, 1805, died in May, 1869.

For his second wife he married Mrs. Melinda, widow of the late John Burr, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who by her first marriage had one daughter, Caroline Stacey, who became the wife of Charles Winson, both of whom are deceased, leaving an only daughter, Carrie Grace.

De Witt C. Durland.

The progenitor of the Durland family in Orange County was Charles Durland, who came from Long Island in 1756, and was engaged on the frontier in the French-and-Indian war. After the close of the war he married Jane Swartwout and settled on a tract of land adjoining the village of Chester, Orange Co., upon which, in 1783, he built a house, which is standing in 1881, and has been occupied as the Durland homestead until the present time. He was exempted from service in the struggle of the colonies for independence, and died about 1800, aged sixty-seven. His children were Mary, Garret, Joseph, John, Charles, Elizabeth, Rosanna, and Samuel, all of whom were married and reared families in Orange County.

Joseph, son of Charles, and grandfather of De Witt C. Durland, born March 31, 1762, was a scout during the close of the Revolutionary war, married Martha Board, of Ringwood, N. J., who bore him children,—Charles; Elizabeth, wife of Jonas King; and James and John, who were both drowned while young in a pond near the homestead.

By a second wife, Sally, daughter of Samuel Satterly, he had children,—Martha, widow of John M. Bull, of Blooming-Grove; Jonas; Samuel; Kezia, died young; Susan, wife of George Mapes, of Goshen; James; Thomas; and Seeley.

Joseph Durland inherited a part of the homestead at Chester, upon which he resided during his life. He was known as a man of strong force of character and a supporter of all worthy local objects. He assisted in building the first Presbyterian church edifice at that place, of which church his wife was a member. His second wife died May, 1838, aged sixty years. He died Aug. 28, 1828. His children who survive him are Martha, Thomas, and James, who reside upon the homestead.

Jonas, son of Joseph Durland, born on the homestead in February, 1803, married Abigail Little, who was born in 1805 and died in October, 1876. He died in 1865. Their children are Martha, wife of Edward A. Millsbaugh, a farmer in Goshen; Orpha J., wife of C. B. Wood, a farmer of Chester; Cornelia, died at the age of twenty-one; Oscar, a farmer in Chester;

James Seeley, died at the age of nineteen; Nelson, died in 1871, aged thirty-eight, leaving a widow and three children; De Witt C.; Sarah, deceased, was the wife of John C. Walling, of Goshen; Louisa, died at the age of ten years.

After his marriage Jonas Durland settled on a farm in Minisink, where he remained until 1830, when he purchased one hundred and ninety acres of land in the town of Goshen, where the subject of this sketch now resides. He built the present residence on the place in 1847, and made this his home until his death. He was a thorough-going and well-to-do farmer, and upright in all his dealings with his fellow-men. Both himself and wife were members of the First Presbyterian Church of Florida.

De Witt C., son of Jonas Durland, was born May 1, 1835, and married, Dec. 30 1858, Marietta, daughter of George S. Conkling and Mary Seeley, of Chester, who died Dec. 9, 1872, aged thirty-five years, leaving four children,—J. Howard, Murray, Bradford C., and Clara M.

His present wife, whom he married June 10, 1875, is Theresa, eldest in a family of three sons and five daughters of Samuel McCain and Anna Ward, of Hoboken, N. J., and granddaughter of William McCain, who resided at Amity, Orange Co., and whose ancestors were among the early settlers of Warwick. William McCain's wife was Sarah Jennings.

By his second marriage Mr. Durland has one child, Ella McCain Durland. He succeeded to the homestead farm in Goshen, partly by purchase and partly by inheritance, upon the death of his father, to which he has added one hundred and six acres, having sold a part of the original purchase in small parcels to men engaged in onion-raising, the first sold in the town of Goshen for that purpose.

Mr. Durland has erected commodious barns on his premises, and all the appointments about his place show the handiwork of a thrifty and enterprising farmer. He was one of the original stockholders in the Goshen and Pine Island Railroad, and is a trustee of the Presbyterian Church at Florida.

Alfred Wells

now occupied by Merriam & Corwin, where they continued their business until 1849, when they opened a general hardware house, and did a large mercantile business until the retirement of both members of the firm from the active duties of life in 1869.

Mr. Smith's career, both in business and private life, was one of distinguished integrity and above reproach. He was of a retiring disposition, unostentatious in his ways, and always sought the happiness of others, while he enjoyed the common benefits of life accruing to himself. He was never solicitous of any official position, and preferred the quiet routine of a business life to the bickerings of political strife or the emoluments of office.

Mr. Smith was the senior warden of St. James' Church at Goshen, and filled that position and the office of vestryman for many years. Born with the beginning of the century, he attained the ripe age of eighty years, his death occurring June 4, 1880, and his long life was devoted to kindness to his fellow-men and devotion to his Maker. He left behind him the useful lesson of a good example.

His wife was Ellen, daughter of Moses and Eleanor (Holly) Sawyer, and granddaughter of James and Elizabeth (Bradner) Sawyer, of Goshen, born Feb. 23, 1817, whom he married Dec. 5, 1838. She died March 23, 1864, leaving three children, viz.: Mary Ellen, born Sept. 20, 1839, died Nov. 1, 1858; Julia, born Sept. 11, 1843, became the wife of William D. Van Vliet, a merchant at Goshen, and died July 28, 1880, leaving two children,—John Jewell and Julia Marion; and John Ogden Smith, for several years a clerk in his father's store, and for the past few years a clerk in the Goshen National Bank.

ALFRED WELLS.

For about one hundred and fifty years the Wells family has been identified with the history of Goshen, Orange Co., N. Y., and the homestead upon which John Wells settled in Goshen about 1735, then a wilderness tract of land, containing 240 acres, has been successively owned by the members of four generations, and upon it the subject of this sketch has spent his life.

The progenitor of the Wells family from which Alfred Wells is descended, was Hon. William Wells, who was born at or near Norwich, Norfolk-shire, England, in 1608, and emigrated to America about the year 1635. He was stated to have been a passenger on the ship "Free-Love," of London, Robert Dennis master, June 10, 1635, and was twenty-seven years of age at that time. He was an educated lawyer in England, and high sheriff of New Yorkshire, on Long Island.

His son, Justice Joshua Wells, was born at Southold, L. I., in 1664, and died there in 1744. John, son of Justice Joshua, born at the same place, Jan. 31, 1689, also died there. John, son of John, born at the same place about 1715, died in Orange County, July 4, 1776, is supposed to be the first settler of the family in Goshen, and the one mentioned at the beginning of this sketch. His son Joshua, born at Goshen in 1744, succeeded to the homestead, upon which he resided during his life, and died in 1819. He was a soldier in the colonial army during the Revolutionary war.

His wife, Rhoda Booth, was a granddaughter of William Bull and Sarah Wells, who bore him the following children: Mary (wife of George Phillips), John, George, Joshua, Jr., Christina (wife of John Decker), Dolly (wife of Edward Ely), Sarah (wife of James Tuthill). He was one of the early members of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen.

Of these children, Joshua Wells, Jr., was father of our subject, and was born on the homestead, Sept. 6, 1779, and died there in 1867. He carried on the homestead farm during his active business life, was a man of good judgment, correct habits, and strong force of character. He sought to fulfill the full duties of the good citizen, and was known by his fellow-men as a man of sterling integrity, not solicitous of public place, frank and manly in his ways, and a Christian man.

His wife was Jemima, daughter of Jonathan Sayer, of the town of Goshen, born in 1779, and who died in 1811, leaving the following children: Adeline (wife of James C. Reeve), Alfred, Mary Jane (died unmarried), Jerome was a physician of Goshen, and died here, and Frances (wife of Adrian Holbert, of Goshen).

His second wife was Katy Ford, who bore him children, viz.: Julia (wife of John M. Ford) and Elizabeth (unmarried). His second wife died in October, 1834.

Alfred, son of Joshua Wells, Jr., was born on the homestead, Nov. 17, 1805. His early education was received in the common school, and at Farmers' Hall Academy at Goshen. For one term he was a teacher, but succeeded to the homestead property, upon which he has spent most of his business life. The present residence on the farm was built by his father during his lifetime, and during the last three years Mr. Wells has caused to be erected one of the finest and most substantial barns in Orange County. Mr. Wells succeeded to the old homestead by inheritance, to which he has made an addition of a small parcel of land, and is the possessor of other valuable property besides.

He is a man of determined effort, judicious in the management of his affairs, and, although far past the active duties of life, finds pleasure in the care and superintendence of the place of his birth, where he and his wife spent so many happy years together.

Mr. Wells always gave encouragement to all objects of a local nature tending in any way to the prosperity of the people and the development of interests in his own town, and although, like his forefathers, he never sought political place or its emoluments, he has always been a careful observer of the progress of the times, and interested in the establishment of law and order in the country.

He married in June, 1832, Lydia, daughter of John Nyce, of Wheat Plains, Pike Co., Pa., who was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen, a devoted wife and mother, and died October, 1871, aged sixty-two years.

Their children are Jerome, prepared for college, but died at Flushing, L. I., in October, 1855; James E., a farmer in the town of Goshen; John N., of San Francisco, Cal.; George W., was graduated at Princeton College in the class of '65, subsequently at the Bellevue Hospital, New York, and is connected with the medical department of the New York Mutual Insurance Company; Moses A., a soldier in the late civil war, is a dry-goods merchant in Chicago; Eugene F., a druggist at Waverly, N. Y.; Lewis A., died October, 1870; Charles S., a farmer in the town of Goshen; Mary F. (wife of Lewis E. Coleman, of Goshen); Catharine R. (wife of Samuel M. Slaughter, of Walkill); Charlotte (wife of Samuel W. Slaughter, of Waverly, N. Y.).

THOMAS THORNE.

His father, Richard Thorne, of Great Neck, Hempstead, L. I., was a wealthy and influential citizen. He served in the Revolutionary war in defense of the colonies, and was taken prisoner by the Hessians. His family consisted of eleven children, of whom the following, Phebe, Betsey, Richard, Henry, Latitia, Sarah, Daniel, William, Thomas, and John, reached manhood and womanhood, and all reared families except Phebe and Betsey.

Thomas Thorne, son of Richard, was prominently identified with the business interests of Goshen nearly his whole life. His frankness, sociability, genuine good sense, readiness to assist young men starting out in life, generosity in all matters of a local nature tending to the welfare of the community, and his fine business capacity have made him remembered in Goshen as a man the history of whose life was inseparably connected with many of the leading interests of Goshen for many years.

He was born at Hempstead, on Long Island, March 11, 1774, and at the age of sixteen came to Goshen to reside with his uncles Daniel and William, who then owned the place which afterwards became his homestead, consisting of about 100 acres, which was a part of the large tract of land formerly owned by Maj. Wood. He was a student at the Farmers' Hall Academy in Goshen when under the supervision of Noah Webster, the lexicographer, but in early manhood turned his attention to business pursuits. He purchased the farm of his uncles, which he carried on during the remainder of his life, and made it one of the most desirable locations, contiguous as it is to Goshen village, anywhere to be found in Orange County. On the opposite side of the road from his residence he built a tannery, where, although not a practical tanner himself, he successfully carried on business for many years. He dealt largely in cattle for market, supplying Goshen and the surrounding country almost wholly with beef, besides shipping to other markets. Mr. Thorne successfully undertook the improvement of the Rio Grande running through Goshen, by which nearly 1000 acres of boggy and marshy land adjoining the village, inundated for most part of the year, became tillable and rich, productive farming land.

Mr. Thorne was influential in local matters, was supervisor of Goshen in 1823, and he was one of the loan commissioners for Orange County when great responsibility and care in the management of the public funds were required. During his business career, in middle life, Mr. Thorne signed a sheriff's bond, by which he lost his entire property. Nothing daunted, and with a most remarkable recuperative energy and resolution, he began at the bottom of business, and soon regained a stronger financial position than he had before occupied, and, although late in life, he acquired a large competency.

Mr. Thorne was a promoter of secular interests and good society, and at the time of his decease, April 2, 1860, he was the senior warden of St. James' Church, Goshen, and had been for many years one of the living pillars of that body. His first wife, Mary Hetfield, died in 1825, leaving no children.

His second wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Col. Thomas Waters, who owned some 300 acres of land, a part of the Stewart estate, in Goshen, where he kept slaves to carry it on. He was with the Goshen volunteers, and had charge of the horses used to convey them from Goshen to the place where the battle of Minisink was fought, and after many of their riders had been slain in that memorable engagement, Mr. Waters, then a young lad of about sixteen years, safely returned with the horses to Goshen, and first reported the news of the terrible slaughter by Brant and his soldiers.

Col. Waters was sheriff of Orange County, and an influential citizen. His wife was Betsey Matthews, who owned a large estate at Washingtonville, known as the "Matthewsfield."

Elizabeth Waters was born Aug. 23, 1790, married to Mr. Thorne April 9, 1826, and died Nov. 6, 1865. Their children are John W., born Jan. 18, 1829; Mary Elizabeth, died Oct. 11, 1835, at the age of four years; and Sarah Thurman Thorne, born Jan. 16, 1831, resides on the homestead at Goshen, and is the wife of J. Francis Matthews, a manufacturer in Middletown for many years.

John C. Walling

His great-grandfather, John T. Walling, was born in Ireland, came to America while a young man, and settled in Vernon township, Sussex Co., N. J.

He is supposed to have been a man of considerable means, for he took up a large amount of land in that place; and although he died at middle age, he was the possessor of some three thousand acres of land, owning tracts about Hamburg, and nearly all the land from Tompkins Corners to Hamburg. He died on the Charles De Kay tract, which he owned, in Vernon.

His wife was a Miss Baird, who bore him three children.—Sarah (died at the age of six years), Francis, and Joseph.

Francis, grandfather of our subject, was born about 1786, and died in 1861. He learned the tanning and currier business of Maj. James Wheeler, of Warwick, during his minority; afterwards, with his brother Joseph, went to Cincinnati, where they were engaged in business for a time, and were very successful. Returning, he married Margaret Perry, who bore him the following children: Joseph, Catharine (wife of Nathan Campbell), Sally (wife of Robert T. Martin), Vincen P., Hester, John T., Hannah (wife of Frederick Gulick), Abiah F., Brice P., and William.

By his second wife, Mrs. Van Court, a sister of Governor John Wilcox, who owns Merrit's Island, he had children,—Julia, Harriet, Mary (wife of Alfred Carling), Almeda (wife of Chauncey Millsbaugh), and Henry C.

After returning from Cincinnati, Francis Walling engaged in the tanning and currying business at Amity, Orange Co., N. Y., and during the latter part of his life became a large farmer.

Although his father acquired considerable property, through complications in business matters little was received by his children, and consequently they started out in life with little pecuniary assistance.

Francis Walling was a thorough-going business man, belonged to the Old-Line Whig party, but was no seeker after political place. He furnished a substitute for the war of 1812, was patriotic, and a strong supporter of the government.

Of his children, Joseph, born at Amity, in 1809, is father of John C. Walling; in early life learned the trade of a tanner of his father, which he worked at for a short time after his marriage, at Hamburg, N. J. He then purchased a farm of ninety-two acres in Vernon township, Sussex Co., N. J., upon which he resided until 1852, when he purchased two hundred and sixteen acres of land in the town of Goschen, Orange Co., N. Y., upon which he has resided since.

His wife was Margaret, daughter of John Campbell and Hannah Tompkins, of Vernon, and granddaughter of William Campbell, of Monmouth County, N. J., who was of Scotch descent. She was born in 1810, and died in October, 1880, leaving an only child.

John C. Walling, subject of this sketch, who was born at Hamburg, N. J., April 10, 1830, remained at home, and removed with his father to Orange County, where he resides, having purchased one hundred acres of the property settled on by his father in 1852, to which he has added some forty-five acres more. He built his present brick residence in 1859, which, with his commodious barns and the well-ordered appointments of his farm, make his place one of the most desirable in the town of Goschen. Mr. Walling is one of the intelligent farmers and thorough-going business men of the county. The products of his dairy are marketed direct to New York in the form of milk and cream, although for a few years he was engaged in butter-making.

He married, Oct. 22, 1851, Sarah, daughter of William and Catherine (Lyons) Thompson, of Vernon township, N. J. She was born Nov. 10, 1829, and died in January, 1858, leaving the following children: George T. and Albert T.

His second wife was Sarah, daughter of Jonas and Abby Durland, of Goschen, whom he married Dec. 21, 1859, who was born April 6, 1837, and died March 28, 1866, leaving no children.

His present wife, whom he married Jan. 1, 1867, is Anna, daughter of Samuel T. and Phebe P. (Pearsall) Seaman, of Cornwall, N. Y., who was born April 22, 1837. The children born of this union are Joseph, Maggie C., Carrie T., and John.

Walter H. Sayer

Thomas, Joseph, and James Sayer, brothers, were natives of Wales, and emigrated to America. Thomas resided at Elizabethtown, N. J., as a deed, dated 1704, was given by Benjamin Parkhurst to him, conveying six acres of land there, which is now in the possession of the subject of this sketch.

Joseph, great-grandfather of Walter H. Sayer, was the first settler of the family in Orange County, and had children,—James, John, Daniel, and Jonathan. James, grandfather of Walter H. Sayer, was born in 1731, and died in 1821. He settled on four hundred acres of land in the southern part of the town of Goshen, on the main road leading from Chester to Florida, then a wilderness tract, upon which he resided the remainder of his life, and there died. He built the central part of the house now standing, and at his death the property was divided among his children. By his first wife (Mary Mapes) he had one daughter, Mary, who married Daniel Poppino. By his second wife, Mary Goldsmith, of Long Island, he had three children,—James, William, and Ruth, who became the wife of Egbert Jessup, of Goshen. James was never married, and died at the age of sixty. He was a captain in the war of 1812.

William, born Nov. 28, 1789, married, in 1811, Martha, daughter of Richard Jackson, of Goshen, who was born Nov. 12, 1789, and died in January, 1869. His children are Augusta L., Walter H., George M., Jane S., Mary G., Harriet T. (wife of John Jessup, a farmer), Sarah E. (wife of William L. Vail, a merchant of Warwick), Helen A. (widow of James S. Seely, of Warwick), and William H.

William Sayer resided on a part of the homestead—ninety acres—during his life, and carried on farming. He also was largely engaged as a dealer in cattle, which he marketed at Newburgh and New York. He was widely and favorably known in Orange County as a strictly honest man and a good citizen. He was an attendant of the Presbyterian Church at Florida, of which his wife was a devoted member, and a liberal supporter of all that makes up morality and order in society. He died suddenly, of sunstroke, in June, 1840.

Walter H. Sayer, born Sept. 15, 1814, is unmarried, has resided on the homestead during his life, is a plain, unassuming man, and seeks to fulfill the full duties of the good citizen.

John J. Heard

lowing children: William; Nathaniel; Phebe, wife of John Taylor, of Amboy; Sarah, wife of James Smith, of Woodbridge; and Mary, wife of Cyrenius Van Mater, of Middletown Point. Of these children, William was grandfather of our subject, and reared a family of five sons—John, James, Samuel, Capt. Phineas, William—and one daughter,—Delia,—and resided at Woodbridge. Capt. Phineas Heard commanded a company of light-horse cavalry in the Revolutionary war. Nathaniel, son of the emigrant John Heard, was a general in the Revolutionary war, and had two sons also in the war, viz.: Gen. John Heard and James.

Phineas Heard, fourth son of William, removed to Orange County, and owned some 200 acres of land in the town of Blooming-Grove, where he carried on farming, and where he died about 1812, leaving by his second marriage one child, John J. Heard, the subject of this sketch. By his first marriage he had several sons and daughters, of whom Charles was a large cattle-dealer, and well known in this and other States among stock-men. He was the keeper of the famous "Heard Cattle Stand," in the town of Hamptonburgh. His second wife was Hester, daughter of James Board, eldest of three brothers (others, David and Joseph), who came from England and settled in Ringwood, N. J., and whose wife was Ann Schuyler. His house was the welcome and hospitable stopping-place for officers and soldiers in the Continental army during the Revolutionary war.

After the death of her husband Mrs. Heard removed to Goshen, and took up her residence with Anthony Dobbin, who married her sister, Ann Board. The Board children were four sons and three daughters.

Mr. Dobbin's house was made in those days the popular stopping-place of the Governor of the State on occasions of a review of the State troops, and also of judges and other men of note. Mrs. Heard resided here until her death, on May 17, 1857, being ninety-two years of age. Her sister, Mrs. Dobbin, died March 4th the same year, aged ninety years.

Young Heard was five years old when his mother came to Goshen, having been born July 5, 1807, on the homestead in Blooming-Grove. During his boyhood he received a good education in the public schools of Goshen, but early decided to lead a business life. His uncle died, leaving no children, before John reached his majority, and thus he was looked upon by his aunt as the only male representative to take charge of the farm after the death of her husband. A portion of this farm is in the corporate limits of Goshen, and now forms a part of the village, upon which substantial residences have been built since its ownership by Mr. Heard. Mr. Heard has spent his entire life upon this farm since his first settlement there in 1812, the property coming to him from his aunt and mother. In 1877 he remodeled the old residence, adding a brick structure, and now has one of the most substantial and pleasant residences in Goshen.

Although his life has been spent as a farmer, he has been interested and taken an active part in most local worthy enterprises tending to the prosperity of Goshen and the welfare of its citizens. He was an influential member for many years of the Board of Trustees of the Presbyterian Church, until the building of the present church edifice, when he resigned, and has been a member of that church for thirty years. For several years he was a trustee of the Farmers' Hall Academy at Goshen, and he has always been a promoter of educational and religious interests in the community. For upwards of twenty years Mr. Heard has been one of the State Loan Commissioners for Orange County, and his judicious investment of funds has reflected much credit upon himself for his integrity and safe counsel in these business relations. In 1855 he was appointed by the court, with Hon. James G. Graham and Beverly Johnston, Esq., of Newburgh, as commissioners to assess the damages to land-owners by the laying out of the Short-Cut Railway in Orange County. Also, in 1869, with Hon. Homer A. Nelson, then Secretary of State, and Hon. Charles Wheaton, both of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., to assess like damages on the Port Jervis and Monticello Railroad. Also, in 1870-71, with Hon. S. W. Fullerton and David A. Scott, Esq., both of Newburgh, to assess like damages on the Poughkeepsie and Eastern Railroad in Dutchess County. Also, in 1869, with D. A. Scott, Esq., of Orange, and Hon. Saxton Smith, of Putnam County, to equalize the taxes of Dutchess County; and also, in 1869-70, he was appointed, with D. A. Scott, Esq., and others, to assess damages by laying out and other street matters in Newburgh. He was assistant United States revenue assessor, 1866-69, president of the Orange County Agricultural Society one term, and one of its managing members for many years; has been appointed by the court as commissioner and referee in every town in the county in highway matters; has acted as executor and administrator for several estates, and in all these places of trust and responsibility his integrity has remained unquestioned.

He married, Aug. 20, 1833, Mary, daughter of Isaac and Keturah (Reeve) Van Duzer, of Cornwall, sister of the late Isaac R. Van Duzer, a well-known and prominent attorney of Goshen. She was born Aug. 12, 1812.

Their children are Isaac, an ex-State senator of Minnesota, and prominent lawyer of St. Paul, in that State; Eliza A. F.; James B., a merchant of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Jennie, wife of N. K. Delevan, of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Emma; Julia W.; Catharine, wife of A. DuBois Staats, a lawyer of Goshen; and Fanny Benton Heard.

GARRET THEW.

The progenitor of the Thew family in Rockland County was of Welsh origin, was a sea-captain, and settled in New York. One of his descendants, Daniel Thew, was a lawyer, practicing his profession here in 1791. The grandfather of Garret Thew was John, who resided in Rockland County, and by his first marriage with Alche Cooper, who was born in 1720, had the following children: Gilbert, born in 1756; Garret, born in 1758; John, born in 1760, died in 1822; and Tunis, born in 1763. For his second wife he married a Miss Blauvelt, who bore him one son, James, who was the father of our subject.

James Thew married Sarah Snedeker, who bore him three sons, viz.: Garret; John, died in 1822, aged twenty-two; James, died before reaching his majority. She died in 1836. James Thew resided at Rockland Lake, in Rockland Co., N. Y., for a while after his marriage, but removed to Hohokus, N. J., where he carried on a card and cloth-dressing mill, and was a clothier. He died at the age of thirty-two, in 1804.

Garret, only surviving son of James and Sarah Thew, was born at Rockland Lake, Oct. 27, 1798. Upon the death of his father, when Garret was only six years old, the family was left almost to depend upon their own resources for existence. From eleven to fourteen years of age he worked on a farm. At the latter age he went to New York and apprenticed himself to learn the carpenter's trade. After completing this, he worked at the trade for eleven years as journeyman. In 1826 he married Abigail, daughter of John and Hannah (Gurnee) Thew, of Hamptonburgh, Orange Co. John Thew was son of John and Alche Thew, before spoken of in this sketch. After his marriage Mr. Thew settled on the old homestead of his father-in-law, in Hamptonburgh, where he resided for ten years. He then purchased a farm in Warwick, near Florida, of 170 acres, upon which he resided until 1849, when he purchased the Gen. Sawyer place in the town of Goshen, containing 220 acres.

By economy and judicious management he had accumulated sufficient means, so that he soon paid for this property, upon which he resided until 1866. His wife died in 1864, aged sixty-nine years and eleven months, leaving an only child, Elizabeth T., who became the wife of Dr. William P. Townsend, for many years a prominent physician in Goshen, and who died leaving five children, viz.: Garret Thew, Mattie Wilder, Alice, Charles Emerson, and Edith.

Upon retiring from the active duties of life, in 1866, Mr. Thew took up his residence with his daughter, Mrs. Townsend, in Goshen, where, in 1881, he resides, and retains in a remarkable degree the vigor of body and mind common to men much younger in years. He was a member of the Florida Presbyterian Church while a resident in Warwick, and has been a member of the Presbyterian Church in Goshen since his residence here, and for a part of the time he has acted as one of the trustees of the church. Mr. Thew was known as a representative agriculturist, a man of sound judgment, a judicious financier, and an honest man.

Both of his grandfathers were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, and he was in the service for a short time in the war of 1812.

WILLIAM B. TUTHILL.

William B. Tuthill is a half-brother of Oliver B. Tuthill, whose sketch gives an outline history of the ancestors of the Tuthill family, and will be found on another page of this work. For his second wife William B. Tuthill's father married Mary, eldest of twelve children of Judge William Bodle, of Hamptonburgh, Orange Co. Judge Bodle was in the battle of Fort Montgomery, was judge of the county, justice of the peace, first elder in the Presbyterian Church at Goshen, was a farmer by occupation, and died in Tompkins Co., N. Y., at the age of ninety-two. Mrs. Tuthill was born Aug. 6, 1771, was married March 24, 1810, and died May 12, 1861. He was born in February, 1768, and died March 28, 1846.

Wm B Tuthill

William B., son of Nathaniel and Mary Tuthill, was born on the homestead, April 21, 1811, married, Jan. 31, 1833, Mary, daughter of Abimael and Mary (Harlow) Young, of Blooming-Grove, who was born Sept. 9, 1810. Their children are as follows: Charles Bodle; William Young; Mary Vashti, died young; James; Sarah Frances, wife of Jewett M. Ashman, of Goshen; Nathaniel B. and Harvey Wickham, died young.

G. Thew

James W. Hoyt

The Hoyt family is mentioned among the first settlers of New England, and Simon Hoyt (Hoyte) is mentioned with other names in the earliest records in the settlement of Charlestown, Mass., in 1628, and is supposed to be the progenitor of the family in New England. Joseph, grandfather of James W. Hoyt, resided on Norodon Hill, near Stamford, Conn., where he reared two sons, Joseph and Hezekiah, and two daughters, Sarah and Hannah.

Hezekiah, son of Joseph, born on Norodon Hill, April 1, 1776, married Esther Sellick, of Stamford, Conn., who was born Nov. 19, 1780. He settled with his family in the town of Wallkill, Orange Co., about the year 1808, where he carried on farming until the death of his wife, Dec. 21, 1824, when he took up his residence with his daughter, Mrs. Miller, of Middletown, and there remained until his death, Feb. 17, 1835. He served in the war of 1812. His wife was a devoted woman to her family, and a member of the Congregational Church.

Their children were Isaac; Hezekiah; William; Caroline, wife of John Arnold, who died in Luzerne County, Pa.; Harriet, widow of the late Lyman B. Miller, of Middletown; Maria, wife of Edward Seward, of Arlington, N. J.; James W., subject of this sketch; Henry W., died in 1824; and Gilbert F., who died the same year.

James W. Hoyt was born April 5, 1816, and at the age of ten years became a clerk in the store of his brother William, at Bloomingburgh. In 1836 he started a store at Amity, Orange Co., with his brother Hezekiah, where he remained in business only two years, and was then in mercantile business with Albert Millspaugh for two years at Bloomingburgh, and sold out the business, unfortunately losing all in the sale.

He then settled in Burlingham, Sullivan Co., where his name first came before the public as constable and collector, which offices he filled for two years. For two years following he was a merchant at Middletown, and for one year thereafter took charge of a store for his brother Isaac, at Newport, on the Wallkill. He was proprietor of the Franklin House, at Middletown, in 1855, and in 1859 he purchased the Union House at that place, which he conducted until the close of the war. During the civil war he espoused the Union cause, and was zealous and liberal, more than commensurate with his means, in giving his time and money and making his house the welcome and free home of the needy soldier and the homeless patriot. His house was the headquarters for recruiting and filling the ranks with new men. Not only did he do this, but he gave two of his sons to serve in their country's cause.

In 1867 he settled on a farm in the town of Goshen. In 1871 he was appointed under sheriff by Sheriff Weygant, and, after serving three years, he was elected, in the fall of 1874, sheriff of Orange County, which office he creditably filled for one term. Upon the expiration of his term as sheriff he purchased and settled on the farm where he now resides, commanding a view of the village of Goshen. In the fall of 1877 he was elected from the Second Assembly District of Orange County, and served one term in the State Legislature. Although Mr. Hoyt had limited opportunities while young for education from books, his native energy and active business capacity, with a good knowledge of men and things, have given him a place among the widely-known men of Orange County.

He married, Sept. 20, 1838, Loretta A., daughter of Mahar W. and Rachel (Norris) Horton, of Bloomingburgh, Sullivan Co., N. Y. Her father, born May 15, 1787, died Aug. 5, 1866; her mother, born April 5, 1796, died Feb. 26, 1859. The children of Mahar W. Horton were Harman N.; Loretta A., born July 20, 1817; Harriet, wife of Thomas K. Boyea, of Fair Oaks, Orange Co.; and Napoleon. Mahar W. Horton was an influential man in Sullivan County, and served as sheriff of the county for three terms, and for several terms as under sheriff. Mahar W. Horton was son of Elihu, grandson of Silas, and great-grandson of Barnabas Horton, a native of Long Island, who became one of the early settlers of Goshen in 1732.

The children of James W. Hoyt are Mahar Henry: Isaac, enlisted in the beginning of the late civil war in the Eighteenth Regiment, was in the battles of Bull Run, Fredericksburg, Williamsburg, West Point, Va., Gaines' Mills, Seven Days' Fight at Fair Oaks, Malvern Hill, Chancellorsville, and Antietam. Upon the expiration of his term of service—two years—he became dispatcher under Gen. McCollum during Sherman's march to Atlanta, and remained in service until the close of the war; Hezekiah W., enlisted in the Nineteenth Regiment, and served for three months, guarding Baltimore. He then re-enlisted for nine months, and at the end of that time was transferred to the One Hundred and Twenty-first Regiment, and was in the battles of Fredericksburg, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Gettysburg, and was with the memorable bloody Sixth Corps, under Sheridan, in the Shenandoah Valley at the battle of Winchester. He was honorably discharged about one month before the close of the war by President Lincoln; James W., born Nov. 25, 1848, died June 1, 1853; Mary Louisa, wife of Charles W. Coleman; James W. (2), born Nov. 12, 1855, died Dec. 20, 1856; Hattie A., born April 14, 1858, died Sept. 22, 1858; and Winfield S. Hoyt.

Stephen Smith

His great-grandfather, Henry Smith, was born in England, and settled in Goshen, Orange Co., about 1743, where he purchased one hundred and seven acres of land, for which he paid forty pounds. He subsequently bought another parcel of land in the same town, upon which he resided until his death. His wife's name was Joanna.

His children were Henry, Stephen, Caleb, Abigail, Phebe, Joanna, Elizabeth, and Hannah, of whom Caleb was grandfather of our subject, and resided on the homestead or first purchase by his father, to which he added other land during his life. He died in 1784, leaving the following children: Henry C., Stephen, Caleb, John, Joshua, and Abby, wife of Major Tusten.

Stephen, born on the homestead in 1765, married Sarah, daughter of Benjamin Conkling, whose ancestors settled on Long Island during the early history of this country. Benjamin Conkling first removed to Connecticut, and subsequently settled in Goshen.

Stephen Smith resided on the homestead of his father, then comprising about one hundred and fifty acres, to which he succeeded partly by purchase, from 1800 until his death, which occurred May 31, 1824, and was known as a man of sound judgment, a good farmer, and an upright man.

He was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen when the church edifice was located where the court-house now stands, and was a liberal contributor to early church and school interests. He belonged to the school of Jeffersonian Democrats, but took no very active part in political matters outside of his own town.

His wife was born in 1765, and died April 27, 1818. Their children were Elizabeth, wife of James Van Duzer; Abigail, wife of Henry Smith; Benjamin C., who was in the war of 1812; Sarah, wife of Joshua Smith; Stephen, subject of this sketch; Joseph R.; and John A.; all of whom are deceased in 1881 except Stephen, who was born on the homestead, June 16, 1799.

His early education from books was limited to a short attendance at the district school, but he became familiar during his minority with what makes a practical business education, as his successful business career has in after life developed.

He married, Dec. 19, 1822, Matilda, daughter of Timothy Wood and Dolly Carpenter. Her grandmother Wood was one of the six daughters of Henry Smith, before alluded to. She was born Dec. 15, 1804, was devoted to her family, her friends, of whom she had many, and to the church of which she was a member nearly her whole life, and died Jan. 28, 1881. The children born of this union are Sarah E., widow of O. B. Vail, of Middletown, and Stephen Augustus, whose wife is Harriet A., daughter of John B. and Hetta A. (Horton) Hulse, of Wallkill.

After the death of his father, Mr. Smith rented the homestead for a few years, but in 1830 came into possession of it partly by purchase and partly by inheritance. He built his present residence in 1837. Mr. Smith has spent his life on this place, the homestead of his forefathers, and has well kept up the reputation of the family for thrift, industry, and good management in agricultural pursuits. Even at the age of eighty-two years his activity of body, his apparent healthy and vigorous constitution, and his retentive memory are wonderful, and not often found common to men of even threescore years.

He has been a member of the Presbyterian Church since 1815, and a part of the time deacon.

For fifty-nine years Mr. and Mrs. Smith were spared to live together, and their home was always the welcome resting-place for the weary traveler, and their hospitality was ever extended to their many friends.

Mr. Smith has been a trustee of the Presbyterian Church for forty-five years; was assessor of his town for nine years, and has often been selected to act as guardian, executor, and administrator of estates, in all of which official trusts he has had the full confidence of all interested.

John A. Ryerson

The progenitor of the Ryerson family on Long Island was Martin Ryerson, who came from Amsterdam, and settled first at Flatbush, and afterwards at the Wallabout, Long Island. Of his five sons, Joris, with two of his brothers, Ryer and Francis, settled in New York, and subsequently removed, about 1701, to Bergen County, N. J., and were the first settlers of Pascquanac. Joris married Sarah Schouten, who died in 1743, by whom he had four sons and four daughters,—John, Martin, George, Lucas, Mary, Blandina, Elizabeth, and Ann. Martin, son of Joris, married Catherine Cox, and settled in Hunterdon County, N. J., near Flemington, on the south branch of the Raritan. He was a surveyor and one of the king's judges, also a colonel of the militia. He had five sons and four daughters. Of these children, Martin, John, and William A., with their widowed mother, removed to Sussex County, N. J., in the year 1770, where each reared families.

Martin married Rhoda, daughter of Benjamin Hull, who bore him the following children who grew to maturity: Jesse, David, Anna, Emma, Thomas C., and Elizabeth, who became the wife of Robert A. Linn.

Thomas C. died in 1838, then a judge of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, and one of his sons, Martin, was subsequently a judge of the same court; a second, Thomas, is a practicing physician in Newton, N. J.; a third, Henry Ogden, was an officer in the late Rebellion; and a daughter became the wife of Thomas F. Anderson, of Newton, N. J. One of the sons who came from Bergen County with their widowed mother was grandfather of our subject, and settled in Vernon township, Sussex Co., N. J., where he died, leaving by his first marriage the following children: John, resided in Ohio and died in Indiana; Hassel, resided in Vernon, was thrown off his horse and killed, his family afterwards removing to Ohio; Peter, was a farmer in Vernon; and Nicholas. By his second marriage he had the following children: Jane, wife of Henry Post, of Orange County; Dolly, wife first of Abram Ryerson, and second of John Snyder, of Bergen County, N. J.; and Catherine, married George Manderville, and died in Bergen County.

Of these children, Nicholas was father of our subject, and was a boy when his parents settled in Vernon. He was born April 8, 1781, early in life learned the blacksmith's trade, subsequently became a large farmer in Vernon, and followed droving. He was a man of great activity, temperate in his habits, and never used tobacco or liquor; lived to an advanced age, and died Jan. 2, 1868. His wife, Anna Farver, born Nov.

26, 1787, died March 15, 1873, and both were buried at Amity, Orange Co. Their children are Elizabeth, wife of Amos Munson, of Wantage, N. J.; John N., subject of this sketch; Anna, wife of George W. Houston, of Middletown, N. Y.; Peter N., of Vernon; Delia, wife of Peter J. Brown, of Vernon; Nicholas N., of Wantage; Abigail, wife of John T. Walling, of Amity, N. Y.; Catherine, wife of Evi Martin, of Amity; and Jane, wife of Abiah F. Walling, of Wawayanda.

John N. Ryerson was born in the town of Vernon, Sussex Co., N. J., March 12, 1809. He received a fair education during his boyhood, but at the age of fifteen began his business career by establishing himself in the grocery trade at Paterson, N. J., where he continued for six years.

After reaching his majority, until 1854, he carried on farming in Vernon, Bergen County, Wantage, and a second time in Vernon, N. J., when he purchased five hundred acres of land in the town of Goshen, a part of which he subsequently sold. In 1856 he purchased his present farm of one hundred and fifty acres, located within the corporate limits of the village of Goshen. This land Mr. Ryerson has brought into a high state of cultivation, and the products of his dairy he sends daily by railroad to New York City in the form of cream and milk. Mr. Ryerson may be safely classed among the substantial farmers and enterprising agriculturalists of Orange County, and has devoted his whole life to business pursuits. With Peter J. Brown, of Vernon, he spent the year 1850 in California in the grocery business. He was formerly a Whig, then a Republican, and a firm supporter of the Union cause during the late civil war.

He married first, in August, 1828, Hannah, daughter of Abram Van Houton, of Paterson, N. J., who was born in 1810, and died in 1832. The children of this union were Annie, who was the wife of Adam Terhune, of Paterson, and died in 1851; Amos, is a farmer of Wawayanda; Abram, is a farmer in Hamptunburgh; and Catherine, wife of Joshua Holbert, of Chemung County, N. Y.

For his second wife he married, Dec. 3, 1839, Hannah, daughter of Daniel Bailey, of Glenwood, N. J., who was born June 20, 1820. The children are Hannah, wife of William Holbert, of Chemung County; Elizabeth, wife of Jesse A. Holbert, of Goshen; Mary, wife of Daniel Carpenter, of Goshen; Annie, wife of J. B. Slawson, of Jersey City; John B.; and Daniel B. Both Mr. and Mrs. Ryerson are attendants of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen.

Robert Young

His father, Stewart Young, was born near Londonderry, Ireland, in 1785, and during his early life was a linen-weaver and farmer in his native country. With his wife, Margaret, daughter of Joseph Watson, and daughter Margaret, he came to America in 1817, stopping for a few months at St. John, N. B. From thence he proceeded to Boston, and about the year 1820 removed with his family to Craigville, Orange Co., where he resided until his death, at the age of fifty-two. His wife, born in 1795, survived him, and died at the age of sixty-five. Both were buried in the Greycourt Cemetery.

Their children were Margaret; Robert, subject of this sketch; James, of Chemung County; Joseph W., a farmer in Steuben County; Frances J., deceased, who was the wife of Horace Mapes, of Monroe; John, deceased; Stewart, who carries on a creamery in Warwick; Eliza R., widow of William Sutton, of Warwick; Matthew, a farmer in Monroe; Alexander, of Carson City.

Robert Young was born in the city of Boston, Dec. 25, 1818, and was only able to obtain the advantages of a common-school education in boyhood; but he early learned those inestimable lessons that industry, prudence, and economy are the foundations of a successful business career. By his own savings he, in 1845, felt able to buy a farm in Sullivan Co., N. Y., upon which, however, he never settled, but sold it in 1848. In November of that year he married Margaret, daughter of Abram B. and Hannah (Harlow) Watkins, of Hamptonburgh, Orange Co., who was born May 27, 1814. Her father died in 1859, at the age of eighty-four years, leaving six sons and seven daughters, of whom only two sons and two daughters survive in 1881. She is a granddaughter of Benjamin Harlow, of Hamptonburgh.

For some time prior to his marriage, and for three years altogether, Mr. Young was engaged in the milk business in New York City. In 1851 he purchased the farm upon which he now resides, containing one hundred and ten acres, which, by addition and sales, only contains seventy-two acres. To this property he has added other real estate in the town of Goshen and in Sullivan County, and is one of the thrifty, enterprising, well-to-do, and judicious farmers of Orange County. The products of his dairy are daily sent by him direct to the New York market in the form of milk.

Mr. Young's business career is only another illustration of the many in this country where industry and self-reliance result in the accumulation of a fair competency, and where honest labor is rewarded with satisfactory compensation. He has been very little connected with town matters, except to serve as census enumerator for the Second Election District of Goshen in 1880, appointed by Marshal Frederick Bodine, and to hold some minor offices. He has been a director of the Goshen and Pine Island Railroad since its organization.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Young are attendants of the First Presbyterian Church of Florida, Orange Co., of which she is a member and he has been a trustee for many years. Their children are Margaret, wife of William T. Jayne, a farmer in the town of Goshen, and Robert G. Young, who resides upon the homestead, and married Nettie, daughter of Alanson Slaughter and Mary Ann Bailey, of Wallkill, Orange Co.

John S. Crane

JOHN SEARS CRANE, M.D., the only son of John and Abigail Crane, was born in the town of Goshen, Aug. 3, 1795.

He entered Princeton College in 1815, and graduated in 1818. In June, 1868, he was one of the seven survivors of his class who celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their graduation from the college.

He studied medicine under Dr. Hosack, in New York City, and was admitted to membership in the State Medical Society, March 16, 1822, and in the Medical Society of Orange County, July 22, 1822, Drs. David R. Arnell and E. Jansen being the president and secretary of both societies.

April 18, 1822, he was married to Miss Sarah Smith, of Goshen, and of the six children by this union three still survive. He began the practice of medicine in Milford, Pa., extending his tours as far as Lackawaxen, much of which was accomplished on horseback through the woods and by an uncertain foot-path. His health being unequal to the labor, he engaged in the general store business in Goshen with Benjamin Strong, his brother-in-law.

"He was appointed surgeon's mate of a separate battalion of infantry attached to the Nineteenth Brigade of Infantry of New York State, with rank from Oct. 12, 1825, under De Witt Clinton, Governor, General and Commander-in-Chief of all the Militia, and Admiral of the Navy of the State. N. F. Beck, Adjutant-General.

"On the 29th of September, 1826, he took the oath of office before Asa Dunning, clerk of the county of Orange."

In 1837 he and John C. Wallace, Esq., entered into the store partnership, from which he retired in 1855. At the organization and incorporation of the Orange County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, in 1837, he was elected and continued to be its first president till his death. In 1851 he was elected a director of the newly organized Goshen Bank, and continued such during his life. His name for many years appears among the officers of Farmers' Hall Academy. He united with the Goshen Presbyterian Church, under Rev. Ezra Fisk, D.D., April 28, 1831, and was elected a ruling elder therein Dec. 21, 1858. He was an untiring librarian and occasional superintendent of the Sabbath-school almost from its beginning up to three weeks before his death. For nineteen years he was the treasurer of the Orange County Bible Society. In politics he was an Old-Line Whig till the Rebellion, when he became a Republican. Eminently conservative, he was ever ready to lend a helping hand intelligently to every good and useful work.

A fall in July, 1874, disabled him from his usual active exercise, and thus rendered more easy the final conquest by laryngitis and general debility, on Jan. 1, 1875, when "he entered into his rest, having fallen asleep in Christ."

Chas F. Johnson

The Johnson family is of English descent, and the progenitor of this branch emigrated to America in 1664, and settled at Newark, N. J. —

His grandfather, Jotham, resided at the south end of Newark, and married Hannah Beach, who bore to him the following children: Josiah, Nathaniel, Thomas, James, Ebenezer, Elmira (wife of Henry Parkhurst), and Phebe (wife of Caleb Carter); all of whom who grew up settled near the place of their birth. Ebenezer, father of our subject, was born Jan. 23, 1793, and married Mary, daughter of Dennis and Elizabeth Osborne, of Salem, Union Co., N. J., who was born in 1795, and died in November, 1870.

Their children were William, who was a farmer in Essex County, and there died, leaving children; Henry, died unmarried; Charles F.; and Mary C.

Ebenezer Johnson while a young man learned the trade of a mason, which he followed until 1826, when he purchased a small farm in the township of Clinton, Essex Co., N. J., upon which he resided, and also for many years worked at his trade, until 1870, when he removed to Elizabeth, N. J., where he now resides. He is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth.

Charles F. Johnson was born at Newark, March 16, 1824. He remained at home until he was nineteen years of age, when he left the parental roof to carve out a fortune for himself. For three years he was a farm laborer. On Jan. 20, 1847, he married Joanna, daughter of Gen. Charles Board and Joanna Seeley, and granddaughter of Joseph Board, who with his two brothers, James and David, came from Wales and settled at Ringwood, N. J., where they had charge of the iron-works. They owned the land in the Pompton valley, consisting of some fifteen hundred acres, and many of their descendants became settlers in Orange Co., N. Y. Joanna Board was born in June, 1817.

For twelve years following his marriage Mr. Johnson rented a farm at Ringwood, N. J., consisting of five hundred and thirty acres, which in 1859, upon the death of his father-in-law, he purchased. This property he sold in 1872, and purchased one hundred and sixty-three acres in the town of Goshen, Orange Co., N. Y.,—one of the most desirable and productive farms in the town,—upon which he has resided since. The products of his dairy are marketed in the form of milk in New York. Upon this property he has built a fine and substantial barn, and all the appointments of his place show thrift and enterprise.

Mr. Johnson has taken a somewhat active part in political matters, and prior to his settlement in Orange County was one of the freeholders of Pompton for two years, assessor of the township from 1865 to 1870, and represented the Third District of Passaic County in the State Legislature in 1863 and 1864. His children are Henry P., Charles E., Asher, and William.

Edson Colman

Mr. Tuthill had only the advantages of a common-school education, but has always kept well read in the current topics of the times, and has a retentive memory and a natural taste for the acquisition of historical data.

He has always taken a somewhat independent stand in political matters; and although a member of the Republican party, has cast his vote for the men who represent the principles he conceives to be right.

He was assessor in the town in 1842-43, inspector of common schools of the town of Goshen for one year, and census enumerator of the First Assembly District of Goshen in 1865. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen.

Mr. Tuthill's life has been spent on a part of the homestead where he was born, and mostly given to the quiet care of his farm. For four years he was a resident of Goshen village, and was engaged in building. He built his present brick residence in 1860. For twenty years he has been afflicted severely with a spinal disease, and confined to the house, where he spends the slowly-passing days and years in reading and meditation, waiting for the summons to "come up higher." Mr. Tuthill is known as a man of untarnished character, sociable, hospitable, and generous beyond his means, and a Christian man.

GEORGE MAPES.

Among the oldest native residents of Orange County is the subject of this sketch, who was born on the homestead near Sugar-Loaf, Feb. 15, 1798, and has spent his life in the vicinity of his birth. His grandfather, David Mapes, spent his life as a farmer near Sugar-Loaf, in the town of Goshen. His children by his first marriage were James, John, Catharine, wife of Garret Rysdyke; and Hannah, wife of Isaac Bull. The children by his second marriage were Edward and William.

John, son of David Mapes, born about 1770, near Sugar-Loaf, resided on a farm in Sugar-Loaf Valley most of his active business life, and died at the age of sixty-two years. He was a quiet, unostentatious man, and sought to fulfill the full duties of the citizen. His wife was Elizabeth Halleck, of Sugar-Loaf Valley, who died at the age of eighty-four, and who bore him the following children: James, George (subject of this sketch), Mittie, wife of William Roe; John, Hannah, and Susan, wife of Peter Board.

George Mapes remained at home until the age of twenty-four. He married, in 1828, Susan, daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Satterly) Durland, of Chester, who was born March 3, 1809, and died March 19, 1870, leaving two children,—Sarah Jane and John Mapes.

After his marriage Mr. Mapes purchased a farm in Wallkill, on the river, where he resided for six years. He then purchased, in 1834, some 62 acres in the town of Goshen, and for six years kept a public-house at the corners which bear his name,—“Mapes' Corners,”—and also carried on his farm in connection with it. In 1840 he built his present residence on another part of his farm, in which he has resided since.

George Mapes

Mr. Mapes is well known as a man of strict integrity in all the business relations of life, kind-hearted, and sociable. His plain, unassuming ways, and his genial bearing have won him many friends as he has passed through life.

His great-grandfather Mapes was supposed to have been of English birth and the progenitor of the family in Orange County. His uncle, Edward Mapes, was in the war of 1812, and was killed.

EDSON COLEMAN.

William Coleman came from England, and was one of the first English settlers on Long Island, and is supposed to be the common ancestor of the Coleman family in New York State. His great-grandson, Thomas, had his residence on the bank of the Hudson, in the town of Cornwall, Orange Co., where he died Feb. 22, 1822, having been born April 27, 1767. Joel Coleman, grandfather of our subject,—supposed to be a descendant of William, the progenitor,—was born in Goshen, resided most of his life in Hamptonburgh, and was a farmer. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and was at the battle of White Plains. He died at Scotchtown, in Wallkill, at the age of eighty-four, Oct. 24, 1840.

By his first wife he had children,—Rumsey and Joel, resided on the homestead their lives and there died; Philena, was the wife of Nathaniel Carpenter; Keziah, wife of James Manning; Hull, father of our subject; Oliver; and Rachel, wife of John Brown. By his second wife (Mrs. Mary Owen, a daughter of Hiram Dunning) he had one child, Alfred Coleman, who has spent most of his life as a farmer in Wallkill, and now, at the age of seventy-six, is a resident of Middletown, N. Y. His second wife died in 1845, aged eighty-four.

Hull Coleman, born Sept. 12, 1790, on the homestead, married, in 1810, Lois, daughter of Mrs. Mary Owen, before mentioned, by her first husband. She died July 3, 1857. He died Aug. 28, 1865. Their children are Eliza, born Dec. 24, 1811, died Jan. 14, 1866, was the wife of Thomas S. Nanny, of Amity, town of Warwick; Edson, subject of this sketch, born March 3, 1815; Almeda, born May 23, 1817, wife of William H. Waterbury, of Warwick; Frances M., born March 14, 1819, was the wife first of John M. Ferrier, and after his death became the wife of Louis M. Jayne, of Warwick.

Hull Coleman spent most of his active business life as a farmer in the town of Warwick; but about five years prior to his decease settled in Florida village, in the same town, still continuing the oversight of a few acres of land. Both he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, first at Amity, and subsequently at Florida, where they removed. He never sought public place, but preferred the quiet life of an agriculturist. He was a man of sterling integrity in all his business relations, of correct habits, and had the confidence of his fellow-citizens.

Edson, son of Hull Coleman, born on the homestead in Warwick, during his minority received only a common-school education; but he became acquainted with all that pertains to a well-conducted farm. Aug. 26, 1838, he married Hannah Elizabeth, daughter of Hon. John W. Wisner, of Elmira, N. Y., who was a prominent lawyer of that city and for many years magistrate, and who served as judge of Chemung County. He was a candidate for member of Congress at two different times, and was only defeated by some thirty votes in a poll of thirteen thousand, although his party was largely in the minority. He was also supervisor for several terms, and took a decided and influential stand against the principles of slavery in the Southern States.

Mrs. Coleman's mother was Eliza, daughter of Richard Ryerson, whose ancestors were from Amsterdam, and came to America, first settling on Long Island, afterwards in Bergen Co., N. J., in 1701, and subsequently in Sussex Co., N. J. Her paternal grandfather was Jeffrey Wisner, cousin of Henry G. Wisner, a prominent lawyer of Goshen, who died in 1842, and grandson of Henry Wisner, an early resident of Goshen, and one of the founders of the republic. Mrs. Coleman was born March 2, 1818.

In 1839, Mr. Coleman purchased 100 acres of land, where he now resides, in the town of Goshen, to which he has since added some 40 acres. In 1860 he erected a fine and substantial farm residence, and later commodious barns, and has brought his land into a high state of cultivation. His surroundings show to the passer-by thrift, enterprise, and the cultivated taste of an intelligent farmer. Both he and his wife are attendants of the Presbyterian Church at Amity, of which his wife is a member, and a lady of rare womanly qualities.

Like his ancestors before him, Mr. Coleman is progressive in his ideas, and a supporter of all measures tending to the welfare of the community in which he resides, although never taking any active part in political matters, except to cast his vote, which he does as a member of the Republican party.

JOHN T. ACKLEY.

His paternal grandfather, Daniel Ackley, married a Miss Grovesnor, who belonged to a wealthy and influential English family, who bore him the following children: Augustus A.; Hiram, of Illinois; George; Catharine, wife of Robert Collins; Jane; and Hannah, who became the wife of Thomas Bellamy.

Of these children, Augustus A. Ackley was father of John T., was born in Vermont in 1799, and came to Orange County while a young man. He married, about 1821, Maria, daughter of Edward Mapes, whose family were among the early settlers of Goshen. Their children are William P., of Goshen; James H., deceased; John T., subject of this sketch; Joanna, wife of Hayden Wheeler, of Middletown, N. Y.; Daniel E.; Wyckliffe W.; Hannah, wife of J. W. Riker; Augustus, Henry, Thomas, and Mary.

Upon coming to Orange County, Augustus A. Ackley learned the tailor's trade of Joseph Munnell, of Hamptonburgh, and is said to have become a first-class workman at his trade, which he carried on for several years at Sugar-Loaf. He afterwards engaged in farming in Warwick, was a merchant at Sugar-Loaf from 1836 to 1841, and subsequently at Chester. He was an active, industrious, and thrifty business man, of good habits, and had the confidence of his fellow-men. He died at Sugar-Loaf, April 12, 1866. His wife was born in 1801, and died about 1863.

John T. Ackley was born at Sugar-Loaf, Orange Co., April 3, 1825. Having received the ordinary opportunities of a district school education, at the age of sixteen he went into the busy world to carve out a fortune for himself. For one year he was clerk in the store of William N. White, of Newburgh, and for two years following he was a clerk in his father's store at Chester. He then spent one year as a student at the Farmers' Hall Academy at Goshen, and in 1845 went to New York, where he remained for four years as book-keeper for the firm of Furman & Davis.

In 1849 he went to San Francisco, Cal., where he

Adrian Holbert

His grandfather, John Holbert, resided in the town of Chester, Orange Co., sold his farm there, and took his pay in Continental money, and consequently, upon his return from the war, in which he served as captain, to free the American colonies from British tyranny, he was without property. He continued to reside in Chester until his death, which occurred in 1821, at the age of ninety-three. His wife, Mary, was born in Holland, and died some time prior to the death of her husband, leaving children,—Peter, Ebenezer, Samuel, John, Mary, and Susan, wife of Rynard House, of Chester. All of these children, except Mary, were married, reared families, and settled in Orange County.

Peter, father of Adrian, born Aug. 24, 1768, in Chester, married Rosanna, daughter of Garret Durland, of Minisink, who was born April 10, 1770, and died May 15, 1839. He died Oct. 19, 1836. Their children were Mary, wife of David Robertson, died of spotted fever in 1808; William, deceased; Martha, wife of Abijah Wells; Susan, wife of Abram Tyler; Miriam, wife of William Wells; John; Sarah, wife of Silas C. Brown; Harriet, wife of Jacob Dunning; Elizabeth, married first Joseph Sayer, and after his death became the wife of Lynden Mulford; Adrian; and Peter; ten of whom married and reared families, and all of whom reside in the town of Minisink, except Adrian. Peter Holbert, father of these children, after his marriage purchased land in Minisink, which he cleared of its original forest, and he and his wife met the obstacles incident to pioneer life, with which they battled successfully, and during their lives contributed much to the growth and development of the town in which they took up their residence.

Mr. Holbert was influential in the affairs of his town and county, and a staunch member of the old Whig party. He served as supervisor several terms; was justice of the peace for twenty-seven years, doing most of the conveyancing in the town, for he was a very fine penman; and he served in the State Legislature, from Orange County, in 1812. He was a successful business man, and owned considerable real estate at his death.

Adrian, son of Peter Holbert, born Aug. 11, 1809, in Mini-sink, is a man of good business ability, and has led a life of great activity, and mostly devoted to agricultural pursuits. For some two years after reaching the age of twenty-three he carried on a general store, in connection with Silas C. Brown, his brother-in-law, at Centreville, and also at Millsburg, then settled on a farm in Monroe; but after about four years, in 1836, he purchased the Valentine farm, in the town of Goshen, —said to be one of the most productive farms in Orange County, —which he carried on until 1861, and sold to his son, Jesse A. Holbert, and removed to Goshen village.

In 1868 he went to New York City, and for two years was engaged in the milk business, and then returned to Goshen. He had built one house in Goshen prior to going to the city, and he now built another after his return.

Like many other men who pass their middle life in active duties of farm work and become restless under inactivity, so with Mr. Holbert, and in 1879 he left the village and settled on a few acres of land near his old homestead, where he has erected a beautiful and substantial residence that would do honor to village real estate, where he expects to spend the remainder of his days. Mr. Holbert has been in every sense of the term a representative farmer of Orange County, and all the appointments of his well-regulated premises show enterprise, thrift, and care.

In 1832 he married Hannah, daughter of Joshua Sayer, of Minisink, who was born Sept. 15, 1809, and died Nov. 20, 1843. The children born of this marriage are Charles, of Kansas; Hannah, wife of George Graham, of Greenville; Mariette, wife of Albert W. Slater, of Centralia, Kan.; Sarah, wife of Richard Wilson, died in Wallkill; and Jesse A.

His second wife was Harriet, daughter of John Wisner, of Minisink, whom he married in 1845, and who died Jan. 14, 1868, leaving one child, Anna.

His present wife is Frances, daughter of Joshua and Jemima (Sayer) Wells, and granddaughter of Joshua Wells, a representative of an old family in the town of Goshen, and who are of English descent. She was born Dec. 19, 1811, and married to Mr. Holbert, Dec. 22, 1870.

Noah Gregory

His ancestors were of Scotch and French extraction, and his paternal grandfather was one of the early settlers of Orange County.

His father, Samuel Gregory, born in Chester, Orange Co., in 1763, married Mary Hunter, who died Feb. 17, 1821, aged forty-six years and eight months. He died Nov. 18, 1827, and both were buried in the old graveyard near Monroe.

He resided in the town of Chester during the earlier part of his life; subsequently became a large farmer in the town of Monroe, where he owned some five hundred acres of land.

His children were Katy (wife of Joseph Stevens), Benjamin, William, Hiram, Noah, Sylvester, James, Hannah (wife of Benjamin Van Duzer), Elmer, George, and John,—only four of whom survive in 1881.

Noah Gregory, fifth son of Samuel, was born on the homestead, in the town of Monroe, Oct. 7, 1803. His minority was spent at home, where he learned farming, and obtained limited book knowledge in the district school. He married, March 23, 1826, Sally Maria, daughter of Stephen and Abigail (Goldsmith) Smith, one of a family of seven children. Her father was born Feb. 27, 1752, and died July 25, 1803. Her mother was born May 8, 1757, and died Dec. 23, 1826. Mrs. Gregory was born May 23, 1799, and died Dec. 7, 1879. She was devoted to her family, and did her part well as a helpmeet of her husband.

Some two years after his marriage, Mr. Gregory purchased one hundred and fifty-seven acres of land in the town of Goshen, then an uncultivated tract and wild, upon which he settled. This land he brought into a high state of cultivation in due course of time, and to this purchase he added one hundred and fifty-seven acres more. With the exception of some parcels sold, this has been his homestead since. He erected a house about 1831, which forms a part of his present residence, together with commodious barns.

During his active business life all the appointments of his farm showed the work of a thrifty and enterprising farmer, and he may safely be classed among the substantial agriculturists of the town of Goshen. He has never taken an active part in political matters, but has always taken an interest in all enterprises tending to the prosperity of the town. His children were Mary Jane (widow of the late Joseph D. Stage, of Walkill), Stephen S., Noah, Goldsmith, Harvey, Mrs. Sarah A. Goldsmith, John H., born Aug. 11, 1837, was a soldier in the late civil war, and died in 1863; William H., died in infancy; Catherine E., born Nov. 9, 1842, died Jan. 1, 1880, was the wife of Hiram T. Stage; and George Elmer.

Richard L. Wood

His great-grandfather Timothy, born in England, was among the earliest settlers of Goshen, Orange Co., his farm being located where Mr. Snyder now resides, just outside the limits of the village of Goshen, on the Florida road. On this homestead also his grandfather, Richard Wood, resided, and by his marriage with Miss Smith had the following children: Richard, Oliver, Timothy, and Joanna (wife of Jonathan Owen), all of whom were residents of, and died in Orange County. Of these children, Timothy was father of our subject, and was born on the homestead Dec. 29, 1776. He married Dolly, daughter of Michael Carpenter, of Goshen, who was born Feb. 22, 1781, and died in 1864. He died in 1846.

Their children were Matilda, born Dec. 15, 1804, was the wife of Stephen Smith, of Goshen, and died Jan. 28, 1881; Richard L., born Sept. 3, 1806; William C., born April 26, 1810, was a farmer on the Florida road, in Goshen, and died in 1840, leaving an only son, James J. Wood, a silversmith, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Sarah Jane, born March 11, 1814 (never married), and died Feb. 19, 1879; and Gabriel S., born Nov. 27, 1818, was a farmer, and died in the town of Mount Hope, Orange Co., June, 1876, leaving two daughters and one son.

Timothy Wood resided on the homestead after his marriage, about 1803, until 1831, when he purchased a farm on the Florida road from Goshen, upon which his son William C. afterwards resided. In 1833 he purchased two hundred and twelve acres about one mile northwest of Goshen village, upon which he resided the remainder of his life, and which was inherited at his death by Richard L. and Gabriel S., his sons. The latter disposed of his part of this farm, which is now owned by Mr. Everett.

Both Timothy Wood and his wife were devoted members of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen, as also his father, Richard Wood, had been.

Richard L., son of Timothy Wood, is the only surviving child, and resides upon a part of the homestead where his father died. He was born on the old homestead where three generations before him lived, and where his great-grandfather, the progenitor of the family in Orange County, first settled.

In 1851 he built his present residence, and later, commodious barns, all of which, with the order of his whole farm of one hundred and thirteen acres, show the care of a thorough-going and thrifty farmer.

Mr. Wood has been industrious, prudent, and upright, and as such is known by all his fellow-men. Like his ancestors before him, he has led a quiet, unostentatious life, and strictly followed agricultural pursuits. He was never married.

W. C. Coleman

WILLIAM COLEMAN came from England, and was one of the first English settlers on Long Island, and the common ancestor of this branch of the Coleman family in America.

Of his three sons, William, John, and George, the eldest is in line of descent, and had seven sons, one of whom was Thomas, who had two sons and one daughter, viz.: Curtis, Thomas, and Deborah, who married Jacob Brown.

Thomas, born July 2, 1732, married Elizabeth Roe, who was born in 1730, and who bore him four sons and two daughters, of whom Thomas, grandfather of our subject, born April 27, 1767, married, for his first wife, Mary Galloway, born April 28, 1767, who bore him the following children: Elizabeth (wife of Obadiah Smith), Ann (wife of Morris B. Pilgrim), Charlotte (wife of Morris Stephens), all of Monroe, Orange Co.; and William, Roe, and Thomas. The mother of these children died Dec. 9, 1804. By a second wife Thomas Coleman had three sons,—Samuel, Emery, and Henry.

His farm was on the banks of the Hudson, in the town of Cornwall, and he is supposed to be the first of the family who settled in Orange County. He died Feb. 21, 1822.

Of his children, William, father of our subject, was born March 19, 1792, and early in life learned the painter's trade. He married Ann, daughter of Nathaniel and Margaret (Bradner) Conkling, of Goshen, who was born Oct. 19, 1793. For two years after his marriage he resided at Hackettstown, N. J., and then purchased a carding-mill in the town of Warwick, near Florida, which he carried on for some thirty years, until small mills were superseded by larger machinery on a larger scale, when he built a grist-mill on the site of his carding-mill, and carried it on the remainder of his life, in connection with a small farm bought subsequent to his first purchase of the mill property.

He was a promoter of the best interests of society, and a contributor to the support of the Presbyterian Church at Florida, of which his wife was a member. He died April 18, 1850; his wife died April 29, 1876. Their children were Nathaniel C., born Dec. 9, 1815; Thomas J., born Aug. 28, 1817, was a merchant in New York, and died May 8, 1878; John C., born July 28, 1819, is a farmer in Milwaukee, Wis.; Mary E., born Feb. 24, 1822, was the wife of P. P. Demarest, of Goshen, and died April 20, 1876; Cornelia A., born Nov. 23, 1823, wife of A. L. Beyea, of Rye, Westchester Co., N. Y.; Harriet Eveline, born July 18, 1825, present wife of P. P. Demarest; George C., born Aug. 21, 1828, of Colorado; Caroline, born June 6, 1831, was the wife of Henry D. Welty, of Auburn, N. Y., and died Jan. 8, 1877; and Margaret A., born Jan. 26, 1834, died unmarried, July 9, 1868. The eldest of these children, whose portrait appears above, spent his early life until the age of twenty-six at home, working in the mill and on the farm of his father. He married, Nov. 17, 1840, Fanny Maria, daughter of John and Eunice (Smith) Knapp, and great-granddaughter of William Knapp, who was the progenitor of the Knapp family in Orange County, and settled where William Knapp now resides in the town of Goshen, from Horseneck, Conn., among the earliest white people who found a home in the wilderness country about Goshen. She was born June 21, 1817, on the Knapp homestead, and belonged to a large family of children.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Coleman are Mary E., born June 5, 1841, died Aug. 31, 1863; Harriet Eliza, died in infancy; Anna A., wife of Robert Osborn, of Goshen; Fannie E., wife of Giles E. Goodrich, of Goshen; Nathaniel C., died at the age of five, Aug. 5, 1858; and Addie W.

About one year after his marriage Mr. Coleman purchased eighty-eight acres of land on the Conklingtown road, near Goshen village, upon which he settled, and which he retains, except some seven acres known as "Prospect Lake," which he sold, and which furnishes the supply of water for the village of Goshen. He built his present residence in 1851, and all the barns on his farm before and after that time. He has led a quiet life as a farmer, and he and his wife, by their industry and judicious management, have secured a fair competency. The products of his dairy, in the form of butter, on account of its superior quality, finds ready market at home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Coleman are members of the Methodist Church at Goshen, and promoters of all worthy objects.

Ja^s M. Bull

carried on, on his own account, successfully the hardware and tin business for six years. Returning to New York, he remained there in business until 1865, when he came to Goshen, purchased a farm of 241 acres of land, upon which he has resided since.

Mr. Ackley's life has been, thus far, one of activity, industry, and self-reliance, for which he has been rewarded with a fair competence.

He married, June 23, 1858, Sarah J., daughter of Cornelius Westervelt, of New York City, whose ancestors were early settlers in New York.

His children are Minnie A., Edward H., Jennie M., Edith, and John.

JAMES M. BULL.

His grandfather, Daniel Bull, was son of John, and grandson of William Bull, who was born in England in 1689, and sailed from Dublin, Ireland, and died in Orange County in 1755. The ancestry of the Bull family is given in the sketch of Jesse Bull, of Blooming-Grove.

Daniel Bull was born on the homestead, in the old stone house in Hamptonburgh. He settled in what is now the town of Chester, where he became a large land-owner.

He was an active and enterprising business man. A part of his homestead is now owned by the heirs of David Bull, his nephew. He was an influential Quaker, and one of the founders of the Quaker Society and builders of their meeting-house, which was on a part of his property on Quaker Hill. He died at the age of eighty-four. His wife, Sarah Harlow, of Hamptonburgh, died at about the age of forty-five. Their children were Stephen, lived and died on the homestead in Chester; Ebenezer, lived and died upon the original Bull homestead in Hamptonburgh, purchased for him by his father to keep it in the family; Phebe, was the wife of Joseph Booth, of Hamptonburgh; and the youngest son, John Milton, was the father of our subject. He was born March 25, 1798, and died Nov. 29, 1879. His wife was Martha, daughter of Joseph, and granddaughter of Charles Durland, who came from Long Island in 1756, and after the close of the French and Indian war, in which he served, settled in Chester, on the place now owned by his grandson, James Durland. Martha Durland was born in May, 1800, and is the oldest living member of the Chester Presbyterian Church in 1881. Their children are Sarah, died young; Ebenezer, of Westchester Co., N. Y.; Mary Ann, died at the age of forty-two; James M.; Samuel, succeeded to the homestead of his father in Monroe; Elizabeth, was the wife of Joseph W. Young, and died at Oxford in November, 1858; and Emily, became the second wife of Joseph W. Young.

John Milton Bull settled on a farm of 300 acres on the bank of Little Long Pond, in Monroe, where he spent his active business life, and was known as a progressive and an intelligent farmer. He possessed remarkable good judgment, was a man of practical ideas and sterling honesty, and was also a man of great determination and resolution of purpose. He continued litigation, begun by his father, for the control of the outlet of Little Long Pond until sixty years had elapsed from the beginning of the suit, when the matter was settled by arbitration; their opponents were Mr. Craig and his successor, Mr. Ames, of Craigville.

James M. Bull was born on the homestead in Monroe, April 3, 1830, and married, Jan. 25, 1859, Ann Elizabeth, daughter of George S. Conkling and Mary Seeley, and granddaughter of Joshua Conkling, who came from Long Island and was one of the early settlers of Goshen. Her mother was a daughter of Thaddeus Seeley, and granddaughter of Thaddeus Seeley, old residents of Chester. She was born June 8, 1835. Their children are George Seeley, was drowned young; Albert C.; Cornelia; John Milton, died young; and Whitfield H.

In 1856, Mr. Bull purchased the "Sheriff Jackson" place of about 100 acres in the town of Goshen, upon which he has resided since. He markets the products of his dairy in New York, and his father was the first man who sent canned milk to a New York market from Oxford in the fall of 1842.

Mr. Bull is a throughgoing, industrious, and well-to-do farmer; like his forefathers, he is no seeker after place, but has devoted his life strictly to agricultural pursuits.

WARWICK.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

WARWICK occupies a large portion of the southern part of the county. It is bounded north by Minisink, Wawayanda, Goshen, and Chester; east by Chester and Monroe; south and southwest by the State of New Jersey; west by New Jersey and the town of Minisink.

The only statement of area that can be given is comprised in the annual equalization table of the board of supervisors, showing 61,380 acres. The assessed valuation of the town for 1879 was $3,035,646, and the taxes levied upon that basis were $23,621.71. The title to the soil of the town is derived from the Wawayanda Patent.

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

The topography of this large tract is sufficiently interesting to justify a lengthy article, instead of the brief paragraph appropriated to this chapter. For additional material reference is made to the General History. Quaker Creek forms the western boundary, and has its source principally in Glenmere Lake (Thompson's Pond). Tributaries of this, flowing generally northwest, are the following: Pochuck Creek, formed of several branches, rising in the southwest part of the town; a second of little importance empties into Quaker Creek, a short distance north of the Pochuck; Wheeler's Creek, formed of several branches, is next north; and a fourth unites with Quaker Creek, near Florida. East of the higher lands, in which these streams rise, is the valley of the Warwick Creek. This stream has its sources in the north and the centre of the town, and among them is Wickham's Pond. It flows nearly south into the State of New Jersey; has many tributary rivulets from each direction, and drains an extensive tract. It is sometimes called the Wawayanda, but owing to its distance from the town of the same name it is liable to confuse, and should give way to the better name, Warwick. Long House Creek is a tributary of the Warwick, and flows from the southwest line of the town near Greenwood Lake nearly to Wickham's Pond. When uniting with the Warwick its waters flow again to the southwest through the Warwick Valley. There are various rivulets that drain a section of country north of Greenwood Lake, and flow into that body of water. The outlet of Stirling Pond flows southward into the town of Monroe, and becomes a tributary of the Ramapo.

The ponds form a distinct feature of the topography of the town. Long Pond is partly in Orange County and partly in New Jersey. It is about nine miles long and one mile wide. It is used as a feeder to the Morris Canal, and was formerly celebrated as a delightful fishing ground, especially for pickerel, which were exceedingly abundant. Thompson's Pond is mentioned in the chapter upon Chester. This name is from Judge William Thompson, formerly of Goshen, who owned the pond and had a flour-mill on its outlet. Wickham's Pond is situated in the Sugar-Loaf Valley, in the northeast part of the town. Its outlet is one of the principal branches of the Warwick Creek. It had its name from William Wickham, Esq., once first judge of the county, to whose estate the pond belonged. Stirling Pond is situated in the southeast part of the town, and is of considerable note in connection with the mines and the early manufacture of iron in that vicinity. The name was in honor of Lord Stirling, of New Jersey, prominent in Revolutionary times. Upon the outlet of the pond are the Stirling Iron Works.

In the Drowned Lands tract the so-called islands form a peculiar feature. They are known as Little, Gardner's, Black Walnut, Pine, Merritt's, and Owens'. They are simply small portions of upland in the midst of what was once low and swampy ground.

In the early settlement of the county some of these islands could only be approached by a boat, but under the drainage and cultivation of modern times this would never be suspected, as the Drowned Lands themselves are now traversed by good roads and divided into valuable farms.

The elevations in the town have special names. A range in the southeast is known as Warwick Mountains. East of these is Rough Mountain, a barren and rugged tract. Still further east is Stirling Mountain. Round Hill, near the New Jersey line, is so named from its circular outline. A short distance from this is Taylor Mountain. In the northeast are the Bellvale Mountains. Near Bellvale Corners is Decker Hill. Rock Hills are situated east of Florida. South of Big Island Station are Mounts Adam and Eve. These insulated mountain-masses are united in location, and we will not separate them in description. They are on the edge of the Drowned Lands, in the west part of the town. Adam is the highest, Eve the longest and largest. The latter lies east and north of the former. These elevations spring up from the bottom-lands on the west and the beautiful glades around Edenville on the east without any apparent physical reason, and stand, solitary and alone, like twin islands on the broad expanse of the ocean.

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

In the division of the Wawayanda Patent the portion which fell to Benjamin Aske received his personal attention in its settlement, as did that of Denne and Cromeline. By deed dated Feb. 28, 1719, he sold to Lawrence Decker, yeoman, for fifty pounds, 100 acres, in the deed described as "being part of the 2200 acres of land called Warwick," showing that previous to that time he had bestowed the name of Warwick upon his tract. This deed was signed by Mr. Aske, "of the County of Orange." By deed, May 20, 1721, he sold 100 acres "of his farm called Warwick" to "Thomas Blain, now residing upon the same." The third recorded deed from Mr. Aske was to Thomas DeKay, Dec. 8, 1724.

Lawrence Decker having received a deed, as stated, made a settlement soon after. It was the opinion of the late Mr. Henry Pelton, who had investigated these early matters, that his location was the Thomas Welling farm of modern times. It is supposed that one or two other Decker families came at the same time, and either then or subsequently a family by the name of Stagg, a name written "Stage" in subsequent years. Thomas Blain's deed mentioned shows that he was already located in the year 1721, and his farm was the Henry Pelton place of later years, though Blain subsequently changed to the Samuel Dolsen place. Thomas DeKay located no doubt soon after his purchase on the farm owned in later years by Joel Wood. His son, Thomas DeKay, Jr., succeeded him on the old homestead.

John Vane must have settled in Warwick soon after. His homestead was on lands adjoining the present Belden Burt farm, on the south, and reaching across the Warwick Creek to the north road. His dwelling was near the creek by the spring, a few rods northeast of the John Pelton barn of the present time.

The story of early settlement is interrupted for a time following the above locations of 1719 to 1725. There are few traditions of other families until the removal to this place of Daniel Burt in 1746 (mentioned below). He only remained four years at that time, and his permanent settlement dates from 1760. Meanwhile, there is some documentary evidence as to other families. The following fragments, among the reports of slaves made pursuant to an act of the Legislature, are found in the "Documentary History of the State." Their titles indicate that the location of a part at least of those mentioned was in Warwick:

"The number of all the Negro's belonging under Capt. John Wisner of 'Johnday,' 1755.

"Nathaniel Roe, two, a male and a female.

"William Thompson, two, a male and a female.

"According to the act of your Assembly this is a true account of all the slaves belonging to my District—1755.

"To Richard Edsall, one negro male and three female slaves.

"To Thomas Welling, one negro slave.

"To Richard Edsall, Jun., one negro slave.

(Signed)

"JACOBUS DE KAY."

The name of James Thompson, probably the same as that in the above list, occurs as quartermaster in Col. Vincent Matthews' regiment of 1738. Several of the others appear in the papers of twenty years later given below. James Burt, Esq., makes the following memorandum on the above list of 1755:

Nathaniel Roe lived in what is now the town of Chester. He had a son, Nathaniel Roe, Jr.

William Thompson lived about two miles from Florida, in the present town of Goshen. James Thompson, his brother, was settled in the same neighborhood.

David Shepherd was probably living at Amity, ancestor of many of the same family name residing in that vicinity in later years.

Jonathan Elmer was the pastor of the church at Florida, and a brother of Dr. Nathaniel Elmer, mentioned in the assessment-roll of twenty years later. The name Alson is the Allison of later times, several families of whom were in the west part of Warwick.

Capt. John Wisner, the enrolling officer, lived at Mount Eve. Henry Wisner was about three miles from Warwick village, towards Sugar Loaf. Adam Wisner was doubtless a relative.

George Carr was a settler at Amity. Matthew Howell was in the southern part of what is now Goshen.

Peter Clous (Clowes) was a delegate to the first Provincial Convention, April 20, 1775. Just why his name appears in this list for the south part of Warwick is not clear, as he is supposed to have lived north of Goshen village.

To further show the settlement of Warwick we have the aid of the assessment-roll of Goshen for 1775 (mentioned in several other towns), the last one made out under the authority of the crown. There were then ten assessment districts. Among these, District No. 2 included a section of the present town of Warwick, extending north and south from below Florida at some point to Amity, taking in also the Bellvale neighborhood and the settlements in the vicinity of what is now New Milford and the village of Warwick. This statement does not define the exact boundaries. The loss of the early precinct records of Goshen prevents giving any official outline of the district; but the description locates it with considerable degree of accuracy. Mr. Nathaniel Vail, of Goshen, has given this list special study, and the location of District No. 2, as well as that of the others, is upon his authority; but it is also sustained by a comparison of names in old papers and in many other ways. The assessor was John Hathorn. In all this region the names of signers to the Revolutionary Articles of Association are also preserved, as shown elsewhere, but the assessment-roll is much more complete. Every family, without exception, must be mentioned, and from the small amount of property, in many cases single men with only personal property of little value must have also been enrolled. This last suggestion may account for the fact that the list shows a greater population in 1775 than might at first thought appear possible.*

The paper is indorsed :

"Within is a list of my assessment of all the inhabitants within my district.

"Given under my hand in the month of September in the year 1775.

"JOHN HATHORN."

The town of Warwick appears to include another of the assessment districts of Goshen Precinct, viz.: District No. 5, John Wood, assessor. It is described by Mr. Nathaniel Vail, of Goshen, sustained by other authority, as comprising the territory in the vicinity of Wickham's Pond, including Bellvale Valley. The boundaries between this and the other Warwick district are not very clear from this testimony, as Bellvale is thus mentioned in each; but the Bellvale neighborhood was of considerable extent, and may have been divided by the line of the assessment districts. As already mentioned, there is a larger list of names for 1775 than might be thought correct for that early date, more than a century ago. But the population of Orange County was of considerable numbers previous to the Revolution, and this assessment-roll is of unquestioned authority :

"The above is a true list of the assessment of my District, taken this month of September, 1775.

EBENEZER OWEN."

District No. 9 comprised evidently the southern portion of the present town of Goshen, the Florida neighborhood of Warwick, and southward to the vicinity of Mount Eve, where, as already shown, another district commenced. This district included an extensive portion of the valuable Drowned Lands, rich, fertile, and attractive to the early settlers. According to this list seventy or more families were then living in this section. John McCamly was the assessor.

"The above is a true list of the assessment of my district taken in the month of September, 1775.

JOHN MCCAMLY."

We add a few notes upon several of the names mentioned in these rolls, but the subject grows so voluminous that we are obliged to abbreviate it for this volume. By giving the lists in full we furnish to all the descendants a clue by which they can trace their ancestors' families and their location to any extent desired.

In 1746, Daniel Burt, the father of Hon. James Burt, came from Connecticut and located upon the farm owned in later years by Thomas and Edward L. Welling. There he remained in the depths of the forest for four years, when his relatives came from Connecticut, and after a long and tedious search found him buried in the wild woods. They assured him he could never get along in such a new country, and persuaded him to return with them, which he did. He sold out to Thomas Welling, the grandfather of Thomas and Edward L. Welling, and moved back to Connecticut. There he was not satisfied to remain, returned in 1760, and made an effort to re-purchase his old farm of Mr. Welling; but in consequence of a disagreement about the price of a horse, which was to be a part of the consideration, the bargain fell through, and Burt purchased at Bellvale, on Long-House Creek. This was a valuable property, as it contained a fine water-power, upon which he erected a flour- and saw-mill. The mill was overshot, there being 30 feet fall in 30 rods. Extensive milling and other mechanical works have continued to be conducted there. This location Daniel Burt exchanged for a farm near the village of Warwick, the one now owned by his grandson, James Burt.

On the Welling farm there was an Indian settlement called Miscotucky. They had an orchard of apple-trees, some of which were standing in a meadow down to a comparatively modern period.

Hon. James Burt was born at Bellvale, Oct. 25, 1760, the youngest of ten children. The various and important offices held by him from time to time, through the course of a long life, are evidence of the high esteem in which he was held by his intelligent fellow-citizens. He was a member of the Assembly several years, a member of the State Senate for twelve, and three times an elector of President and Vice-President.*

During the Revolutionary war Mr. Burt, though young at its commencement, was a very active Whig, and vigilant in defending his neighborhood against the secret and open attacks of the Tories. We relate one instance among many others. A man by the name of Johnston, who had been an English sea-captain, lived in a stone house in the village of Warwick. The house then belonged to Mr. William Wisner. Johnston was a silversmith and followed that business at the time. Supposing him in possession of money and other valuable property, his house was attacked one rainy night by eleven Tories, some of whom belonged in that vicinity. Two sisters and two negro boys were living with him at the time. The robbers broke into the house, and Johnston, while defending himself most manfully, received a cut in the shoulder from a sword, which wholly disabled him. One of the negro boys and a Mr. Coe had been out eeling that night, and just at this time were returning home. As they approached the house, the Tories saw them, and thinking the settlers were coming upon them, decamped, taking with them all the valuables of the house, and among them a very valuable sword. At this time young Burt was a lieutenant in a military company commanded by Capt. Minthorn, and his brother, Daniel Burt, Jr., came over from the village to inform him of the affair, and to direct him to warn out his company forthwith to go in pursuit of the robbers. It was dark, and rained in torrents. He started to go as far as Bellvale, and while going through the woods on the side of the hill in front of his house he heard three distinct snapping of guns.

He drew up his musket to fire, though he saw no one; but instantly thinking if he did he might be seen by the flash of his own gun and be shot down by the robbers, refrained and passed on. Having warned out his neighbors Joshua Carpenter, Nathaniel Ketcham, Daniel Jayne, Philip, Samuel, and Azariah Ketcham, Benjamin Whitney, and a few others, they started in pursuit. In the morning they found some Continental troops down in the mountains, who went with them. The company took down one side of the mountain and the soldiers the other, who came suddenly upon the robbers while together eating in the woods, fired upon them and killed five of the eleven. Here they found many of the stolen articles and Johnston's sword. The six fled, but one of them was shot through the leg, taken, and put in jail. The five continued to flee down towards New Jersey, hotly pursued by all, who turned out to help capture the Tory robbers. Three of the five were killed during the chase, and two only of the eleven thus far escaped. The two found their way to Hackensack, and there they stole a pair of horses, were pursued again, and one was shot and killed, the other wounded.

While young Burt was in pursuit of the robbers he told his company that on the night he started to warn them out he heard three distinct snaps of guns in the woods near his house, but they laughed at him and said that he was afraid and imagined that the robbers were about to shoot him, and made themselves quite merry at his expense. When they returned, it was thought advisable to search the woods in question, when, to the great satisfaction of Sergt. Burt, they found at the place described by him that the robbers had been there sitting on a log, and left there many small articles which they had stolen from Johnston, and with which they did not wish to be encumbered. The guns of the robbers did not go off in consequence of the priming having been dampened by the rain, as was supposed.

During the war Burt served under Col. Hathorn, who commanded at the battle of Minisink, and was stationed at Fishkill when the war closed. On returning home the troops had to cross the river in an old Continental scow. It was crowded with horses, troopers, and soldiers. Before they got half over, she leaked so fast that they had to bail her out with their hats to keep her from sinking. They had but one oar, and the water being quite rough, they made out to get her ashore at New Windsor.

Extract from family record of Daniel Burt, giving his children: Phebe, born July 15, 1738, married Daniel Lobdell; Daniel, born Oct. 20, 1740, married Martha Bradner; Martha, born April 3, 1743, married Daniel Whitney; Hannah, born May 24, 1745, married James Benjamin; Ruth, born July 3, 1747, married Edy Newbury; Lydia, born May 1, 1750, married Daniel Sayer; Sarah, born Dec. 15, 1752, married Joshua Carpenter; Esther, born May 17, 1755, married Benjamin Coleman; Ann, born Jan.

* He voted for Jefferson, Madison, and Harrison.

27, 1758, married Gideon Scott; James, born Oct. 25, 1760, married Abigail Coe.

Mrs. Daniel Burt died Jan. 10, 1810, aged ninety-four years. At her death she had several hundred descendants.

The farm owned by Daniel Finch, and afterwards by Capt. John Jayne, situate on Long Ridge, on the road from Florida to Warwick, on the western part of the Van Horne tract, was located before 1762, and that road was then a public highway. Francis Armstrong and Joseph Bailey resided in that vicinity.

When Daniel Burt returned to the county in 1760, Daniel Whitney came with him, married his sister and located.* An individual by the name of David Benjamin was located upon the side of the mountain on the land afterwards owned by James Burt.

Benjamin Burt, a brother of Daniel, came into the town about that time, and settled on the farm afterwards owned by Belden Burt.

John Vance was early in the town, and lived near Judge Wheeler, on the farm subsequently owned by John Pelton.

Mr. David McCamley, the ancestor of those of that name, settled about 1760, and built the mill James Wheeler owned in later years.

Philip Ketcham located about half-way between Warwick and Bellvale.

Jonathan Knapp settled on the farm owned in modern times by the McGee family.

John and William Blain purchased the lands possessed in later years by Samuel Blain, Robert and Henry Pelton.

Thomas DeKay was an early settler, and Maj. J. Wheeler and Joel Wood afterwards occupied the same property, as already noted.

Charles Beardsley lived in the village of Warwick, and owned the lands now covered by the village.

The first settlers in the present village of Warwick were Daniel Burt, Jr., in 1765, Francis Baird, and William Wisner, who lived where the Messrs. Wellington afterwards kept a public inn.

The family of Jeffrey Wisner, Esq., were early settlers in this and in the town of Wallkill. They were connected by marriage with the old family of Phillips, and contributed their part in various ways to clear up the country and sustain her during the war of the Revolution. The members of this family were strong-minded, sensible, and enterprising, and well calculated to settle a new country and infuse strength and energy into its early institutions.

The Jeffrey Wisner place is very elevated on the east side and almost upon the crown of a long ridge which runs north and south, and overlooks all the eastern part of the town. The village of Warwick, with its rolling glades clad in deepest verdure, and the Wawayanda gracefully sweeping her course to the south, lie directly at its feet. In the distance are seen the Warwick Mountains, encircling the south-eastern portion of the town, and, as it were, barring out all approach to New Jersey; and to diversify the beautiful prospect, Sugar-Loaf Mountain at the north lifts up her forest-crowned head and almost shakes her verdant locks. The spot looks as if it had been tenanted for ages, and has the calm and stately appearance of dignity and wealth.

William Armstrong was an early settler. The family is Scotch, though it came here, like many of the early settlers, from Ireland, he being one of the company of Clinton immigrants in 1729, though then a minor. He had several children, among whom were Robert, William, John, Archibald, Elizabeth Borland, and Polly Jackson. He settled very early in this town, so that his children were principally grown up before the Revolution. The family tradition is that his wife was a descendant of Bishop Lattimer.

Robert Armstrong, his son, was born 1754, and married Rachel Smith, born 1768. Their children were Julia, born Aug. 1, 1788, and married John Roe; Jasper, born April 20, 1790, and married Sarah Coe; Robert G., born July 18, 1793, and married Sarah A. L. Lewis; George W., born March 7, 1796, and married Fanny Wheeler; Maria, born Sept. 18, 1798, not married; Harriet, born July 12, 1801, and married John Smith and Calvin Sawyer; John C., born April 15, 1803, never married; Rachel, born July 15, 1805, and married Poladore Seward; and Sally S., who married Ira Brown. His biography is contained in the following notice of his death published at the time. It will be seen that he was one of the first members of Assembly from old Orange County after the Revolution, and we have been told that he did not know that he was running for office or was even a candidate till he went to the polls. People are not so ignorant of their worth and pretensions at this day. At the battle of Minisink he acted as aid to Gen. Hathorn, who commanded.

"At his residence, Florida, Orange County, State of New York, on Friday, May 30, 1834, Robert Armstrong, Esq., in the eighty-first year of his age. He was a man honored and respected as extensively as he was known; and extensively known as a public man from the age of about twenty-nine years. He was intimately connected with the Revolutionary struggle as a member of the Committee of Vigilance for the district in which he lived, and as taking an active part in some of its most difficult and trying scenes. In the days of George Clinton he held a seat as the youngest member in the Legislature of the State, and from that day until age rendered him desirous of retiring from public business he was incessantly called upon to sustain public trusts in different offices, both of election and appointment: as justice of the peace, county clerk and treasurer, member of the Assembly, judge of the Court of Common Pleas, and many others; in all he secured the confidence of all; and was one of those rare men who are never even suspected of selfish or corrupt designs. For fifty-seven years he was a member of the Presbyterian Church of Florida, and for fifty-three years a ruling elder in the same church. Within this period of more than half a century many times of trial came upon that church; in all of which, from first to last, he stood the firm and unbending defender of the truth, and was the acknowledged and happy instrument often of saving that portion of Zion from distraction and apparent ruin."

Of the Wood family the following facts are given from an obituary notice of Mr. Jesse C. Wood, who died at Parkville, L. I., aged eighty-nine years:

"Israel Wood, only son of Israel Wood, Earl of Warwick, in England, came to New York in company with the Duke of York. He was at that time a single man, and purchased a tract of land six miles square of a man who had previously received a grant from the King of Holland, in the township of Bookhaven, on Long Island. He divided it into farms and put tenants upon them, and married and settled upon it himself. He had three sons, the first named Israel, the second Cornelius, and the other is not known. Israel Wood, his eldest son, married a lady by the name of Oldfield, in Kings County, who received as a dowry from her father a large tract of land in Flatbush. He built a house upon this land, which was the first house built upon Brooklyn Heights. He also built a tide-mill for grinding grain on what is now called Red Hook, taking its name from the mill. He had four sons,—Abner, Eliphalet, George, and Daniel,—and one daughter, named Mary. He then purchased the tract of country now known as the Drowned Lands in Orange County, and another large tract containing what is now known as the Wickham Pond. He also purchased a third tract, on which he settled with his four sons, and built a mill but a few rods above Stone Bridge, supposed to be the first mill built in this vicinity. Abner settled on the farm now owned by Charles A. Van Duzer; Eliphalet, where James Ackerman resides; George, on the place occupied by Col. Wm. W. Houston; Daniel, the farm now occupied by his grandson, George W. Wood; and the daughter Mary, on the farm now occupied by Sarah and Francis Benedict. Daniel Wood, father of the deceased, had eight sons and one daughter. They were Israel, Daniel, John, David, Joel, William, James, Jesse C., and Betsy. The daughter died young. All but two of the sons passed eighty years; Joel eighty-eight and Jesse eighty-nine, at the time of their death. Jesse C. Wood, the deceased, the last one of the family, at first resided on the Martin Brooks place, near Stone Bridge, then in New York, then in Montgomery County. He returned to New York, visited England and Ireland, held several places of trust with honor. At the time of his death he was living at Parkville, L. I. He left but one child, a daughter, Mary E. Wood, the others having died young."

James Benedict, Sr., was the early Baptist minister. He had three sons,—James, William, Joseph. The sons of James, Jr., were James, William, and Israel. A son of William, William L. Benedict, resides now upon the old Mabie homestead, near Warwick village. William of the first family had one son, Henry, who died early, and Joseph had one son, James; one or more sons of the latter now reside in town.

Cornelius Demerest came to Warwick in 1774, and settled on the ridge near the present residence of James C. Sly. Buildings gone. His sons were David C., Samuel, Frederick, and Cornelius C. A son of the latter is Cornelius H., president of the National Bank. There was one daughter in the original family, who became Mrs. Greenwood, of Cincinnati.

Rev. Charles Cummins was born in Strasburg, Pa., July 15, 1776; he graduated at Dickinson College in 1800; he studied theology, and was licensed in 1803. His first pastorate was at Chestnut Level, Pa. In 1806 he was settled at Florida; there he preached forty-three years, his labors terminating there in 1849. In 1852 he removed to Muscatine, Iowa, where he died January, 1863. His children were Thomas A. Cummins and James S. L. Cummins, of New York City; Mrs. James S. Horton, of Iowa; Rev. John L. Cummins, of Keokuk, Iowa; Col. F. M. Cummins, of Goshen; and Mrs. Jacob Butler, of Iowa. These were the children of his second marriage. By a previous marriage he had one son, John P., who died when twelve years old in consequence of a fall from a tree.

Dr. Elmer's homestead was the property now occupied by Nathaniel E. Conkling, of Florida. John Kennedy kept tavern about 1790 at Florida, in a house still standing: a long low building, now the Aspell property. Anthony Finn's homestead was where James Foley now lives, below Warwick village. Richard Johnson lived on the ridge. Mr. Cornelius mentions having seen among the papers of Mr. Johnson a memorandum of an army officer of money paid Mr. Johnson for pasturing horses during the Revolutionary war. John Wheeler's homestead was the present place of Ezra Sanford. The Pattersons lived near New Milford. George Vance's place was the one now owned by James Wisner. John Sutton lived near the present place of Richard Wisner. Thomas Welling lived where his descendant, Thomas Welling, now lives. The property has been owned steadily by a Thomas Welling.

The Newberry homestead was south of Bellvale and east of Wickham Pond.

For many of these items we are indebted to Cornelius H. Demerest, president of the National Bank, and to James Burt, Esq. The latter is the son of Hon. James Burt of Revolutionary memory and long public service, mentioned above, and who died in 1852. The present James Burt was born March 9, 1798, upon the old homestead, and has spent his life there. He has been honored with many important trusts by his fellow-citizens, and has been president of the Bank of Chester for twenty-six years. During that long period he has been present at every monthly meeting of the directors, and at the bank every Saturday with only one or two exceptions. The bank was organized in 1845. Its first president, Edward L. Welling, and its second, James Wheeler, were Warwick men, as well as the third, Mr. Burt.

The other children of Hon. James Burt were Mrs. Nathaniel Jones, Mrs. Elias B. Coe, Benjamin Burt, of Bellvale, ancestor of Grinnell Burt, Stephen A. Burt, also of Bellvale, and Thomas M. Burt, of Kinderhook. None of these are now living.

THE SEWARD FAMILY.

While the town of New Windsor boasts the birth-place of George and DeWitt Clinton, and Wallkill that of Commodore Silas Horton Stringham, Warwick holds in its embrace the cradling-bed of one whose life-record has not been less marked on the pages of his country's history,—the late Hon. William Henry Seward. Without attempting a full genealogical record of Governor Seward's family, we may remark that he was the great-grandson of Obadiah Seward, an immigrant from Wales, who settled on Larrington River, in Somerset Co., N. J., in the early part of the last century. John, son of Obadiah, was born here May 22, 1730; married Mary Swezy, March 22, 1751, and settled in Hardyston prior to 1767, at which time his name first appears as a member of the board of freeholders of that township, and where he subsequently attained the rank of colonel of the Second Sussex Regiment of Militia, which was frequently on duty on the frontiers during the Revolution. He died in 1799, leaving ten children, of whom SAMUEL SWEZY SEWARD—locally known as Dr. Seward—was born in Hardyston, Sussex Co., Dec. 5, 1768. He married Mary Jennings, of Goshen, Orange Co., in 1795, and after living for a time in Vernon removed thence to Florida, where he combined a large mercantile business with an extensive range of professional practice for about twenty years. He also served as a member of the Assembly in 1804; in 1815 as one of the judges of the county court, and subsequently as first judge of that court, a position which he held for seventeen years. He was noted for his wealth and for his liberality; retired from medical practice and from mercantile life; loaned money to his neighbors and others, and maintained an unsullied reputation. In 1846 he established the Samuel S. Seward Institute at Florida, to which he donated the grounds, erected the buildings, and added an endowment of $20,000. He died in 1849, leaving an estate of about $350,000, of which his son, William H. Seward, and friend, George W. Grier, of Goshen, were the executors. His wife, Mary Jennings, was of Irish parentage. She was a woman of clear and vigorous understanding, and a model of hospitality, charity, and self-forgetfulness. She died in 1843. His children were: 1. Benjamin J.; 2. Edwin P.; 3. William H.; 4. George W.; and (5) a daughter, who married Dr. Canfield, of Florida. The children of (1) Benjamin J. were Rev. Augustus Seward, Clarence A. Seward, and one who died in early life. The children of Edwin P. (better known by his middle name (Poladore) were Mrs. Dr. Jayne, Mrs. C. H. Schaiff, William E., Theodore W., Jasper A., and Frederick W.

WILLIAM HENRY SEWARD, the third son of Dr. Samuel Seward, was born in Florida, May 16, 1801. The house in which his parents then resided is still standing. After attending the district school in his neighborhood he was sent, at the age of nine years, to Farmers' Hall Academy, at Goshen. While here he was a member of the "Classical Society" of Goshen, and of the "Goshen Club," in both of which declamations, debates, and compositions formed the leading features. At fifteen years of age he entered Union College at Schenectady, from which he withdrew when three years older, and passed six months as a teacher at the South. From this diversion he returned to Union College in 1820, and, after taking his degree, entered the office of John Anthon, Esq., of New York, as a student at law. Completing his legal preparation with John Duer and Ogden Hoffman, in Goshen, he was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court at Utica in 1822, and in January, 1823, took up his residence in Auburn, and formed a connection in business with the Hon. Elijah Miller, a distinguished member of the legal profession, and at that time first judge of Cayuga County. In 1824 he married Frances Adeline, Judge Miller's youngest daughter, and settled down to the duties of life in the office, and practically as the successor of his father-in-law. His tastes and habits of thought, however, soon led him into politics, and we find him, in 1828, presiding at a convention having for its purpose the election of John Quincy Adams as President for a second term; and the year 1830 brought him forward as a prominent leader in the anti-Masonic movement. From that time until his death Mr. Seward's history was so intimately blended with the politics of the State and nation that one can scarcely be separated from the other, nor to either can justice be done in the limits of a sketch of this character. The reader is therefore referred to his "Life and Works." It may be remarked, however, that the leading points in his career were, first, his election by the people as Governor of New York; second, his election by the Legislature to a seat in the United States Senate; and, third, his appointment by President Lincoln to the post of Secretary of State. His services in these posts absorbed twenty-five years of his life, during which he exercised a direct influence over the movement of great events. In regard to his qualities as a statesman there are of course divergent opinions, but that he was a central figure in politics, and a man whose integrity was unquestioned, will be universally conceded. He died at Auburn, Oct. 10, 1872, in the seventy-second year of his age. His children were Frederick A., who served as Assistant Secretary of State under his father; Maj. Augustus, of the United States Army (now deceased); William H., of Auburn; and one daughter, who died unmarried.

EARLY RESIDENTS OF WARWICK VILLAGE.

An excellent description of Warwick village and the surrounding country, as they were occupied in 1805, is taken from the article already mentioned, written by Henry Pelton about the year 1872.

We begin with the village of Warwick, which consisted of only a few houses on the Main Street, and these were not only few but far between. The Cassidy family lived in a stone house near the bridge, where the brick store now stands. Then there was no other building until we come to where the Methodist church now stands; there stood a curry-shop owned by Samuel Smith, and about opposite was his dwelling, an old house then, where Pitts has a meat-market at the present time. Next was a new house built by Benjamin Barney, where the Benedict ladies now live. Next was Nathan Reed, who came in 1804 from Darien, Conn. This was the stone house built by Francis Baird. Next was a store kept by Edmund Raymond. Next was a small house standing where John Cowdrey now lives. On the opposite side, where Mrs. Pierson lives, was Lewis Randolph, who kept a tavern. Next was the house where June's now stands, then occupied by Thomas Geraghty as a store and tavern. Next was Nathaniel Ketchum, a carpenter. Next was John Mabee, a blacksmith. Next was the Rev. Lebeus Lathrop, in the old stone house lately demolished by Mr. Bradner. Next was William Benedict, the father of William L. Benedict. Next was James Benedict, Esq. Next was Capt. James Benedict, son of the preceding, where John Blain now lives. Next were the two Ketchum brothers, Samuel and Philip. They had a little mill and a pond from the spring on the west side of the road. The next house was owned by Daniel Wood. The next was Crines Bertholf. Next was Joseph Barrows, in the stone house, and on the south, where Durland lives, was the residence of Gen. Wisner. Further on towards Sugar-Loaf were the Feagles families. Josiah lived back from the road, west. John lived at the present place of Ezra Holbert, and down at the head of the pond was James D. Clark.

We will now come back and take the road from June's Hotel towards Bellvale. The first place was that of Capt. Garret Post. The next was Richard Welling, Sr., near where Jacob Gaul now lives.

James Burt, Esq., was about forty rods east.

Now we go back and take the road around Chuck's Hill. John Wood lived nearly opposite the place where he afterwards died. West of him lived Richard Welling, Jr., son of John Welling. Next around the corner John Welling lived, who carried on a still. Not far from there, on the south or east side of the street, lived Aunt Milly Everett, as she was called. There were no more houses until we come to that of John Magie. Further on, around the hill, was Kinner's house. John Palmer came the following spring. Next, on the opposite side, was Blauvelt, a son-in-law of House, the dwelling now being demolished. Next was John Vandervoort. Next, on the corner of the Bellvale road, lived Mr. Shaler, a weaver.

Then, going towards Bellvale, was Daniel Sayer, where his son Benjamin now lives. On the opposite side were the two brothers Forshee, where John L. Sayer and James Benedict now live. Crines Bertholf came the next spring, and one of the brothers Forshee left. Next was Joel Wheeler, and further on came some tenant-houses belonging to the latter. Then over the hill, on the corner, where James C. Houston lives, was John Robinson, who carried on a blacksmith-shop for many years. Then, as we turned north, there lived Capt. William Minthorn, son of Capt. John Minthorn of Revolutionary memory.

Further north was Nathaniel Minthorn. Then there were the heirs of Calvin Bradner, deceased, and also the heirs of William Wisner. Next was Andrew Houston, father of Col. Wisner Houston. Now we come to the main road leading from Warwick to Sugar-Loaf, etc., where stood the old stone school-house near Mr. Belcher's.

Returning now to the village, we will begin at the lower end, and the first permanent resident was Abraham Gregory, a cooper from Connecticut. Next, going west on the north side of the road, where George Hyatt now lives, were Zachariah Hoyt and his son, a bachelor, who carried on the pottery business. Then there was a man by the name of Lafarge, where Andrew Geraghty now lives. Beyond was Cornelius Demerest, grandfather of David D. and Cornelius H. Demerest, where Samuel Pelton now lives. Next was Capt. George Vance and his son-in-law, Thomas Sproull. Further on, a few rods from where the road intersects that which leads from Florida by way of the Armstrong neighborhood, there stood a stone school-house, opposite where the present school-house stands, and Gilbert Wheeler lived on the present William Green place; he traded the same season with his brother John for the farm that James B. Wheeler now owns.

Now we come to the bridge where Isaac Halstead, the miller, lived, in front of where William Sanford has since built. Beyond was John Wheeler, Esq., with several buildings around him, including grist-mill, saw-mill, and fulling-mill; also he carried on the business of tanning and currying. Farther down the stream lived William C. Baird, who also owned a mill.

Next below was Samuel Denton, Sr. Then, down the hill, at the bridge there were a grist-mill, saw-mill, and a fulling-mill, owned by Mr. Shoemaker. Then there was no other building until you come to where the north-and-south roads leading from Warwick to New Milford intersect each other, and at that point was the residence of David C. Demerest. In what is New Milford there were at that time two or three dwellings, among which was that of Cornelius Lazear, Sr., an estimable man, and one of the founders of the Methodist Church in that village.

And now, to return, we will take the south road leading towards the village of Warwick, and the first residence we find was that of Levi Ellis. Going east, the next was William Johnson, who sold out the same season to David Fancher, of Darien, Conn. Further east, where the old saw-mill of Edward Davis now stands, was the forge for making iron owned by Gen. Hathorn. There was a log house standing near by for the workmen to live in, and in front of this, by the road, lived an aged couple by the name of Wiggins.

On the hill south from where Darius Fancher now lives was Thomas Hathorn. Next was William Holland, a weaver. Further on east we come to a cross-road leading to Wheelers' mill, on which lived Capt. Thomas DeKay. To follow along the main road, we find Nathaniel Blain living where Henry Pelton now resides. Further along was Robert Pelton, who came from Darien the same year. Here is that famous spring which has been known by tradition since the first settlement of this part of Warwick as Curtis Fountain, by usage shortened into "Curtafontaine," which gives name to the brook issuing from it. To go on further east there was John Blain, commonly known as "Uncle Johnny." Beyond were the heirs of William Blain, deceased; further on there was Belden Burt, Sr., and the next was Gen. John Hathorn. North of him, on the hill, was David Wiley, where James Alcock now resides, and still further north, across the fields (for there was no road at that time to the house that stood not far from the creek), lived John Pelton, who had come from Darien, Conn., that spring.

Again we start from Hathorn's east, finding Jeremiah Morehouse, and next to him Thomas Welling, the second of the name. There was no other building from there to the bridge except the old school-house that stood on the site of the one lately demolished. The first dwelling was where James R. Christie and his mother now live, then owned and occupied by Dr. Elisha DuBois. Nearly opposite the present Baptist parsonage was the residence of Dr. Benjamin S. Hoyt, a son of Zachariah Hoyt mentioned above; they were from Danbury, Conn. Next were John M. Foght and his son-in-law, Daniel Burt, who carried on a distillery. Next was Ananias Rogers, where the Bradner brothers own. He sold out the same year to Sylvanus Fancher, from Connecticut. On the road leading west from Rogers there lived Andrew Ackerman and Joseph Benedict. To start again from Rogers', we find Capt. Garret Ackerman where George W. Sanford now lives. Next was Conrad Sly, living on the present place of his grandson, Ross Sly. Then if we take the eastward road that leads to Florida we find Daniel Brown living where Charles Van Duzer now lives, and on the cross-road now leading over to where the late Col. Houston lived. There was a man by the name of Buskirk where James Ackerman lately lived.

Now if we go back and take the west road to Florida, the first house belonged to the heirs of Abraham Dolsen, deceased. And now we will turn west towards the Armstrong settlement, and in the first house we find Wm. Johnson, a little way from the road. Next was the place of Isaac Dolsen, who sold out the same year to Jacob Howe, from Darien, Conn. Then there was Richard Johnson, and further on Samuel Johnson, where John Vandevort now lives. Then over the hill, farther west, was Wm. Armstrong, where the late Rensselaer J. Armstrong died.

Now we turn south, and the first was John Sutton, Sr., then Jeffrey Wisner, and next to him Micah Mills, where the late Gabriel Wisner lived. The road from Florida to Edenville was not laid out at that time, and consequently these inhabitants were put to a great inconvenience in getting to the village. Going on, we find a man by the name of George Bramer living as a tenant where James B. Wheeler now owns. This brings us to the main road leading from Warwick north of the creek to New Milford, which we have already traced.

A trial for murder took place in Warwick in 1818, which attracted so much public attention that it can hardly be omitted in a notice of the town. Richard Jennings, of the town of Goshen, was missing from his house on the 21st of February, 1818, and on the 28th was found on his farm dead. He appeared to have been shot, and then dreadfully beaten with the musket. It seemed that he had some litigation with his neighbor, David Conkling, who formed a conspiracy, and employed a negro, Jack Hodges, for a reward of $500, to take the life of Jennings. After Jack perpetrated the act he absconded, but was taken, and, with Conkling, Teed, and Dunning, committed to prison. They were tried, condemned, and executed, the latter event occurring at Goshen on the 16th April, 1819.

The following were early taverns, as shown by the record of excise moneys: In 1790 two pounds each were received as excise money from Cornelius Lazear; this was undoubtedly at what is now New Milford; Wm. Holley, probably in Sugar-Loaf neighborhood; Isaac Thompson; John Kennedy, his tavern was at Florida; John Smith (three pounds), he kept a hotel at Warwick village, the present Pierson place; Israel Horton; Thomas Goldsmith; Ezra Sanford lived on the mountain, he was the father of the present Ezra Sanford; Nathan Wheeler; John Hathorn, his tavern was on the well-known Hathorn place, east of the Belden Burt farm. It will not be inferred, however, that Gen. Hathorn, the owner, pursued hotel-keeping for a livelihood.

Other names appear in 1791: Peter Van Houten, probably at Edenville; Stephen Bertholf, kept tavern in the Greenwood Lake valley; Morris Thompson.

In 1792 new names appear, as those of Stephen Rogers, he kept in the old Kennedy tavern at Florida; Thomas McWhorter, this was undoubtedly near Sugar-Loaf; Daniel Burt, this was the old house now standing opposite the place of John L. Servin, the present Wawayanda House; Jacobus Post, this was at Edenville, formerly known as Postville; Gilbert Wheeler, this was probably near the present homestead of Ezra Sanford; William Helms, the Helms family have been in the vicinity of Sugar-Loaf for many years. This was probably on the borders of Monroe.

In 1793, John Baird, this was the stone house now occupied by W. E. Sayer; Joseph Houston, this was between Amity and Edenville; Abram Lazear, he was probably the successor of Cornelius Lazear at New Milford; Timothy Dunning; John Cassidy, this was on the ground of the present Van Duzer building.

In 1794, Abram Dolsen. He lived on the ridge where Capt. J. D. Miller now lives.

An early settler of Bellvale was Jonathan Wilkison, Sr., from Rahway, N. J. His children were Sally, who died young; Edward, who died young; Samuel, who died at sea of yellow fever; Mrs. Robert Osborn, of Wallkill; Mrs. John Winfield, Wisconsin; Mrs. Peter Redner, Peekskill; Richard; Jonathan, who died Feb. 9, 1872, aged eighty-nine (see Wallkill); and Mrs. John Douglass, afterwards Mrs. Buck, of Western New York. Jonathan, Jr., settled in Wallkill. His homestead was the present James Purdy farm, near Mount Johnson. A son of Jonathan, Jr., Hiram S. Wilkison, resides at Circleville.

Early physicians were as follows: Doctor Elmer is mentioned in one of the assessment-rolls given, and his residence has been given above. He was in practice during the Revolutionary war. (See General History.) At Warwick village Dr. DuBois was a physician of prominence for twenty or thirty years in the early part of this century. He lived where the Widow Christie now lives. Contemporary with Dr. DuBois, but dying earlier than he, was Dr. Hoyt, who lived where the present parsonage of the Old-School Baptist Church stands. During a portion of the same period Dr. James Heron was in practice for several years at Warwick village. He was quite distinguished in his profession, and as a member of the County Medical Society. He was a writer of medical papers, and some of his treatises are said to be of valuable authority at the present time. Dr. Seward, of Florida, was in practice for some years.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

In its first civil organization the town was a part of the old precinct of Goshen. What now constitutes Warwick remained as a part of Goshen Precinct down to the Revolution, and subsequently until the passage of the general act of March 7, 1788. The old precinct of Goshen had been divided into Cornwall and Goshen in 1764, but Warwick was still included in Goshen. Under the act of 1788 it became a town, and the first town-meeting was held on the first Tuesday of April, 1789, of which the following record was made:

"At a meeting of the inhabitants of the town of Warwick, held in the town of Warwick this first Tuesday in April, 1789, the following persons were elected and chosen for the ensuing year:

"John Smith, town clerk; John Wheeler, Esq., supervisor; Capt. James Post, Western District, Maj. Peter Bartholf, Middle District, Capt. Henry Bartholf, Eastern District, assessors; Maj. Jacobus Post, Western District, Nathaniel Minthorn, Middle District, John Wood, Eastern District, commissioners of roads; Zebulon Wheeler, James Benedict, overseers of the poor; David McCamly, Western District, James Benedict, Middle District, David Miller, Eastern District, collectors; John Blain, Jr., David Miller, Elias Taylor, David Fulton, constables.

"Road-Masters: John Kanaday, Timothy Clark, John Benedict, Capt. George Vance, Wm. Armstrong, Esq., Anthony Finn, Capt. Jackson, Maj. Jacobus Post, Joseph Wilson, Thomas Blain, Abraham Lazair, John Smith, Garret Post, Philip Burroughs, Calvin Bradner, Capt. Bertholf, James Hannah, John Armstrong, James Miller, David Miller, Timothy Beers, Jacob Gable, Henry Townsend, Abel Noble, Philip Ketchum, Moses Carpenter, David Lobdell, Caleb Smith, Caleb Taylor, Robert Ludlow, Jacobus Chase, David Nanny, Ezra Sanford, Israel Owens, Abraham Dolsen, Richard Johnson, John Sutton, Nathaniel Bailey.

"Arch. Armstrong and Esq. Shepherd, West District, Maj. P. Bartholf and James Benedict, Middle District, James Miller and Philip Burroughs, East District, fence-viewers.

"Each road-master to be pound-master; the pound to be put up at the expense of the district.

"Resolved, That there is £100 to be raised for the benefit of the poor, and £20 for contingent expenses."

GENERAL NOTES FROM THE RECORDS.

At the second town-meeting, the first Tuesday of April, 1790, Colvil Shepard, John Kennedy, Richard Welling, and Israel Holton were appointed pound-masters, and it was voted to erect pounds "as near to the houses of said pound-masters as possible for the convenience of water."

The report of the overseers of the poor for the year 1789 shows money paid to the following persons for the care of the poor: Anthony Fisher, Wm. McClure, Elizabeth Wright, George Luckey, Elias Taylor, John Shultz, "for the funeral expenses of Josiah Wiggins;" Cornelius Jones, John Sanford, Wm. Gannon.

Overseer Wheeler's services five and one-half days, one pound thirteen shillings.

As an item of the times when slavery existed in the State of New York we find the following certificate:

"This certifies that we, James Benedict and Daniel Jessup, overseers of the poor of the town of Warwick, in the county of Orange, and State of New York, by the consent of Nathaniel Roe and John Wheeler, two of the justices of the peace of the said county and State aforesaid, on application to us made by Margaret Vance, of the said town of Warwick, respecting her intention of manumitting a certain female slave, named Hap, twenty-nine years of age last July, which female slave the said Margaret Vance purchased of John Wheeler and James Benedict, executors of the last will and testament of Samuel Vance, late of the town of Warwick, deceased; pursuant to the powers and authority to us given by the law of this State in that case made and provided; and having examined the said slave Hap, she appears to be under fifty years of age and of sufficient ability to provide for herself. Given under our hands this tenth day of September, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-four.

"JAMES BENEDICT,

"DAVID JESSUP, Overseers.

"Allowed by us, NATHANIEL ROE, JOHN WHEELER, Justices. Registered 16th October, 1794."

The "Three Districts" were of considerable and distinct importance in early times. The assessors, commissioners, and collectors were chosen with reference to those local divisions. In 1797 they were arranged as follows:

Assessors: Eastern District, David Miller; Middle District, James Burt; Western District, Wm. Carr.

Commissioners: Eastern District, Garret Post; Middle District, Daniel Jessup; Western District, John Blain.

Collectors: Eastern District, Gilbert McWhorter; Middle District, Ananias Rogers; Western District, John Sutton.

The supervisors' apportionment of school moneys for 1797 is recorded in the Warwick book:

Cornwall.....	£140	13s.
Goshen.....	82	10
Warwick.....	101	9
Minisink.....	76	14

At the town-meeting of 1802, Joel Wheeler, Samuel S. Seward, and Wm. Townson were appointed delegates to meet with delegates from the different towns (in Goshen), in order to nominate suitable persons to represent this county in the Congress of the United States.

At the town-meeting of 1808 it was—

"Voted, For the erection of a pair of stocks and a good pound $30; that John M. Foght have a piece of land from Isaac Dolsen to build the pound upon, and superintend the erection of the same as soon as possible; that Isaac Dolsen be pound-master; that the stocks be set in the most public place in the town, under the direction of the above-named John M. Foght."

The beauties of old-fashioned State currency are shown by the following memorandum of the highway commissioners in 1809:

"N.B.—One ten-dollar bill has been returned to the town clerk which he received from the collector, and paid out on our order to Daniel Burt, for building the bridge near Hathorn's mills, for which some recompense ought to be made by the town."

By the subsequent action of the town the amount was refunded to the town clerk.

March 28, 1815, the highway commissioners in their report say they "have engaged to pay $150 to build a bridge across the Warwick Creek, near Francis Price, which we expect will be completed this season; and there is a bridge in Florida that will take rising of one hundred dollars, and it is our opinion that two hundred dollars ought to be raised for the support of other bridges, as many of them are very shackling."

V.—VILLAGES, NEIGHBORHOODS.

is the largest village in the town, and the locality was known by that name in 1719, as already shown. The Warwick Creek flows along its eastern suburbs, crossing the road just south of the village. The place is the centre of a rich agricultural region, and is about eleven miles from Goshen, the county-seat. There are many elegant residences in the village, and many farm-dwellings near by of ample dimensions. The Warwick Valley Railroad connects the place with Graycourt on the Erie main line. Connection has also been made with New Jersey railroads by extending the Warwick line southward, the extension being opened for business in December, 1879.

The land on which the greater portion of Warwick village is situated was bought of Benjamin Aske, about 1746, by Col. Beardsley, who evidently laid out the village. He built a grist-mill near where the main pipe of the modern water-works crosses the stream, the site of the old mill-dam being plainly visible. The village was not settled until about 1764. Two dwellings erected at that time are still standing. One erected by Daniel Burt, known as the "shingle house," and the other, called during the Revolution "the stone tavern," was erected by Francis Baird, and now occupied by W. E. Sayer. During the Revolution, while New York was in the possession of the British, communication between the Hudson and Delaware was kept up through this town.

The other officers for 1880-81, chosen and appointed, are as follows: John E. Conklin, collector; Benjamin F. Vail, water commissioner; Nathaniel R. Bradner, assessor; Peter Hoffman, police constable; Norman L. Dill, street commissioner.

A police justice was first elected at the charter election of 1872, and N. Roe Bradner was chosen to that office. Mr. Bradner was re-elected in 1874. In 1876, John Mabree was chosen police justice, but did not qualify, and John J. Beattie was appointed in his place, Sept. 4, 1876. At the election of 1877, John L. Servin was chosen, and served one term. At the election of 1879 the present officer, Joshua C. Wilson, was elected.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Excelsior Fire Engine Company, No. 1, was organized in September, 1869, with about 60 members. For various reasons it was deemed best to change the organization somewhat, as well as the name, and in 1871, November 7th, the company dissolved and immediately reorganized as the Warwick Hose Company. The list of officers from the first organization to the present time comprises the following:

- 1869.—John G. Knapp, foreman; W. H. Knapp, first assistant; Lewis Fritz, second assistant; J. H. McElroy, secretary; J. H. Van Duzer, treasurer.
- 1870.—John G. Knapp, foreman; C. B. Vandevort, first assistant; J. H. Holly, second assistant; E. A. Ryan, secretary; J. H. Van Duzer, treasurer.
- 1871.—John G. Knapp, foreman; J. H. Holly, first assistant; B. J. Rutan, second assistant; C. E. Tolhurst, secretary; J. H. Van Duzer, treasurer.
- 1872.—Peter S. Post, foreman; A. McEwen, first assistant; C. Kirk, S. Case, second assistant; S. S. Van Saun, secretary; J. H. Van Duzer, treasurer.
- 1873.—J. M. Morehouse, foreman; John McWilliams, first assistant; S. Case, second assistant; S. S. Van Saun, secretary; J. H. Van Duzer, treasurer.
- 1874.—J. M. Morehouse, foreman; J. Quackenbush, first assistant; S. Case, second assistant; Ira S. Smith, secretary; B. F. Vail, treasurer.
- 1875.—J. M. Morehouse, foreman; J. Quackenbush, first assistant; H. McElroy, second assistant; Ira S. Smith, secretary; B. F. Vail, treasurer.

Present officers, 1879-80: S. S. Van Saun, chief engineer; Norman L. Dill, foreman; J. D. Mabree, first assistant; Henry Nagle, second assistant; Seymour H. Wells, secretary; Ira S. Smith, treasurer.

The company numbers now 38 active members. It is in excellent condition, and in respect to equipment, perfection of drill, uniform, and general efficiency, has few or no superiors in villages of this size, while it compares favorably with the companies of larger places. Appropriations are made by the village trustees for the support of this company, but it has, through its own exertions, a large amount of furniture and fixtures, and a pleasant and convenient suite of rooms.

WATER-WORKS.

The village has an excellent system of water-works. The supply is from an artificial pond of sufficient elevation to be carried into the highest building in the village, and the pressure is sufficient to enable the Fire Department to operate by simply attaching the hose to the hydrants. The water-works are known by the name of the old Indian settlement, Mistucky,* as the water-supply is obtained from the head-waters of a small stream called by that name and emptying into the Warwick Creek at the village. The expense was $25,000, and it was arranged to be paid by installments of $1000 a year, making the burden light.

POST-OFFICE.

This is a very early office, dating back undoubtedly to the early mail arrangements following the Revolution and the establishment of the national government. Early in this century Dr. Hoyt was postmaster for many years. He is understood to have been succeeded by Nathaniel Jones, for a considerable time prior to 1835 or 1836, when Milton McEwen was appointed, who held the office almost consecutively to 1861. The exception was that during the Taylor-Fillmore administration. Mr. Joseph Roe was appointed, and continued in office for two or three years, when Mr. McEwen was reappointed. In August, 1861, Thomas C. McEwen received the appointment, and retained the office until July 1, 1874, when the present incumbent, W. H. Pelton, was appointed.

FLORIDA

is a pleasant village of considerable antiquity, and withal distinguished for the public men of national prominence who have originated at that place and its immediate vicinity. A former writer gives the following solution of the name: "The name is from the Latin Floridus, covered or red with flowers; Florida Ætas, the flower of age. This is a pretty name, and a spot covered with flowers is a beautiful object to look upon." It is further related on the same authority that the place was duly named before the Revolution, and at a formal meeting held for that purpose, accompanied by a public dinner or festival. Judge William Thompson, of Goshen, was a young man at the time and present, and lived down the years to furnish an account to the writer referred to. Provisions in ample quantity are said to have been brought from Newburgh, and with proper hilarity these grave ante-Revolutionary fathers christened the young village Florida, and drank to the name in flowing bumpers. We may add that the district was called Brookland at an early day. (See history of Congregational Church.)

The post-office at this place was established some years prior to 1830. Samuel S. Seward was the first postmaster, and served to 1835. The succeeding officers have been Nathaniel Jennings, 1835 to 1842; James Wood, 1842 to 1845; Wm. V. N. Armstrong, 1845 to 1850; Wm. L. Vail, 1850 to 1854; Thomas J. Cur-tice, 1854 to 1856; Richard Jennings, 1856 to 1861; A. V. Aspell, 1861 to 1862; W. H. Birchard, 1862 to 1875; J. A. Seward, 1875 to 1880. At first a mail was only received once a week.

AMITY

is a village dating back to the early settlement. It is six miles from Warwick, near the New Jersey line, in the south part of the town. Whether the name was a harmonious ending to a dispute as to what the name should be, or to some other difference, does not seem to be decided by any evidence, though it has been inferred that such was the case. It is also said that, somewhat in disgust at the harshness of the old Indian name Pochuck, which attached to that locality, they chose one softly gentle in its utterance and in its significance, and that this occurred at the time the Presbyterian Church was organized. Mr. L. C. Layton, the present postmaster, with his wife, was in the South when the war broke out. The story of his escape, his arrest, and his discharge by a favorable judge forms one of the romances of the late civil war.

PINE ISLAND

is the terminus of the Warwick Valley Branch of the Erie Railway, connecting with the main line at Goshen. The passenger-trains commenced running to this point in November, 1869. The station business is of considerable importance to the surrounding country in the way of milk shipments, general freight and passenger business. The other business may be summed up as follows: A hotel by Gabriel Carlin, pleasantly situated and having a good reputation; lumber and coal trade by S. E. Gale, who is also postmaster; a general country store, by Charles H. Woolsey, and the business of the railroad.

A post-office was established here April 18, 1870. Mr. S. E. Gale was appointed postmaster, and has been the only incumbent of the office, retaining it at the present time (October, 1880). Mr. Gale commenced in trade as a merchant here in 1838, and also kept a lumber-yard until 1847. Then he was out for a few years, opening again in 1856, and continuing until 1870. Since that he has confined his operations to lumber and coal. In his first period of trade he had a partner, George McDaniels; in the second, W. Cuddeback. Judge Bradner, in company with Sandy Baron, opened the first store here about 1820.

BLOOM'S CORNERS

derives its name from the Bloom family residing there, and is in the southwestern part of the town, near the boundary line of the State.

NEW MILFORD

is in the valley of the Warwick Creek, and situated in the south part of the town. It was formerly called Jockey Hollow, and it is inferred with great caution by previous writers that an "ethereal and elevated standard of morals" did not always prevail in the business of exchanging horses,—that somebody was sometimes cheated, and hence this unpoetical name. Whether all this changed when the new name was introduced is not clearly settled. Perhaps now if a man had accidentally made five dollars in a horse trade he would ride hard after the victim and restore him the sum—perhaps not.

The post-office was established in 1815, and the successive incumbents have been Merritt Coleman, W. C. Sutton, John Gale, D. D. Demerest, and the present officer, Frank M. DeKay.

At New Milford there is a grist-mill, run by James Lawrence. He also has a store,—general merchandise. Absalom T. Vail and Thomas DeKay are also merchants. There is a hotel by Milton DeKay, a blacksmith-shop by James Sloan, a wagon-shop by J. Corey, and a cider-mill by John F. Ryerson.

EDENVILLE

is an old name that was given to a collection of dwellings just east of Mounts Adam and Eve, now the Edenville post-office neighborhood. It was formerly called Postville, in honor of Col. Jacobus Post, whose father first settled the locality and owned the lands upon which the village is situated. Dr. Youngs is said to have been instrumental in making the change. The place is one of such beauty and fertility that it may well be presumed had Adam and Eve ever been in Orange County, they would have settled there.

LIBERTY CORNERS

is a hamlet at the west foot of Pochuck Mountain, and nearly upon the New Jersey State line. Between Pine Island and Liberty there is located the Pleasant Valley Creamery, William W. Walling the proprietor. At the Corners is a hotel by Jesse Morton. There was formerly a post-office, but it was discontinued a few years ago.

A large property of 600 acres has recently been purchased by Mr. Huntington, the well-known railroad man, and he has this year erected a fine country residence.

NEWPORT

is the name given to the Pochuck Bridge neighborhood, a short distance southwest of Amity.

SANFORDVILLE

is a hamlet in the valley of Warwick Creek, about midway between Warwick village and New Milford, and is so named from the Sanford family.

STONE BRIDGE

is a station on the Warwick Valley Railroad, a short distance south of Wickham's Pond.

BIG ISLAND

is another station upon the Pine Island Railroad, and so named from Big Island of the Drowned Lands, elsewhere mentioned. This is west of the station, a portion of the Drowned Lands lying between.

LAWTON

is a station on the Warwick Valley Railroad north of Wickham's Pond, and on the Chester line.

DUTCH HOLLOW

is the name given to a neighborhood southeast of the Bellvale Mountains.

is three miles east of Warwick village, and is a point of early settlement. Daniel Burt located there about 1760. There is a valuable water privilege at this place, the Long House Creek falling about thirty feet in thirty rods. The name is said to express a retired, lonely, and beautiful location, a charming vale, and very appropriately applied to this place.

At this place is the saw-mill of Houston & Forshee, dealers in boards, plank, fence-posts, railway-pickets, laths, etc.

Up to about the year 1846 the community centering here (and which at that time covered a large section of the southern part of Orange County, mostly thinly settled) was supplied from the Warwick post-office, the mail most commonly being brought over by the Hon. James Burt, the father of the late Stephen A. Burt, of Bellvale, and distributed from the latter's place of business. About the year 1846 the late Fairfield Burt, a brother of the present postmaster, A. J. Burt, and the late Col. W. F. Wheeler succeeded in establishing a post-office in Bellvale, with the present incumbent as postmaster.

The late William Welling, of Warwick, then mail-carrier by stage from Chester to Warwick daily, agreed to carry the mail through Bellvale on his way to and from Chester and Warwick for $100 per year. This arrangement would have placed Bellvale on the general mail-routes of the United States, and been just the thing for Bellvale, but the citizens of Warwick remonstrated so strongly against this innovation that Welling succeeded in abandoning it before the proper papers were executed, leaving Bellvale with a post-office but no mail-carrier. Unfortunately for this community, the only alternative was to either abandon the project or have a special mail-carrier employed to exchange mails at the Warwick post-office. The latter course was taken, and for all these intervening years up to the present time this post-office has struggled on with all the objections to a special mail supply.

There have been two or three times during these years when the name of A. J. Burt has been stricken from the roll of that great army of feeders at the public crib, but the sustenance has been so small for those who succeeded him that they soon languished, and had to be turned into other and fresher pastures, and the original Jacobs placed back to dispense the honors.

Mr. Burt at last induced Robert Mackerel to take the office, and Mr. Mackerel administered it for eighteen months, when he made a complaint that if a successor was not appointed before the Saturday night following Bellvale would be without a post-office. The present postmaster again came to the rescue, and had it transferred to the present locality. The mail that supplies this office is a special mail-route, and the pay of the carrier is from the receipts of the office. Hence it has been a difficult matter to have a sufficient fund to induce daily mail facilities.

From an article already quoted we take the following interesting statement:

"About the time Warwick was first settled an act of Parliament was passed, in the twenty-third year of the reign of George II., to prevent the erection in the colonies of any mill or other engine for slitting or rolling iron. In 1750 the colonial Governor, George Clinton, made a report to Parliament, in which he certifies that there was erected in Orange County, at a place called Wawayanda, twenty-six miles from the Hudson, a plating forge with a tilt-hammer, belonging to one Lawrence Scrawley, blacksmith, and that it had been operated for four or five years, and no other rolling-mill, tilting-hammer, or forge can be found in the province." The race-way and part of the dam of the old mill are yet to be seen in the village of Bellvale.*

VI.—SCHOOLS.

At the town-meeting of 1796 five school commissioners were chosen, viz.: Henry Wisner, Daniel Jessup, Joseph Houston, Thomas Montanye, John Wheeler. Under the law then existing there were others also chosen to that office during the four years following, viz.: Francis Armstrong and Nathaniel Roe. Nothing further of official action occurred until the passage of the act of 1812, by which was organized the general school system of the State. At the town-meeting of 1813 the provisions of the statute were complied with, the necessary officers chosen, and the town was soon after divided into districts by the commissioners.

The names of the school commissioners, serving one or more years each during the period commencing with 1813 and ending with 1843, were as follows: Jones Seely, Robert Armstrong, Alanson Austin, Wm. W. Brooks, Jesse Wood, Jr., James Wheeler, Samuel S. Seward, Wm. F. Wheeler, Thomas Farrier, Xenophon Mead, Benjamin S. Hoyt, Hiram K. Chapman, Job Noble, Stephen A. Burt, James B. Post, William Shepherd, James C. Fitch, Joseph B.

* "His said Excellency doth hereby certify that there is erected within the said Province, in the County of Orange, at a place called Wawayanda, about twenty-six miles from Hudson River, one Plateing Forge to work with a Tilt Hammer, which belongs to Lawrence Scrawley, of the said county, Blacksmith; has been built about four or five years, and is not at present made use. And further, that there are not erected in his said Excellency's Government any other or more plateing Forges, to work with a Tilt Hammer.

Winfield, James B. Wood, Jr., Alsop V. Aspell, James B. Stevens, Melton McEwen, Dewitt C. Jayne, Henry C. Seely.

The inspectors of schools, who served one or more years during the same period, were the following: James Wheeler, Xenophon Mead, Alanson Austin, Samuel S. Seward, Job Noble, Jesse Wood, Charles Cummins, Daniel C. Hopkins, Lebbeus Lathrop, John I. Christy, Nathaniel Jones, Benjamin S. Hoyt, Joel Wheeler, Jr., Samuel G. Hopkins, Thomas Swezy, Stephen Burt, Thomas Farrier, Jesse Shepherd, John Curtis, Wm. W. Brooks, Jedediah Stephens, Hiram K. Chapman, Joseph Miller, James Heron, Roger Crany, John W. Smith, James C. Morse, Orlando A. Smith, John B. Randolph, John M. Howell, Alsop V. Aspell, Ira Brewer, Festus H. Vail, Ira Olmsted, Henry C. Seely, James B. Wood, Jr., John L. Sayer, Edgar L. Knapp.

Under the system of supervision by town superintendents the following were the incumbents of that office in Warwick:

By annual election: 1844, Ira Brewer; 1845, Alexander T. Johnson; 1846, Edgar L. Knapp; 1847, Nathaniel R. Bradner; 1848, Joel B. Armstrong; 1849, Nathaniel R. Bradner (for two years); 1851, Charles T. M. Cane; 1853, William S. Benedict; 1855, Maurice Hoyt.

WARWICK INSTITUTE

was organized as an academy by a stock company in the fall of 1852, the first trustees being chosen December 2d of that year, as follows: James B. Wheeler, president; William L. Benedict, secretary; Abram Forshee, treasurer; Milton McEwen, Gabriel Wisner, James Burt, Henry Pelton, Grinnell Burt, Jonathan D. Bevier, Nathaniel R. Bradner, Samuel Blain, Cornelius H. Demerest, Jesse W. Vandevort.

The buildings were erected during the summer of 1853, the same still bearing the old name in the village of Warwick.

The ground cost $300, and the buildings $4719. The school was opened in December, 1853.

The teachers of the first year were D. F. Drew,* William H. Carter, principals; Miss Clara H. Waite and Miss Maria Lamont, assistants.

It continued as an academy with varying success until Oct. 1, 1868, when the entire property was transferred to the Board of Education of "Union Free School District, No. 12," which had then been recently formed by a consolidation of two former districts. The Board of Education agreed, in consideration of the transfer, to forever maintain an academic department, and the opportunities of classical instruction were thereby secured to the pupils of this community. During the existence of the academy the presidents of the board of trustees were as follows: James B. Wheeler, from the organization to Feb. 20, 1865; Gabriel Wisner, from that date until Feb. 19, 1866; Samuel Pelton, who served from the resignation of Mr. Wisner until the transfer to the district.

In the Board of Education then taking charge, Mr. Cornelius H. Demerest was chosen president, a position he continues to occupy after twelve years of service.

Mr. Demerest, and also Mr. Grinnell Burt, were members of the original academic board of 1852, and have served continuously until the present time in that board and its successor.

The first Board of Education in full were Grinnell Burt, Thomas S. Vandevort, James R. Christie, C. H. Demerest, William L. Ogden, C. J. Lazear, Thomas Welling, William D. Irwin, William W. Pelton. The last named was clerk, and William L. Ogden treasurer. The present board (Oct. 1, 1880) consists of C. H. Demerest, W. H. Hynard, J. H. Holly, C. J. Lazear, S. S. Van Saun, Thomas Burt, Grinnell Burt, Thomas Welling, P. E. Sanford. Clerk, John Sayer; Treasurer, James H. Van Duzer.

The present corps of teachers (October, 1880) consists of Prof. A. G. McAllister, principal; Miss Bessie B. Dewitt, Miss Julia Reed, Miss S. R. Reed, Miss Rowena Herrick, Miss Maggie Mabey, Miss Amelia M. Nichols.

AMITY HOME SCHOOL

was established in 1873. The course of study embraces all that is implied in a sound and thorough English and classical education. Scholars are prepared for college or for business. The principal is W. H. Seeley, a son of Dr. Seeley, and the school is at the old homestead.

SEWARD INSTITUTE, FLORIDA.

As mentioned elsewhere, this was founded by Judge Samuel S. Seward. He opened the institution first about 1848 as a classical school. For this he repaired and remodeled the old Randolph Hotel, which he had purchased. By his will he gave $20,000 to be invested for the benefit of the school, and as he died a year later the proceeds became available at an early date. With the sums accruing from the interest the trustees, about 1852, purchased of the estate the mansion of Judge Seward, nearly opposite, on the west side of the street, and devoted that to the female department. This gave the school very liberal accommodations, and at times there was a large number of boarding students and many day scholars from the village and vicinity. The first principal was Mrs. Parsons, who conducted the school in the Randolph building. After the separation into male and female departments, the first principal of the former was John W. Round, and he continued for several years, until his death in 1862. He was succeeded by Thomas G. Schriver, who was principal from 1862 until 1876, when, soon after the beginning of the fall term, he was compelled to leave by sudden illness.

The first principal of the separate female department was Miss Seward. She was succeeded by Miss Mary E. Hotchkiss, and the latter by Mrs. George W. Seward. In 1877 both departments were placed in charge of Rev. H. A. Harlow, and he remained as principal until the summer of 1880, when he resigned. The trustees in charge of the school are Frederick A. Seward, of Washington, and George Grier, of Goshen. Rev. Augustus Seward is president of the institute.

VII.—CHURCHES.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH IN WARWICK

effected a legal organization at the meeting-house, Nov. 23, 1791. The certificate was signed by Jonathan Silsbe and James Burt. The trustees named therein were John Morris Foght, John Sutton, and James Burt. This was a compliance with the new law of 1784, for the incorporation of churches, but the church itself had existed for many years previous. In Eager's "History of Orange County" it is stated that the Baptist Church of Warwick was organized in 1766, and that James Benedict was the first pastor.

The late Mr. Henry Pelton, in an article published a few years since, gave the following items relating to the founding of the Baptist Church of Warwick: From the first settlement in Warwick Valley down to 1764 the people had lived, it appears, wholly destitute of religious privileges. Many of them had enjoyed the preaching of the gospel where they had emigrated from, and no doubt longed for the same privileges in their new home; but they differed widely in their sentiments, some being of Baptist faith, others of Presbyterian. Many of the settlers from Connecticut were Baptists, and being men of energy and influence, they determined to make an effort to procure a preacher of their persuasion.

Accordingly they sent to Connecticut for a man by the name of James Benedict, who was then a licentiate of that denomination, and whom many of them were well acquainted with. He came and preached in different neighborhoods very acceptably to the people, and in the following year he was ordained and settled. The church was also organized about that time. There was no other organized denomination at that time, and most of the people attended worship with the Baptists, who met at private houses, as no meeting-house was then erected. In the year 1774 a meeting-house was erected near where the late John Wood lived, on the corner at the junction of the road leading from the village of Warwick and the road leading from the Welling school-house to Bellvale. The remains of this house still identify the site. The house was built on a piece of ground given by Mr. Benedict, who was their pastor till he became enfeebled by age and infirmity, when he resigned. He died in 1792, and he and his wife lie buried by the side of the road near where the old church stood, without a stone or tablet of any kind to show who is buried there. He left a number of children, from whom have descended most of that name in this vicinity. It would seem only natural to expect that they who cherish the memory of this pioneer Baptist minister should erect at least some small monument to mark his final resting-place.

After the resignation of Mr. Hardenburgh, of the Reformed Church, in the year 1807, and during the partial suspension of services in that church for the two or three years following, the Baptist congregation increased so much as to render proper the building of a new house of worship and the location of it in the village of Warwick. The site was purchased of Richard Welling (the same now occupied by their church). The new building was erected in the year 1810, and finished in the spring of 1811.

We also have the pleasure of adding the following paper with reference to this venerable society, written by William L. Benedict, a descendant of the first minister:

"Be it recorded that in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and sixty-four, the Lord of His infinite mercy and grace having begun, and carrying on, a glorious work of grace in this place, and a number of souls being awakened and converted to Jesus Christ as we trust, and being destitute of those ministerial helps and ordinances that our souls now thirsted after, and being personally acquainted many of us with James Benedict, who was a member of the Baptist Church of Christ at Stratfield, Conn., under the pastoral care of Mr. John Sherwood, and said Benedict being licensed by that church to the work of preaching the gospel, a number of us, jointly agreeing together, drew up a letter and sent to said Benedict to come over and help us, which accordingly he did, about the middle of November, 1764, and preached about two weeks, to our joy and satisfaction, and then returned home. Mr. Benedict, upon invitation, came again in March, 1765, and brought a church covenant with him, which was accepted, and those who had been baptized were constituted into a regular Baptist Church, and signed the covenant. The following are the names of the members thus constituted as the Warwick Baptist Church: Elder James Benedict, Ebenezer Green, Timothy Wood, Gload Bootman, David Lobdell, Nathaniel Roe, Daniel Whitney, Philip Ketchum, Jonathan Weeks, Abigail Weeks, Hannah Ketchum, Hannah

Bent, Elizabeth Gano, Phebe Lobdell, Mary Benedict, Elizabeth Knapp, Elizabeth Knapp, Jr., Thankful Whitney. Thirteen were added to the church in 1766; 20, in 1767; 10, in 1769; 5, in 1770; 11, in 1771; 20, in 1773; 45, in 1774. Elder Benedict continued with the church as its pastor until June, 1777, when, upon his request, he was dismissed, after resigning the charge of the church. He removed to Westmoreland, Pa. Elder Thomas B. Montanye was called to the pastoral care of the church Nov. 20, 1788, and continued as pastor until April 27, 1801, the church being greatly prospered, and his resignation accepted, as the record says, "not cheerfully, but with sorrow of heart and many tears."

Elder Thomas Stevens was called, and accepted the pastoral care of the church July 10, 1802. He resigned his charge Aug. 30, 1803. Elder Lebbeus Lathrop was called to the pastoral care of the church Oct. 25, 1801, and continued in charge of the church until May, 1819, when, on his own request and resignation, he was dismissed. Elder Philander D. Gillett, called as pastor Dec. 29, 1821; resigned March 25, 1826. Elder Aaron Perkins was called to the charge of the church Oct. 1, 1827; resigned April 19, 1829. Elder John C. Murphy, called Dec. 26, 1829; resigned March 30, 1833. Elder Richard Pickard, called as pastor April 26, 1834; resigned April, 1844. Elder Philander Hartwell, called March, 1845; resigned April 1, 1852. Elder John F. Johnson, called Oct. 26, 1856; resigned July 31, 1868. Elder Wilson Honsel, called Jan. 1, 1859; resigned March 30, 1863. Elder Joseph N. Badger, called April 1, 1868; resigned April 1, 1876. Elder William Pollard, the present pastor (1880), called April 1, 1879.

Ordinations: Elder James Benedict, at Warwick, Nov. 7, 1765; Elder Thomas B. Montanye, at Warwick, Nov. 20, 1788; Elder William L. Benedict, at Warwick, Nov. 19, 1865; Elder Joseph N. Badger, Aug. 26, 1868.

The meeting-house was built 1809-10, is 60 by 40 feet, cost $7000, stands in the centre of the village of Warwick, on a lot containing an acre of land; is a wooden structure with a spire or steeple; is a firm, substantial building, and in good repair; can seat about 500 people. The parsonage contains seven acres of excellent land, with a commodious house, built in 1852, at a cost of about $1500. The church and congregation own a lot of half an acre of land, donated by Deacon James Burt, leased to the Warwick Institute, a graded school. This lot is bounded on the south by the Wawayanda Creek, and is the place where the ordinance of baptism is administered.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION OF FLORIDA was incorporated by a certificate executed March 24, 1787. The paper is signed by two of the deacons, John Bradner and Abel Jackson, and the trustees chosen were William Thompson, John Bradner, Robert Armstrong, Enoch Jackson, Roeleff Van Bruns, Moses Carpenter. The following extract from the records shows the early efforts to establish a church in Florida, though it fails to show at what date a church was actually organized. The building of a house and the settlement of ministers, as described below, is good evidence that the church organization really dates back to 1742:

"In the year of the Christian era 1738 the people of Florida and Goshen were considered as one congregation, and attended public worship at Goshen under the ministry of the Rev. Silas Leonard. On the 7th day of August, 1741, the people of Florida purchased a piece of land of Richard Baylis, containing one acre and one rod of land.

"This purchase was made under the name of the Men of Brookland (as Florida was then called), and as will appear by a deed of conveyance executed by the said Richard Baylis, bearing date the seventh day of August, one thousand seven hundred and forty-one, now on the files of the clerk of the board of trustees. The people proceeded without delay to prepare to build a meeting-house, which was raised and inclosed the next year, viz., 1742. Soon after this time the Rev. Mr. Judd, from New England, spent some time in Florida as a supply, but he not inclining to settle in this part of the country, left the place. From this time until the year 1750 there was but little preaching in Florida. About this time the people of Warwick made a proposal to join with Florida and settle a minister between the two congregations. Agreeably to the proposal of Warwick, the two congregations united and prepared a call for the Rev. Jonathan Elmer, who accepted of the same and preached alternately between the two congregations for about four years. Some difficulty arising between Mr. Elmer and the people of Warwick about this time, Mr. Elmer left Warwick and continued the duties of his ministerial office at Florida for about three years, when Mr. Elmer was dismissed, by the consent of the congregation, for want of ability to give him a sufficient support.

"On the 13th of June, 1762, the Rev. Samuel Parkhurst was ordained to the pastoral charge of the congregations of Florida and Warwick. On the 8th day of March, 1768, the Rev. Mr. Parkhurst departed this life, leaving the united congregations of Florida and Warwick vacant. On the 8th day of December, 1771, the Rev. Amzi Lewis came to preach at Florida and Warwick as a stated supply, with a view to his settlement, and on the 9th day of April, 1772, Mr. Lewis was ordained to the pastoral charge of the united congregations of Florida and Warwick. Within a few years after Mr. Lewis' ordination the people of Warwick became dissatisfied with Mr. Lewis, and a committee of the Presbytery of New York having been appointed to meet at Warwick to inquire into the causes of the difficulties existing, the result was that Mr. Lewis was dismissed from Warwick. The congregation of Florida continued Mr. Lewis as their minister until the month of November, 1787, when Mr. Lewis left Florida with the consent of the congregation. On the 27th of March of that year the congregation was incorporated as shown above.

"The board of trustees was classified as follows: first class, John Bradner, Enoch Jackson, seats vacant March 27, 1788; second class, William Thompson, Moses Carpenter, seats vacant March 27, 1789; third class, Robert Armstrong, Ruliff Van Brunt, seats vacant March 27, 1790.

"On the 4th day of March, 1793, the board of trustees purchased of Renulche Parkhurst, Nathaniel Parkhurst, and Mary his wife, a lot and message of land situate near the meeting-house, for the purpose of a parsonage, for the sum of four hundred and fifty pounds lawful money of the State of New York, which said sum had been previously raised by the voluntary subscriptions of the persons whose names are hereafter set down:

"William Armstrong, William Thompson, James Sayre, Benjamin Sayre, John Kennedy, Robert Armstrong, Francis Armstrong, John Sayre, Lewis Howell, Ruliff Van Brunt, Reinard Bayles, Isaac Johnson, John Holbert, John Springsted, Phineas Tompkins, James Jackson, William Armstrong, Jr., Nathaniel Roe, David Lawrence, Joseph Totten, James Miller, William Mullock, James Foster, Timothy Roe, Daniel Poppino, Samuel Jessup, Zebulon Wheeler, James Aspell, Benjamin Roe, Joseph Roe, George Wood (deacon), John Poppino, Isaac Jennings, George Rankin, Samuel Jayne, Anthony Finn, William Carr, Enoch Jackson, Charles Durland, Richard Poppino, Matthew Adams, Benjamin Jennings, Thomas Beach, David Miller, Daniel Jessup, William Randall, Richard Jennings, Samuel Gilson, Moses Armstrong, Joseph Drake, Barnabas Horton, Samuel Bailey, John Finch, Solomon Carpenter, David Wilson, Robert Armstrong, Jr., John Randall, John Carr, Jonas Roe, David Dunning, Wm. Bradner, Benoni Bradner, Israel Wood, Gideon Jennings, Isaac Smith, Jr., James Hannah, John Hathorn, Francis Baird, John Smith, John Roy, Alexander Brown, David Howell, David Robertson, Joseph Houston, John Wood, Jr., Thomas Goldsmith, Joseph Todd, Thomas King, Samuel Bradner, Caleb Smith, David Nanny, George Vance, Moses Wisner, Joseph Curry, Stephen Baly, Jesse Shepard, Wm. McKain, Nathaniel Roe, Jr., Christian Minthorn, Daniel Wood, William Carr, Jr."

In May, 1795, Rev. John Joline was installed pastor. June 2d the presiding board of church officers was elected, as follows: Elders, William Armstrong, Robert Armstrong, Nathaniel Roe, William Bradner, Samuel Jessup; Deacons, John Holbert, Daniel Jessup. These officers were ordained by Mr. Joline June 9, 1795. At that time 47 persons were received and enrolled as members of the church.

Rev. Mr. Joline died in October, 1802. He was buried in the grounds adjoining the church. After the death of Mr. Joline the church remained without a minister for six years. In 1803 the congregation resolved to build a new house of worship. Accordingly the old house was taken down, and a new one erected on the same site, 40 by 50 feet, with a "gallery and a steeple."

The Rev. Charles Cummins commenced his labors as pastor July 15, 1808, and was installed the following September. At that time the congregation embraced families residing within the present boundaries of the congregations of Sugar-Loaf, Chester, and Amity. In 1812, Asa Bailey gratuitously deeded one-half acre of land to the trustees adjoining the parsonage farm on the same hill, to which was added a portion of the farm for a burying-ground. In 1813 and in 1824 the trustees purchased of Samuel S. Seward pieces of land on the north and east side of the burying-ground for enlarging it. They had previously sold the parsonage farm, excepting what was reserved for the above purpose.

In 1820 the trustees appropriated a lot in the northeast corner of the burying-ground for the use of the colored people. In 1820 the first bell was procured. Saturday, March 18, 1837, about mid-day, the church was discovered to be on fire, and in one hour was burned to the ground. The next day being the Sabbath, the congregation assembled in the "long room" of the academy. A sermon was preached by the pastor from Daniel ix. 17. The next day the congregation assembled in the same place, and resolved to build another church on the same site as soon as possible. The present building was completed and dedicated in June, 1838, at a cost of $4650. The congregation, upon invitation of the Methodist Church, worshiped in their church while the building was being erected.

In the division of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, when the church was rent asunder by the exciting acts of the General Assembly in 1837, a majority of this church decided to remain with the constitutional church, as the "New School" portion of the Assembly claimed to be. Rev. Mr. Cummins resigned his pastoral charge, and the relation was dissolved in May, 1839. He with 30 members withdrew and organized a church under the other branch, or the Old School judicatories. A suit was soon after brought by those who withdrew against the church for all the property, which they claimed. The case was decided in favor of the church, and they retained the property which they had heretofore held.

Rev. George Pierson was called to the pastorate and installed Aug. 13, 1839. In 1867 the church building was enlarged and greatly improved. Rev. Mr. Pierson continued pastor till May 15, 1878, a period of nearly thirty-nine years, when the relation was terminated at his own request. He died at his residence in Florida, Feb. 2, 1880. At the time of his dismissal, in May, 1878, the two Presbyterian churches in Florida were united in one church by the action of the Presbytery and the civil courts, and retained the house of worship belonging to the first organizations for their future use. Rev. A. L. Clark, the present pastor, began his ministry April 1, 1879, and was installed by the Presbytery of Hudson on the 29th of the same month.

The following have served as trustees since 1813: Samuel S. Seward, elected 1813, and continued in office till 1837; James Wood, Richard Poppino, Daniel Poppino, Nathaniel Wheeler, Samuel Jessup, William Smith, Francis Armstrong, Wm. W. Armstrong, Amzi A. Jessup, Daniel Finn, Wm. M. Taylor, James Vail, John Curtice, Philo Gregory, Christopher Aspell, Jr., John M. Vanderoef, Peter S. Post, Daniel Jessup, Jr., Alsop V. Aspell, Nathan R. Wheeler, Thomas Armstrong, Charles C. Wheeler, Joseph Hetzel, Lewis M. Jayne, Geo. M. Seward, Lewis Howell, Cornelius Vandevoort, Abram L. Nanny.

The present board of trustees are James H. Houston, Stewart Young, Robert Young, Lewis Howell, Jasper A. Seward, Wilmot A. Durland.

The elders have been: John Roy, Wm. Smith, 1801; Selah Smith, Enoch Jackson, John Holbert, Daniel Poppino, James Wood, 1808; Daniel Mills-paugh, Daniel Finn, Jasper S. Armstrong, 1822; Charles Jackson, Nathan R. Wheeler, Geo. M. Seward, 1839; Geo. N. Chase, Thos. Armstrong, 1845; William Finn, Zebulon W. Vanderoef, Asa Howell, 1852; Saml. F. Gardner, Geo. M. Pierson, 1870; Henry L. Sherwood, 1871.

The present elders are Zebulon W. Vanderoef, Asa Howell, Samuel F. Gardner, Stephen D. Pierson.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF WARWICK effected a legal organization at the meeting-house, Oct. 22, 1791. Archibald Armstrong and Joseph Wilson were the inspectors of election, pursuant to statute, and the trustees named were John Wheeler, Francis Baird, and John Simson. This movement took definite legal shape at the above date, but there was a previous history of twenty years or more, which is given in the following extract, condensed from Mr. Pelton's article already quoted. There were many settlers of Presbyterian or Congregational ancestry who were not satisfied with Baptist usages or doctrines, and they began to take the necessary steps towards forming themselves into an organized society.

In 1770, Mr. John Morin Scott, who owned a piece of land in the village of Warwick, sold the same to William Wisner, one acre, where the church now stands, to constitute a site for a meeting-house, and the remainder to be used as a burying-ground. About the same time William Wickham, the well-known land-holder of early times, donated one acre for the same purpose adjoining the land bought of Mr. Scott. It appears, however, from stones standing in that yard, that it had been used for burial purposes earlier than the date given above. Soon after this acquisition of a site preparations were made to build a meeting-house. A frame was erected in 1773 or 1774, covered and inclosed, but nothing more done to it. Troublesome times then came on, and the building stood during the war of the Revolution without any protection, open to the public, without doors or windows, and a shelter for anything and everything that might happen to enter. After the war things became more settled. Many people desirous of religious privileges attended meeting at Florida, though the distance was great and the roads rough. From the churches of Florida and Chester ministers occasionally came to Warwick to preach. Many Dutch families had now settled in Warwick, coming from what is now Rockland County, and from Bergen County, New Jersey, among them the families of Demerest, Bertholf, Ackerman, Ackerson, Post, Magee, and others. There were Dutch settlements in Minisink along the Delaware River, and as the road from Rockland and Bergen Counties to Minisink was through Warwick, travelers made this a stopping-place, and ministers coming through here were often invited to preach. John Lazear used to say that he well remembered that when he was a child his father, Cornelius Lazear, was once invited to attend a meeting in Warwick and lead the singing in Dutch.

In 1792 a movement was made to repair and finish the meeting-house. Preparatory to this, or for the purpose of securing a perfect title, the incorporation mentioned at the commencement of this article was obtained. A subscription was raised, and the house completed in 1793, and from that date forward it is supposed that services were regularly held, sometimes by ministers of neighboring churches. The old meeting-house was an ill-shaped, uncouth-looking building, which in these modern times would hardly be thought fit to be used as a place of worship. It was nearly square, with a gambrel roof, and the entrance in the end fronting the road. The seats were very clumsy affairs, though strong. An aisle led from the entrance to the pulpit, with one tier of seats on each side, and around the outside there were box-pews, four-square, according to the old style. The gallery was not finished, only a floor laid, and a breastwork put up in front, with loose boards placed on blocks for seats. Such was the church in which the hardy pioneers worshiped and prized the gospel privileges, though there was no fire even in the coldest weather, and in the long services their bodies and limbs were almost frozen stiff with the cold.

There is no record of what transpired from 1793 to 1802. At this last date a Presbyterian minister was engaged to preach once in two weeks for a year, and his salary was to be $150, the agreement being signed by George Vance, Abraham Genung, and Ananias Rogers, as trustees. The receipt for the payment of this sum is dated Feb. 23, 1804, signed by the minister, Benjamin Prime. This agreement and this receipt were found among the papers of the late Richard Johnson, for many years a trustee of the church.

There were some difficulties in the way of forming a church. The church building and ground were given for a Presbyterian Church, but the Dutch and English families were neither able to found a church alone, and a compromise was exceedingly desirable. Those in favor of organizing under the Classis of the Dutch Reformed Church finally prevailed, and a harmonious result was reached that has remained undisturbed for seventy-five years. The name and style of the society was "The Presbyterian and Dutch Reformed Church of Warwick." The trustees were to manage the church property, and the Consistory the spiritual interests of the church. This happy result was due in part to the services of several young Dutch ministers, who had preached here with great acceptance to the whole people. Under this arrangement a church was organized by a deputation of the Classis of Paramus, Jan. 7, 1804.

The first elders were Andrew Ackerman and Cornelius Demerest; the first deacons, Aaron Taylor and John G. Ackerson. Soon after this organization was made a call was extended to the Rev. Charles Hardenbergh, which was accepted. About this time the Pelton families and Jacob Howe, Sylvanus Fancher, and others came to this place from Connecticut, and this added considerable strength to the congregation. Early in 1808 the elders chosen were Edward P. Ackerson and John Pelton; the deacons, Andrew Onderdonk and David C. Demerest. John Pelton outlived all of his associates, and held his station until disqualified by age and infirmity.

Rev. Mr. Hardenbergh left about this time, and the growing church had no pastor for some years. The congregation scattered, and it was necessary to make a strong effort to rally. In the year 1810, $3000 was pledged for a new house of worship. William Culver, a leading mechanic, had the contract. A large amount of timber was given by Thomas DeKay, and the erection of the building took place in 1811. It was finished and dedicated in the spring of 1812. During the building of this house services were held in the "long room" of the old Dolsen tavern, afterwards the house of J. & S. Welling.

Among the supplies was Rev. Mr. Westervelt, to whom the church extended a call, which was, however, declined. In the year 1812, Rev. John J. Christie was settled. He remained the pastor until the fall of 1835, a considerable portion of the time in failing health, on which account he had not been able to do the needed work of the church. The Rev. Benjamin Van Keuren was next settled, but only remained for a year and a half, or to the fall of 1837. It seemed to be a necessity at this time to secure a parsonage. The Consistory acted with promptness and discretion. A farm belonging to Mr. Henry Johnson was purchased, the homestead and buildings reserved for the minister's residence, and the other portions sold, so as to leave but a small sum to be raised by the congregation. This was immediately provided for, and as a result of this early and wise action the society have ever since enjoyed the possession of a pleasant and commodious parsonage. About this time it was deemed desirable to file a certificate of incorporation, which had, perhaps, been previously neglected. The proceedings were signed by William H. Bishop, chairman. The trustees chosen were Peter Schoonmaker, Robert Ettinge, Ishmael Acin, Cæsar Sahler, and John Whiting.

The next pastor, Rev. James W. Stewart, was installed May 15, 1838. He was evidently a man of talent, devoted to the doctrines of the church, and preached them forcibly. In the strong disputations characteristic of that era throughout the country, he deemed it his duty to oppose boldly the Methodists, then entering upon this field, and to some extent he became unpopular with the people, and even with a portion of his own society. He resigned in 1842. Rev. Mr. Christie, the former pastor, was then employed temporarily as a supply, so far as his feeble health would permit. Rev. F. H. Vanderveer, the next pastor, commenced his labors on the 1st of December, 1842, and remained in that capacity until the fall of 1876, a pastorate of unusual length, extending for a third of a century. The pulpit was vacant for only a short time, the present pastor, Rev. Vernon B. Carroll, being installed about Jan. 1, 1877.

Soon after the settlement of Rev. Mr. Vanderveer it was determined to rebuild the house of worship. The builder was Walter Brooks. Subsequently it was necessary to put an addition on the end, thus securing additional pews. The parsonage was next rebuilt. A debt of $1000 accumulated as the result of these improvements, which was met by disposing of three acres of land from the north end of the ample parsonage lot. The church has a vested fund of $2300, arising from donations as follows: William Culver, $400; John Magee, $500; James Magee, his son, $500; Mrs. James R. Christie, $500; Miss Sarah Demerest, $300; Rev. Mr. Christie, $100. This fund is left in charge of the Consistory for the support of the minister. After the opening of the railroad and the advance in the value of real estate it was deemed best to sell more of the parsonage lot, which was accordingly done for the sum of $4500. This carries the vested fund up to $6800, the revenue from which renders the annual support of the minister a comparatively easy affair.

The present officers of the church (October, 1880) are Thomas Welling, Mahlon Cooper, C. H. Demerest, and Samuel Pelton, elders; Alexander H. Galloway, N. R. Bradner, Henry C. Dusenbury, C. M. Demerest, deacons; C. H. Demerest, clerk; C. M. Demerest, treasurer; John L. Servin, Sunday-school superintendent. The membership of the church is about 100. It is a matter of regret that the early records of the church are lost, as it would be interesting to have given in full the first roll of members. Among early members of the Consistory, though not perhaps the first, were Cornelius Demerest, John Ackerson, and Aaron Taylor.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF AMITY effected a legal organization at the house of Jesse Shepard, where public worship was commonly held, April 21, 1797. The certificate was signed by Lewis Sayre and Colville Shepard, inspectors of the election, and the trustees chosen were Robert Farrier, Philip McConnell, and David Carr. Of this church, organized somewhat earlier than the above date indicates, we have the following sketch written by the pastor:

The Presbyterian Church at Amity had its origin in an association incorporated Dec. 10, 1796, under the name of "The Presbyterian Society of Amity." The society, soon after their incorporation, put themselves under the care of the Presbytery of Hudson, although a church was not organized until several years after.

In the spring of 1797 they began to build a house for public worship. This house, though not finished, was so far completed that it was opened and dedicated to the worship of God on the first day of August following. The Rev. Mr. Kerr, then of Goshen, preached a sermon on the occasion from Isa. lvi. 7. The size of this first church building was 36 feet by 44 feet, and cost $1100. At its origin, and for several years after, the congregation was small and weak, many of its members being in indigent circumstances. The country was new and thinly settled, and many of the inhabitants were but tenants of the farms which they cultivated. The community was in a comparatively rude and disorganized state. There were very few professors of religion, and these were of different religious denominations. Hence the labor and expense of sustaining religious worship devolved upon a few, who felt more deeply the importance of gospel institutions and privileges to the welfare of the community. During the year 1800 they succeeded in securing the means needful to the completion of their house of worship, which for three years had remained unfinished.

For several years after this the congregation had no settled minister, but were dependent for their preaching on occasional supplies furnished by the Presbytery of Hudson, and on missionaries from the Presbytery of New York and other traveling preachers.

In 1807 the Rev. Benjamin Prime was engaged as a supply for half the time for one year. After the expiration of Mr. Prime's term of service the congregation were dependent on occasional supplies until the spring of 1809, when the Rev. Daniel C. Hopkins, a licentiate of the Presbytery of New York, came among them. The congregation soon gave Mr. Hopkins a call to become their pastor, which he in due time accepted, and his ordination and installation were fixed for Oct. 4, 1809.

Measures were now immediately taken for the organization of a church. A meeting of the congregation was held Aug. 22, 1809, at which a committee was appointed to prepare a petition to the Presbytery of Hudson, expressing their desire to have a church organized. This petition was signed by the following persons, professors of religion, living within the bounds of the congregation, viz.: Daniel C. Hopkins, Jesse Shepard, James Onderdonk, Robert Ferrier, Israel Owen, Nathaniel Roe, William Adams, Susanna Burr, Abby Smith, Lydia Rowley, Sally Longwell, Abigail Knapp, Phebe Carpenter, Hannah Smith, Eunice Onderdonk, Aletta Edsall, and Anna Nanny. In compliance with this petition, a meeting of the congregation was called for Sept. 15, 1809, when a church was duly organized by a committee of Presbytery, consisting of Rev. Isaac Lewis, of Goshen, and Rev. Charles Cummins, of Florida.

The new church was composed of the following members: Jesse Shepard, James Onderdonk, Israel Owen, Robert Ferrier, Eunice Onderdonk, Eunice Brown, Susanna Burr, Lydia Rowley, Aletta Edsall, Anna Nanny, Sally Longwell, Nathaniel Roe, Abigail Knapp, Phebe Carpenter, Hannah Smith, Phebe A. Coleman. The election of elders was deferred to a future meeting, which was held September 25th, when Jesse Shepard, James Onderdonk, and Israel Owen were chosen to the office of ruling elder. They were duly installed into office on Oct. 4, 1809. At the same time Mr. Hopkins was ordained by the Presbytery of Hudson, and installed pastor of the church and congregation. (See Records of Presbytery.) Mr. Hopkins remained pastor of the church until Jan. 27, 1818, when he was released from his charge. His active ministerial life after leaving Amity was principally spent in Northern and Central New York. He died at Montclair, N. J., June 7, 1871, aged ninety-one years.

After Mr. Hopkins' departure from Amity the church remained vacant until June 19, 1819, when Rev. William Timlow, a licentiate of the Presbytery of Hudson, was ordained and installed pastor. This relation continued for the long term of thirty-nine years, when, on account of the failure of his health, Mr. Timlow felt constrained to seek a release from his pastoral labors. In compliance with his request the Presbytery dismissed him from his charge April 21, 1858. After a few months his health was in a measure restored, and he continued for twelve years longer to preach the gospel as he had opportunity, —supplying vacant churches,—and most cheerfully rendering assistance to his ministerial brethren when they sought his aid. After his retirement from the pastorate he continued to reside at Amity, among the people whom he had so long served in the gospel. His last public service was but three weeks before his death, when he officiated at the funeral of an aged friend, whom he had baptized and received into the church at the first communion season after his installation as pastor, some fifty years before.

During his pastorate, viz., in the summer of 1828, the second house of worship was built. The size of this building was 40 feet by 60 feet, and cost about $2000. It was dedicated to the worship of God Dec. 4, 1828, on which occasion a sermon was preached by the pastor from Psalm lxxxiv. 1. Mr. Timlow died at Amity, Dec. 30, 1870, after a week's illness, in the eighty-eighth year of his age. Soon after the resignation of Rev. Mr. Timlow the church gave a call to Rev. Edsall Ferrier to become their pastor. Mr. Ferrier was born within the bounds of the congregation. His parents were members of the church, and his grandfather had been an elder. He accepted the call, and in a few weeks began his labors among the people. He was ordained and installed by the Presbytery of Hudson Sept. 28, 1858, Rev. Daniel Higbee, then of Washingtonville, preaching the sermon. This relation continued until April 18, 1860, when it was dissolved by the Presbytery in order that Mr. Ferrier might accept a call from the Second Presbyterian Church of Florida, N. Y. Mr. Ferrier is now, and has been for several years, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Mauch Chunk, Pa.

After Mr. Ferrier's departure the pulpit was filled by temporary supplies until the following October, when Rev. Henry J. Acker, who had been for some time in charge of the Congregational Church at Greenport, L. I., was engaged as stated supply. After a few months the church gave him a call to become their pastor. His installation took place April 3, 1861, Rev. Augustus Seward, of Middletown, preaching the sermon. In November, 1863, Mr. Acker having been drafted, and declining the offer of friends to furnish him a substitute, entered the army as a chaplain. His church, hoping that the war would soon close, declined to accept his resignation and gave him leave of absence for a year. At the expiration of the year he again tendered his resignation, which was accepted, and he was released from his charge by the Presbytery Jan. 31, 1865. After a few months he became pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Pleasant Valley, N. Y. He remained there until the autumn of 1872, when he removed to Brainard, N. Y., where he died Jan. 1, 1874, aged forty years.

Rev. Daniel O. Timlow, a son of Rev. William Timlow, succeeded Mr. Acker as pastor at Amity. He was installed by the Presbytery of Hudson June 6, 1865. The relation then constituted still continues.

During the summer and autumn of 1868 the present church edifice was erected. The size of this building is 40 by 70 feet, and its cost, together with the furnishing, was about $12,000. Mr. Thomas E. Ferrier, of Catskill, N. Y., formerly an elder, and a brother of a former pastor, presented the congregation with a sweet-toned bell, weighing over one thousand pounds.

The dedication took place Jan. 28, 1869. The following is a brief extract from an account published at the time in the New York Evangelist: "At the service of dedication a crowded audience filled the house. Three of the pastors of the church were present, with many of the neighboring clergymen. The sermon was preached by Rev. Henry J. Acker, from Psalm lxxxv. 5: 'Of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her, and the Highest himself shall establish her.'"

A form of dedication was read by the pastor, and the prayer made by his aged father, not, however, till the people, by bringing in their offerings, could give the house to God entirely free of debt.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH IN WARWICK (EPISCOPAL) was incorporated by a certificate executed April 6, 1804. Timothy DeKay and Richard Welling were chosen wardens; Elisha DuBois, Thomas Welling, Belden Burt, John Welling, William Holland, William Johnson, Charles Thompson, and Joseph Miller vestrymen. The above legal paper shows an attempt to establish an Episcopal Church in Warwick early in this century, and it doubtless embodies most of the names of those favorable to the enterprise. It is understood that the effort was not continued to any extent, nor is there any memorandum among the records of the present church concerning this early movement. At a much later period another attempt is shown by the following certificate incorporating

THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF WARWICK

Sept. 30, 1853. The proceedings were signed by W. H. Carter, Abraham L. Reynolds, and James D. Roe. The wardens chosen were Dr. A. L. Reynolds and William H. Hoyt; the vestrymen, Milton McEwen, Ezra Sanford, John Wheeler, Amherst Wisner, James Roe, John S. Pelsner, Charles Morehouse, and William H. Demerest. The meeting was held at the Methodist church, in which the Episcopalians were then worshipping. Before this date, and for a time subsequently, Episcopal services were regularly held in the Methodist church. A lot was purchased and trenches dug for the foundation of a church edifice. By the removal to other places of the principal men favoring the formation of a parish the movement was abandoned, and nothing more was done until about the time mentioned in the following certificate.

CHRIST CHURCH OF WARWICK (EPISCOPAL) executed a certificate of incorporation Dec. 1, 1862. The paper was signed by Rev. George T. Gray, rector, Horace Porter, and Isaac Reeve. The wardens chosen were Horace Porter and J. M. McJimsey; the vestrymen were John Bradner, Grinnell Burt, John Cowdrey, J. H. Houston, William H. Hoyt, Isaac Reeve, J. D. Roe, and Samuel C. Welling. At a subsequent meeting, December 6th, James D. Roe was chosen secretary and Horace Porter treasurer. The next entry in the book shows that a committee was appointed Sept. 19, 1863, to select a suitable site on which to build a house of worship. The committee were Joseph M. McJimsey, Grinnell Burt, and Samuel C. Welling. The rectorship of Rev. Mr. Gray continued for about a year and a half. His successor, Rev. N. T. Ludlum, was chosen rector July 23, 1864. During his pastorate further steps were taken towards the erection of a church, and either because of some supposed defect in the previous proceedings, or to make the title to the property about to be secured more certain and definite, another certificate of incorporation was filed under date of Sept. 23, 1865. The paper was signed by Rev. Nicholas F. Ludlum, rector, and by J. M. McJimsey and Isaac Reeve. The last two were named as wardens and the following vestrymen were chosen: John M. Bradner, Grinnell Burt, John Cowdrey, Henry C. Weir, John D. Miller, William H. Chardevoyne, Samuel H. Arnout, and William D. Irwin. The meeting was held at the Methodist church, the use of which was liberally granted by that society.

The Episcopal house of worship was erected in 1865 and 1866, as the records show a meeting of April 3, 1866, in the Methodist church, and one of Sept. 22, 1866, in the "church building." Its cost was about $7000, and it occupies a handsome site on the corner of South and Second Streets; a very fine and commanding elevation. The pews were first rented from Jan. 1, 1867, the lessees being 36 in number.

Rev. Mr. Ludlum resigned the pastorate July 1, 1868. A call was tendered to Rev. Charles E. McIlvaine, Nov. 6, 1868, which was declined. May 1, 1869, Rev. Peter A. Jay was called to the rectorship, and commenced his labors soon after. His pastorate continued until March 20, 1872, when he resigned. A call was immediately tendered to Rev. William S. Early, which he accepted, and commenced his labors in Warwick soon after. He remained about a year. Under date of May 9, 1873, a call was sent to Rev. Alfred Goldsborough, which was duly accepted. He removed to this place and began his parochial labors immediately. He resigned in 1880, his closing services being held on Easter Sabbath. His ministerial brethren of other denominations speak in warm commendation of his piety and his faithful presentation of the truth during his seven years' residence here.

The officers of the parish chosen in 1879, and whose successors have not been named, are H. C. Weir, S. B. Dolsen, wardens; Grinnell Burt, J. D. Miller, J. N. Houston, John Cowdrey, J. Carson, W. H. Chardevoyne, vestrymen; John Cowdrey, treasurer; W. H. Chardevoyne, secretary.

The pulpit is now vacant, and services are suspended (October, 1880).

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, FLORIDA.

In the year 1831, at the solicitation of Justus Dill and others, the preachers of the New York Annual Conference commenced preaching in the village of Florida, occupying the wagon-making shop of Justus Dill as a place of worship, April 15, 1832. P. Rice, preacher in charge of the circuit, authorized H. Wing, his colleague, to form a class, which was composed of ten members,—Abram Odell and wife, M. G. Lewis and wife, James H. Wood, Justus and Eliza Dill, Walter Wood and wife Sarah, Oscar F. Whitney. Walter Wood acted as leader. The Presbyterians, who had been the sole occupants of the ground, opposed the work to some extent; but at the close of the year the class had increased to a membership of twenty.

Cyrus Silliman and Noble W. Thomas then appeared on the circuit, and held service every fortnight. The prayer-meetings were well attended, and finally compelled them to seek a permanent place. Accordingly the academy was secured, and for some time occupied as a place for preaching and prayer services.

In 1835, James Cover, Jr., Nathan Rice, and Thomas Edwards were the preachers on the circuit, followed the ensuing year by Thomas Newman, William Miller, and S. S. Strong. This was a year of great prosperity to the church. At the first Quarterly Meeting held at Edenville, in August, seven from Florida were converted.

A protracted meeting at the academy followed, and twenty more were received. Isaac Millsbaugh and his brother, John H. Millsbaugh, Sarah Goble, Hannah Vanbrunt, Abram P. Miller, E. P. Seward, and Susan and Elizabeth Woodruff were among the number.

Rev. T. Newman, encouraged by the continued growth of the membership, proposed the building of an edifice. This met with hearty concurrence from the people, and on Jan. 16, 1837, legal notice having been given, the congregation elected as trustees for a Methodist Episcopal Church in Florida the following: Justus Dill, Jonathan Davy, Walter Wood, Edwin P. Seward, and Marenius G. Lewis. In spite of opposition and the dullness of the times, pledges were received to the amount of nearly $2000. A lot 100 feet front by 105 feet back, owned by John Curtis, was purchased by the trustees, and contracts were made with Justus Dill to build a church 40 by 50, with basement.

While the work was in progress the Sugar-Loaf Circuit was newly organized, and contained the following appointments: Washingtonville, Monroe, Highland Mills, Sugar-Loaf, Florida, Edenville, Bellvale, Oxford, Little Pond, Mount Eve, Greenville, Long Pond, and Monroe Works. William Miller and Seymour Landon were assigned to this work. William Miller resided in the place. The edifice was completed, and August 31st, was dedicated.

Rev. John Kennedy, of Newburgh, preached the dedicatory sermon. A series of extra meetings was held, and many added to the church.

The following preachers have filled the appointment up to 1869, at which time the church was thoroughly repaired at an outlay of over $600. At the reunion W. P. Abbott preached,—Eli Denniston, William M. Furguson, George C. Bancroft, John Reynolds, Matthew Vandusen, Isaac J. Divine, Edwin Oldren, Charles H. Dibble, J. P. Hermance, Henry Wright, Ira Ferris, William N. Nelson, M. Carrier; Humphrey Humphreys, C. S. Brown, J. Millard, A. C. Fields, Benjamin Genung, A. W. Blakely, William H. Bloomer, George Dykeman, C. F. Pelton, James H. Hawxhurst, Richard S. Amerman, Joel Croft, J. W. Jones, N. H. Bangs, Joseph Elliott, Uriah Messiter, R. S. Shurter, M. M. Curtis, P. C. Oakley, and Joseph H. Wood.

In 1870 pulpit supplied by Alexander Burriss; 1871–72, F. D. Abrams was appointed, and the church greatly prospered,—fifty-two uniting with the church; 1873, F. Mason North followed with marked success, the debt being canceled this year; 1874, David H. Hanaburgh; 1875, J. T. Hargraves; 1876, William H. Peters; 1877, Edward H. Royce; 1878–79, P. P. Harrower; 1880, Frank T. Rogers.

Present Organization.—Rev. Frank T. Rogers, pastor; Trustees, Isaac Millsbaugh, L. D. Adams, Harvey Green, Samuel Green, Oscar Rosencranse, William Fletcher, Charles Smith; Stewards, Isaac Millsbaugh, Mrs. Mary M. Adams, Mrs. J. W. Bertholf; Chorister, Mr. M. Mapes; Organist, Carrie E. Rosencrans; Sexton, James Cronk. The pastor is the class-leader and Sunday-school superintendent.

Church membership, 54; Sunday-school, 1; membership, 60; average attendance, 50; 12 officers and teachers; church valued at $2000.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION OF FLORIDA executed a certificate of incorporation Feb. 6, 1844. The proceedings were signed by William Smith and William W. Taylor, elders. The trustees chosen were John J. Poppino, William Houston, Amzi A. Jessup, Daniel P. Onderdonk, Jonas Seely, Zebulon W. Smith. This was what, for convenience, became known as the Second Presbyterian Church, of which the following account is given:

The formation of a second Presbyterian Church in Florida was due in the first place to the general disruption of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, resulting from the sharp theological discussions of the period 1830 to 1837. When two General Assemblies were formed out of the one previous organization, the "excluded synods" fell naturally and without much trouble into the New-School organization. In some quarters there arose, however, strong debate as to which body the allegiance of individual churches should be given. A majority of the then existing church at Florida decided to adhere to the New-School Assembly. This compelled those who deemed it their duty to sustain the Old-School Assembly to form a new organization. This no doubt cost a struggle of feeling in the minds of those on both sides of this discussion. The church thus rent in twain in Florida was the united church of their fathers; the church whose services once celebrated in the rudely-built meeting-house of primitive times had come down to them sacred with the precious memories of three generations. It was the church under whose teachings they had each formed their own strong opinions,—opinions of which Presbyterians have ever been stout defenders.

The second church was organized in 1839. Its first sessional records are dated in September of that year. William Smith was appointed a delegate to Presbytery. Under date of September 23d, at a meeting of Session, there were present Rev. Charles Cummins, moderator, and Elders Daniel Poppino, William Smith. Four additional elders were chosen about that time, namely, John Fox, William Taylor, Renald House, Amzi A. Jessup.

The records do not show what members then constituted the second church. Rev. Mr. Cummins, with Elders Poppino and Smith, joined the second organization, and as they claimed to some extent to be the regular succession of the original church, they undoubtedly claimed nominally that the roll of church-members as it existed prior to the division all belonged to them, acknowledging only as an existing fact that certain members were actually adhering to the first church. However this may be, the book of records does not give the names of the members who formed the second church in 1839.

The pastors of this church were as follows: Rev. Charles Cummins, who was the pastor from the organization until 1849; Rev. W. A. Westcott, who ministered to the church from 1849 to February, 1860; Rev. Edsall Ferrier, whose services began May, 1860, and continued until the fall of 1865; Rev. H. A. Harlow, who began his labors in the fall of 1866, and continued until the spring of 1872; Rev. Elijah Burnett, who preached from February, 1873, to the winter or spring of 1875; Rev. David McLeod, whose labors commenced in July, 1875.

Under his pastorate a movement to unite the two churches took place. The distinction between Old School and New having been done away in the general church, and the two Assemblies in the United States become one some years before, it was perhaps natural that an effort should be made to unite individual churches in places where two existed and the population did not seem to require two organizations of the same faith and order. The result proved that the movement was premature in Florida, but nevertheless it was made. The formal union was consummated May 15, 1878, the petition to Presbytery having been presented April 16th. The effort proved unsatisfactory, and it was soon discovered that the two societies should each have gone on with their work as individual churches. To retrace these later steps was a work of difficulty. It was, however, done; the second church was again formed Sept. 29, 1879. Of this organization Rev. S. D. Noyes became the acting pastor at the time of the reorganization, and remains in that position at the present time (October, 1880). The elders are Walter Sayer, William L. Vail, George Fox, William T. Goble, Charles Jessup, and John Houston. The trustees are twelve in number; William L. Vail is president of the board, Thomas J. Taylor clerk, and Samuel H. Thompson treasurer. Charles Jessup, superintendent of the Sunday-school. There is a library of 200 volumes. The society have a large and convenient house of worship, erected soon after the division of 1839. They also have a manse situated on Main Street near Conkling Avenue. In its present organization the society is but a little more than a year old, yet it has evidently entered upon its work with vigor and efficiency.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF WARWICK VILLAGE

executed a certificate of incorporation June 4, 1849. The paper was signed by Jonathan S. Wood and James Green. The trustees chosen were Jonathan S. Wood, James Green, and Samuel Wilson.

This was the legal organization of a society that had existed for some years before that date. From 1830 to 1840 the Methodist preachers held occasional services in Warwick village. These early meetings were in private houses. In 1840 they held a series of revival meetings in a tent pitched near the ground where the Catholic church now stands. Many conversions took place, and a strong impulse was given to Methodist work at that time. They were able immediately to erect a house of worship, which they thereafter occupied until 1867, when it was sold to the Catholics, and the new Methodist church was erected in another part of the village.

For a correct history of the early introduction of Methodism in Warwick, reference must be made to the General History (p. 134) in this volume, from which it appears that the first service was at the house of Col. David McCamley, in 1786. A class was organized at Sugar-Loaf, at the house of Samuel Ketcham, in 1789. Henry Wisner was its leader in 1809, at which time there was also a class in Warwick, Cornelius Jones, leader, and one in Amity, James Benjamin, leader.* It was not until 1839, however, that a society was formally established. The pioneer of this later organization is said to have been Mr. John Ketchum, who came here about 1837. He lived in the house, still standing, opposite the site of the old Methodist church. About that time Rev. Seymour Landon opened new appointments in town. In Warwick village meetings were held in the tavern of Mr. Thomas Ward, in the old store-house that stood on or near the present site of J. H. Van Duzer's store.

* Mr. Cornelius Lazear is traditionally mentioned as the first class-leader in the county, but the tradition is not justified by written records. His house at New Milford was perhaps a place for holding meetings, but the date of his services as a leader is evidently some years later than that of the persons named above.

The Ward tavern was on the site of the present Wayanda House. The tent-meetings, already mentioned, commenced on the 6th of September, 1840, and were conducted by Daniel Ostrander, presiding elder, and Eli Denniston, the preacher in charge, with his colleague, Sylvester S. Strong. They were continued until October 8th. A class was formed, of which Mr. Oscar B. Welling was appointed leader. There were only three in full membership,—Mr. Welling and his wife, and Mary Case; with them were eighteen on probation. July 13, 1841, a meeting was held to take steps for building. Trustees were chosen and a resolution to procure incorporation adopted. It does not seem to have been recorded until 1849, as given at the beginning of this notice. The contract to build the house of worship was signed Jan. 29, 1842, the contractor being Warren S. Rumsey; the price for the completed house being $1675. The building was known as the Wesleyan Chapel of Warwick, and was dedicated Dec. 1, 1842, Rev. E. E. Griswold preaching the sermon. Thus the Methodist Church of Warwick was fairly established, and it has continued steadily on its appropriate work to the present time.

In 1864 the Sugar-Loaf Circuit was divided, and Warwick with Edenville constituted one charge, the Rev. D. D. Gillespie being the first preacher under the new arrangement. His successor was Rev. D. W. C. Van Gaasbeck, who came to Warwick in the spring of 1866. Under his pastorate the new church edifice on Main Street was built, at a cost of $18,000. It was dedicated March 5, 1869, sermons being preached by Rev. R. L. Dashiell and Rev. C. D. Foss. About this time also the Edenville Church erected a new edifice at an expense of $5000, and it was dedicated March 10, 1870, Rev. J. B. Wakely and Rev. H. H. Birkins preaching on the occasion. At Warwick, the present parsonage on South Street was purchased a few years since for $4000, an earlier house having been sold for $1900. Camp-meetings in this vicinity have been held near "Aunt Fanny Lewis' spring," so called, on the Henry Benedict farm, and also near the "Houston Spring." A debt remaining from all the various enterprises of about $5000 was raised in 1878, by a single day's work, a series of meetings being held at different houses. Well might a local writer say "this was a red-letter day in the history of this church." The present organization (October, 1880) comprises the following officers:

Pastor, Rev. Wm. Colden; Stewards, Charles R. Cline, Elihu B. Taylor, Peter S. Post, S. T. Lazear, Edward C. Armstrong, J. M. Burt, J. H. Vreeland, J. Hunter; Trustees, J. H. Vreeland, James B. Demerest, Jacob Quackenbush, John B. Knapp, Elihu B. Taylor, J. M. Burt, P. S. Post, Thomas Pitts; Sunday-school Superintendent, Edwin S. Caldwell; volumes in the library, 300; communicants, 138.

We add a list of preachers from 1837 to the present time. The appointments included in Sugar-Loaf

Circuit in 1837 were Sugar-Loaf, Florida, Edenville, Warwick, Bellvale, Oxford, Goshen, Washingtonville, Monroe Church, Greenville, Little Pond, Long Pond, Monroe Works, and Mount Eve:

G. Smith, C. M. Dibble, J. P. Hermance; 1846, Thomas Newman, J. P. Hermance, J. W. Lefevre, Henry Wright. METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF NEW MILFORD.

Services by ministers of the Methodist Church were held in this neighborhood very early.† This pioneer work soon induced the organization of a class, but the class-papers seem to have been lost, and the names of the founders of this church are not preserved. The house of worship was erected in 1838. The charge belonged to the New Jersey Conference until 1873, when it was transferred to the New York Conference. Prior to that date the records are with the Vernon Church, of New Jersey. The Edenville Church had been included in the Warwick charge. In 1873 Edenville and New Milford were united under the name of Edenville charge, and so remain at the present time. The pastors have been as follows: 1873-75, Rev. C. C. Miller; 1876-78, Rev. M. S. Tuthill; 1879, Rev. J. B. Heroy; 1880, Rev. C. F. Winan. The present stewards and trustees are S. Y. Layton, Thomas Corey, and A. Vail. A Sunday-school is in active operation with a good attendance. These brief facts give the outline of a steady work of fifty years, the details of which are not preserved for the pen of the historian; but the influence for good wielded by this church, and the results achieved, remain a permanent blessing to this community.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF EDEN.

This society effected a legal organization Sept. 11, 1822. The proceedings were signed by Eleazer McCamley and Andrew Shorter. The trustees chosen were John Bloom, Eleazer McCamley, Cornelius Jones, George Jones, Samuel Gardner, Peter Van Cort, J. C. Ketchum, Elias Fancher, Andrew Shorter. Edenville appointment was connected with Warwick charge down to 1873; since that date it has been united with New Milford, and its pastors are given in the notice of that church. The present stewards are R. Wisner, S. Green, S. B. Houston, and A. Houston. The trustees are H. B. Edwards, W. Dunsinberre, A. Houston, and R. Wisner.

The pastor of this church and of New Milford reports ninety-six members, two Sunday-schools, with twenty teachers and eighty members.

BELLVALE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The first record of the Bellvale class in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church in Orange County was made in 1809,—Henry Stead, presiding elder; John Roberson, James Coleman, circuit preachers; Andrew Cunningham and Benjamin Westlake, local preachers. It was reported at a quarterly meeting as a part of the New Windsor Circuit. The quarterage paid was $2.76; the class-leader, James Cunningham. He also received license to exhort, but afterwards withdrew from the church. The places for preaching were at Mr. William Wisner's and Mr. Ananias Wilson's. The preachers were those of the New Windsor Circuit prior to 1837. (See New Windsor.)

In 1817, William Seymour, a colored man, was licensed to exhort; afterwards he was given a local preacher's license, and for many years preached in the vicinity of Bellvale. As one of the first laborers under God, his name is remembered by some still living in this place. His home, while here, was at the house of William Wisner. His portrait, gift of Mr. Samuel Wilson, is in the Bellvale parsonage. William Seymour died at the house of Isaac Still, in the town of Monroe. He retired for the night, after a very happy meeting during the evening in the place, and when called for breakfast he was found dead in the bed. The Master came, his work ended, and he entered into rest.

Heman Bangs, one of the circuit preachers of 1820, lived in part of William Wisner's house, near where William H. Wisner's house now stands. Preaching was held at Ananias Wilson's, Squire Horton class-leader. His wife, son, Milton, daughter, Julia, and son-in-law, Peter Bennett, Mr. William Wisner, his wife, and a Mrs. Jones, also two slaves in the family of William Wisner (named Joe and Lottie), were members of the class.

1824. This year the class at Bellvale was broken up by what was then known as the "Horse Trial." Mr. William Wisner withdrew from the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Peter Bennett, a class-leader, was expelled, and Messrs. Wilson, Bradner, Wisner, and others removed their names to Sugar-Loaf class. The regular appointment for preaching at Bellvale was abandoned until 1833, when Samuel Wilson,

* He died in the parsonage at Warwick. Feb. 28, 1873.

† See account of Warwick Church.

having experienced religion, invited the preachers on the circuit again to preach at his house.

In 1832, Revs. Silliman and Thomas held an extra meeting at the house of Samuel Wilson, in Bellvale, during which, in the month of November, Mr. Samuel A. Monell, Jonathan S. Wood, Henry B. Wisner, and many others experienced religion. The persons named have been for years the true and warm-hearted friends of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and when the church was divided and its interest suffered at the hands of others they remained steadfast. Following the protracted meeting, a class was organized, and Milton Horton appointed leader. Services were held also at the Red School-house, near Mr. James H. Halllock's farm, and at an old house opposite the Bellvale church, owned at this date, 1880, by Mr. Jonas Quackenbush.

1837. This year the New Windsor Circuit was divided, and the Sugar-Loaf Circuit formed, embracing the following appointments, viz.: Florida, Edenville, Bellvale, Chester, Monroe village, Oxford, Satterly Town, Washingtonville, Blagg's Clove, Highland Mills, Little Long Pond, and Dutch Hollow (now Greenwood Lake), beside preaching in almost every school district on this circuit. Rev. Phineas Rice, presiding elder; Seymour Landon and Wm. Miller, preachers on Sugar-Loaf Circuit.

1838. Seymour Landon and Thomas Newman, preachers.

1839. William Jewett, elder; Eli Denniston and Thomas Newman, preachers.

1840. D. Ostrander, elder; Eli Denniston and Sylvanus S. Strong, preachers.

1841. Wm. M. Ferguson and George Bancroft, preachers.

1842. John Reynolds, Matthew VanDeusen, and Wm. Blaksly, circuit preachers.

1843. John Reynolds, Matthew VanDeusen, and Isaac I. Divine.

1844. Marvin Richardson, presiding elder; Edward Olden and Chas. H. Dibble, preachers.

1845. Edward Olden and John P. Hermance, preachers.

1846. Thomas Newman and J. P. Hermance, preachers, on Sugar-Loaf Circuit.

1846. I. G. Smith and Chas. H. Dibble, preachers, on Monroe Circuit. This year the Sugar-Loaf was divided, and the Monroe Circuit formed. Sugar-Loaf embraced only Sugar-Loaf, Chester, Goshen, Florida, Edenville, Warwick, Bellvale, Demerest School-house, and Greenwood Lake. In 1841 the upper part of the school-house at Bellvale was furnished and seated for holding meeting. The committee who circulated the subscription was W. H. Wisner and Edward Burt. The room was to be occupied by Baptist, Reformed Dutch, and Methodist jointly, and the building was called the Tabernacle.

1847. Thomas Newman and Henry Wright, preachers.

1848. Ira Ferris and Marcus Cumer, preachers; Wm. Jewett, presiding elder.

1848. Goshen was taken from Sugar-Loaf Circuit, and Rev. C. Isham stationed there.

1849. Ira Ferris, Wm. N. Nelson, preachers. This year a protracted meeting was held in the Tabernacle, and the same winter a gracious revival attended the labors of Henry D. Wright, a local preacher at the present Greenwood Lake charge, following which a subscription was raised, lot purchased, and church built at Greenwood Lake. At that time the Greenwood Lake class was connected with the Southfield charge.

1850. S. Martindale, presiding elder; Humphry Humphries and C. S. Brown, preachers.

1851. A. C. Fields and C. S. Brown, preachers.

1852. A. M. Osbon, presiding elder; A. C. Fields and J. Millard, preachers. During this year a subscription was circulated to build a church at Bellvale. On Feb. 8, 1853, a meeting was called of the society, and the following persons elected as a board of trustees, viz.: Mr. Calvin Bradner, Townsend Wright, Samuel Wilson, Benjamin H. Bennett, Thomas Brooks, Wm. H. Wisner, John R. Wilson. Samuel Wilson, chairman; John R. Wilson, secretary; Wm. H. Wisner, treasurer.

On the 11th of February, 1853, at a meeting of the board of trustees, it was resolved to build a church 50 feet by 32 feet, with 22 posts, and belfry, also a gallery across the end of the church, and a basement 30 feet by 18 feet, with 7 feet ceiling. Resolved to accept a lot given by Mr. Samuel Wilson. Immediately following this work was commenced on the lot for a foundation. The corner-stone was laid by Rev. J. B. Wakely, then pastor of the Forsyth Street Church, New York City. The corner-stone was given by Mr. David Stevens. The mason-work was under the supervision of Mr. Edward Mills, the carpenter-work being under the supervision of Mr. Adolphus Bradner. The timber for the entire building was cut on the farm of Wm. H. Wisner, and sawed in the old saw-mill just above where the church now stands.

Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson, wife of Daniel Wilson, one of the first stewards of the old New Windsor Circuit, and mother of John R. Wilson, one of the trustees, gave the bell for the church.

1853. W. H. Bloomer and J. Millard, preachers.

1854. William H. Bloomer and George Dikeman, preachers.

This year (1854) the church was dedicated. Rev. Hiram Matterson preached the dedicatory sermon from Matt. xxvi. 8: "To what purpose is this waste?" Rev. A. M. Osbon, presiding elder, dedicated the church. A choir under the direction of Mr. Milton Younges, with an instrument of Mr. Townsend Wright, occupied the gallery and conducted the singing. Entertainment was furnished at the houses of Mr. Samuel Wilson, John R. Wilson, and William H. Wisner's for the many persons attending the dedication from distant parts of the circuit. About this time a church trial at Sugar-Loaf grew out of the renting of the pews at Sugar-Loaf Church, resulting in the expulsion of one member at Sugar-Loaf Church. This difficulty in the church was made the occasion for a division of the society at Bellvale. One of the preachers then in charge withdrew from the Methodist Episcopal Church, and with him a large number of those recently brought into the church. They worshiped at the Tabernacle, organized a Sunday-school, named the society after their minister, and united with the Protestant Methodist; they continued until the year 1867, when they dissolved.

1855. L. M. Vincent, presiding elder; C. F. Pelton and Rev. — Lockwood, preachers.

1856. C. F. Pelton and J. H. Hawxhurst, preachers.

1857. J. H. Hawxhurst and Richard Ammerman, preachers.

1858. Joel Croft and R. Ammerman, preachers.

1859. Joel Croft and I. W. Jones, preachers.

1864. This year Bellvale and Greenwood Lake were separated from the circuit and became a charge by themselves, having one preacher between them. R. M. Roberts, preacher-in-charge.

1865. Horace Wood, preacher-in-charge.

1868. Mark E. Rude, preacher-in-charge.

1869. J. H. Lane, preacher-in-charge.

During this year a subscription was circulated to build a parsonage at Bellvale. About $800 were pledged. The cost of the building to be erected was estimated at about $1500. Work was commenced in the spring of 1870; the house was finished that year, costing $2200. After this the pastors, by subscription, reduced the debt of $1400 down to $1000, which amount still remains.

1871. C. C. Miller, preacher-in-charge.

1873. J. W. Felvus, preacher-in-charge.

1874. C. Rheor, preacher-in-charge.

1875. A. N. Mulnix, preacher-in-charge.

1878. N. Brusie, preacher-in-charge.

1880. F. F. Angevine, preacher-in-charge.

This year, 1881, the church has 60 members and 5 probationers. Service is held at Bellvale morning and evening, and at Greenwood Lake in the afternoon.

THE UNION METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF STERLING, town of Warwick, executed a certificate of incorporation April 7, 1856. The proceedings were signed by David B. Banker and Zenas Covel. The trustees chosen were John May, Samuel Green, Charles T. Ford, Samuel Duvall, and Peter Barnes. The meeting was held "at the school-house where the congregation usually worshiped."

THE AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF FLORIDA

executed a certificate of incorporation Dec. 2, 1862. It was signed by Henry Johnson, and the trustees named therein were William Jacklin, William Matizer, and Henry Harris.

This undertaking was not successful, though a lot was purchased and some preparations made to build a house of worship.

ST. STEPHEN'S CHURCH, WARWICK VILLAGE (CATHOLIC).

This society was organized as a mission-work in connection with the Catholic Church of Goshen. In 1865, the Methodists desiring to build a new church, sold their old property to the Catholics for $1600. It was immediately refitted, and consecrated in August of that year as St. Stephen's, and services have been maintained since that date. Much energy has been displayed in raising money for church purposes. The house of worship is a convenient chapel, not showy nor costly; but with wise prudence the church has declined to enter upon the building of a larger structure, involving the risk of debt and embarrassment. There were not more than five or six families interested in Catholic services at the time the enterprise commenced in Warwick. The property bought cost this small band $3000. It was assuming a serious responsibility, but by steady, prudent, and systematic work it has all been paid except about $900, and the pastor confidently expects to extinguish that in a few months. The priests from Goshen ministering at St. Stephen's were Father O'Callahan, succeeded by Father O'Hare, and lastly, Father Keoghan. In July, 1880, the appointment was taken from Goshen. Warwick became a separate pastorate, to which Monroe is attached. Rev. Edward J. Byrnes was assigned to the pastoral work here in July, and immediately entered upon his duties. The members number about 200. The Sunday-school, with two ladies as teachers, and about 50 scholars, is superintended personally by the pastor, Rev. Edward J. Byrnes.

CALVARY BAPTIST CHURCH.

This is located at Warwick village, and is a young and vigorous organization. The church was formed on the 4th of January, 1866, and with only six members, viz.: Ezra Sanford, Mary E. Van Duzer, Anna E. Peck, Adaline Harrison, Martha Fancher, and Rev. George F. Love. The movement was undertaken in connection with the preaching of Rev. George F. Love, who became the first pastor, and remained until March 28, 1868. The pulpit was not allowed to remain vacant, but, in anticipation of the close of Mr. Love's services, the church had already engaged (March 11th) Rev. Mr. Dwight Spencer as stated supply, who continued to labor in this capacity for nearly nine months. The Rev. Charles A. Cordo was then settled as pastor, commencing his labors in Warwick June 5, 1869. He remained nearly six years, his services terminating May 2, 1875. The pulpit was supplied by various ministers during the summer. In September Rev. Daniel C. Litchfield accepted a call to this church, and commenced his labors in October. He has remained to the present time, and is just entering upon the sixth year of his pastorate.

The society for a time worshiped in the public hall of the Van Duzer building, but active measures were taken very soon to erect a house of worship. An eligible lot was secured on West Street and the present handsome church erected. The edifice was dedicated Aug. 26, 1868.

The parsonage stands adjacent to the church, on the same lot. The grounds of both are laid out with taste, displaying the effect of careful adornment and cultivation. Together they constitute a handsome church property. The whole expenditure was about $20,000; and, notwithstanding the reduction in the value of real estate within the last few years, the property is yet valued at $15,000.

As the result of all these movements by a society so small in numbers, a debt of about $3500 remained unpaid for a few years. The present pastor two years since determined that this ought to be paid and could be paid. By the quiet circulation of a subscription, with no public demonstration, the whole amount was raised in about one week. It was followed by a jubilee-meeting, March 1, 1878.

An active and vigorous Sunday-school has been maintained from the date of the organization to the present time. The contributions of the church have been unusually large. The congregation raises annually about $1300 for the ordinary current expenses. Including the erection of the church and parsonage, this may be stated at an average of $2500 a year for the whole fourteen years; and bringing the statement to an individual basis, it amounts to forty-two dollars per member each year since 1866.

The present officers are Rev. D. C. Litchfield, pastor; Isaac N. Baldwin, Charles L. Morehouse, deacons; Ezra Sandford, now in his eighty-sixth year, has also been a deacon in the church from its organization and occasionally officiates at the present time. J. N. Baldwin is the present clerk, and C. A. Crissey treasurer. The number of communicants at the present time is 76. The Sunday-school has 150 volumes in the library, 103 pupils, 18 of whom are members of the church, 8 teachers, and an average attendance of 68.

THE METHODIST CHURCH OF MOUNT BETHEL executed a certificate of incorporation Aug. 3, 1870. It was signed by Darius P. Merritt and George M. Ackerson, and the trustees therein named were Darius P. Merritt, Stephen Morse, Melvin R. Green, Wallace P. M. Horton, and Henry Hyatt.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

On the Belden Burt farm is a very ancient burial-ground. There are no monuments with inscriptions to give any clue to the names of those buried there.

It is, however, a local tradition that this was the early Decker burying-ground. As Lawrence Decker is supposed to have been the earliest settler in this part of Warwick (the deed from Benjamin Aske to him being dated 1719), the fact of burials here by his family is at least probable. The graves are said to be of unusual length, indicating very tall people, and this is further stated to have been characteristic of the early Deckers.

The burying-ground in connection with the Reformed Church was in use, it is said, before it was deeded to the church in 1770. Mr. Pelton, before quoted, states that this is shown by stones in the yard. But the earliest dates found by the writer are the following: "Hannah, wife of Ebenezer Gregory, died Dec. 21, 1789, aged twenty-two;" "Anna, wife of William Feagles, died July 8, 1771, aged seventy-four;" "Alida Johnson, died July 29, 1777, aged forty-nine;" "Cornelius Paulding, Jr., died May 17, 1778, aged six years." It is possible that on the sunken field-stones which mark most of the early graves dates might be discovered prior to 1770. It is evident that the early settlers are buried here in large numbers.

The Florida cemetery is now being laid out with considerable care, drive-ways made and walks established. The grounds include in part an old burial-place, though not dating back to the time of early settlement. There are monuments by the families of Jennings, Houston, Jackson, Lawrence, Shultz, Vandroef, and Wheeler. In this ground is the Seward vault. Upon a marble tablet in the front, over the iron door, is the simple inscription, "The family vault of Samuel S. Seward, 1839."

The cemetery around the Florida First Presbyterian church was doubtless a historical landmark before it was torn to pieces, and its oldest stones removed and lost or miscellaneously piled up. Stones are said to have been taken away that were one hundred and thirteen years old. The destruction of old graveyards is a serious historical loss, as well as a violation of esthetic taste and precious family traditions. There is land enough for trade and business and churches without building upon the graves of the fathers. There is one stone in the part left erected to the memory of "Maj. John Poppino, who died March 7, 1828, aged one hundred and one years and ten months;" another to "William Armstrong, who died March 11, 1805, aged eighty-two."

At Amity is a cemetery securely walled and showing considerable care. Without any attempt at elaborate ornamentation, it is yet cleared of rubbish and well mowed, giving a chance for a clean grass-sod to form, one of the best methods (where expensive plans cannot be carried out) to place an old burial-place in good condition. Thorough clearing out of brush and careful, frequent mowing will give any burial-place a creditable appearance. A portion of this ground contains the early graves, marked only by field-stones, with neither names nor dates. There are several monuments of good proportions, and one brick vault covered with a tablet, "Sacred to the memory of Martha, wife of Alexander Denniston."

THE WARWICK CEMETERY.

This was founded by an association organized at a meeting held in the Wawayanda Hotel, Nov. 27, 1866. Gabriel Wisner was appointed chairman, and William D. Irwin secretary. The trustees named were Thomas S. Vandervort, Gabriel Wisner, William D. Irwin, Thomas Welling, Cornelius J. Lazear, Grinnell Burt, Richard Wisner, George W. Sanford, and Israel Willesdorf. The proceedings were verified by the officers before Mahlon Cooper, notary public, November 28th, and recorded November 29th.

The association purchased and laid out a tract of rolling upland in the centre of the valley, not far from the village of Warwick. The selection was made with excellent judgment and discriminating taste. There are two distinct elevations, each sloping gently from the higher ground to the lower, and separated by a smooth valley. The rugged features retained in some rural cemeteries of rock and gorge and wild ravine are not found here, and the effect of their absence is on the whole pleasing. Here are none but soft and gentle lines, easy grades, and a smiling landscape, that suggest life and love and beauty and immortality, rather than the harshness, the pallor, and the ruin of death. The contour of the ground was favorable to the artificial arrangements desirable, and those in charge have availed themselves of this feature with excellent success.

It has many monuments of varied beauty, strength, and symmetry. Among the principal of these may be mentioned those belonging to the families of Houston, Fitzgerald, Wright, Burt, Denton, Vandervort, Mapes, Hawxhurst, Jennings, Bradner, Christie, Quick, Wheeler, Wood, Husted, Baird, Lawrence, Youmans, Thompson, Conklin, Brooks, Rumsey, Servin, Forshee, Magie, Sayer, Bennet, Wisner, Sly, Sanford, Jones, Carpenter, Arnout, Lain, Pelton, Post, Irwin, Lazear, Nanny, Randolph, Ogden, Randall, and Clark. The smaller memorial stones are in good order, and of excellent proportions.

The president of the association is George Sanford, and the superintendent John Jenkins. Two workmen are constantly employed.

IX.—SOCIETIES, LIBRARIES, BANKS, INCORPORATIONS, Etc.

WARWICK MASONIC LODGE.*

This was established in December, 1863, its complete organization dating from the 1st of January following. The first officers were Elisha M. Smith, W. M.; Benjamin Corwin, S. W.; Charles W. Douglass, J. W.; Edward T. Gould, S. D.; Nicholas K.

Crotty, J. D.; James D. Roe, Sec.; Maurice Hoyt, Treas.; Daniel Dikeman, Tyler.

The succession of Masters has been Elisha M. Smith, 1864-65; John Cowdrey, 1866-68; John D. Miller, 1869-70; John Cowdrey, 1871-72; Samuel J. Stewart, 1873-75; John McWilliams, 1876-77; Theodore H. Cooper, 1878; John Sutton, 1879.

The officers for 1880 are Theodore H. Cooper, W. M.; Alex. G. McAllister, S. W.; Samuel S. Van Saun, J. W.; John Sayer, Treas.; J. E. V. Miller, Sec.; John W. Clason, S. D.; John Carson, J. D.; George W. Sayer, S. M. C.; E. S. Colwell, J. M. C.; John Mabee, Chaplain; John W. Houston, Marshal; Norman L. Dill, Tyler. The lodge have a room conveniently arranged, with good furniture, and are in excellent financial condition, having vested funds to the amount of $5000.

WAWAYANDA LODGE, No. 34, I. O. O. F.

This was organized at Warwick village in 1867. It was a renewal of the old Goshen charter of very early date, which had been surrendered. Several of the members residing in Warwick, or removing there, desired to organize, and obtained the renewal. The books of the lodge were burned in January, 1879. It is understood, however, that the opening at Warwick was by five members,—Jesse Wood, William Smith, F. J. Haskins, Henry June, and John Mabee; that William R. Wood and John McVey were initiated at the first meeting, and that among the first officers were Jesse Wood, N. G.; William Smith, V. G.; and William R. Wood, Sec. The lodge has continued in regular work since its formation. It has a vested fund of nearly $2000. The present officers (October, 1880) are A. P. Shaw, N. G.; L. H. Peiltz, V. G.; F. Kohberger, R. S.; Dr. T. V. Roe, P. S.; Sylvester Case, Treas.; S. T. Lazear, Chaplain.

PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY.

This order has four granges in the town of Warwick; they have formed a convenient arrangement for purchasing at wholesale, for consultation over the best method of farming, for mutual help in disposing of the crops raised, and for social enjoyment. The first Master of Warwick Grange, No. 273, was James B. Wood, Jr. His son, Enos S. Wood, was secretary. At the present time John Sutton is the Master, and his daughter, Mrs. William D. Ackerman, is secretary. The other granges are located at Florida, Amity, and Lake Station. The one at Amity established and carries on a creamery.

WARWICK CORNET BAND.

This favorite organization with the citizens of Warwick was formed Dec. 1, 1878, with fifteen members. It has the same number now, and mostly the same individuals. They have a very handsome uniform. Their instruments are of superior make and owned by the members, and their uniform is in good taste, not excelled in beauty or quality by any in the county.

* Prior to this was old St. John's Lodge of Warwick, organized March 20, 1790. (See General History.)

The instructor of the band is Prof. Isaac Collins, of Newburgh. The leader is James Thorp, and the secretary and treasurer J. H. Wood.

THE TEMPERANCE LEAGUE OF WARWICK.

This association was organized about three years since. Its objects are to develop public sentiment in favor of temperance, secure the election of commissioners of excise opposed to license, and by judicious action enforce the law as far as possible. It proposes to make an annual canvass of the town for the furtherance of these plans. That it has met with a reasonable degree of success is evident from the increased vote in favor of no license. In March, 1879, 750 votes were cast on the excise question, of which 613 were in favor of license, and 137 against. In March, 1880, 982 votes were cast on the same question, 597 of which were for license, and 384 against. A majority of 576 reduced to 213, and on a largely increased vote, is sufficient encouragement to the society to go forward with its work. Its membership comprises the clergymen of the place and many of the leading business men. Its present officers (October, 1880), are Rev. D. C. Litchfield, president; Rev. William E. Ketchum, vice-president;* C. A. Crissey, secretary; Grier Pierson, treasurer.

Connected with this society is a glee club, led by E. B. Taylor, adding with its stirring songs and excellent music a feature of great interest to the meetings.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION OF WARWICK VILLAGE.

This is a recent enterprise of a few Christian workers belonging to the various churches. It was organized in December, 1879. Miller's public hall was rented permanently by the association, and a general prayer-meeting established at three o'clock Sunday afternoons. This has been regularly maintained to the present time, having a large attendance during the winter months, and well sustained through the summer season. No other definite work has yet been undertaken, but steps are being taken to open a public reading-room, and establish a library in connection with the same. It is also in contemplation to hold meetings to some extent in neighborhoods not supplied with religious services within a few miles of Warwick village. The present officers (October, 1880) are E. S. Colwell, president; Henry P. Demerest, vice-president; George A. Sanford, secretary; Rensselaer J. Wisner, treasurer.

THE ARMY AND NAVY ASSOCIATION OF VETERANS AT WARWICK.

This was organized Jan. 1, 1880, and holds regular meetings on the first Tuesday evening of each month. All honorably discharged Union soldiers or sailors are entitled to membership. Its objects are mutual aid, social enjoyment, the bringing together of comrades in the late struggle, and the rendering of appropriate honors to the dead. Under the auspices of this association decoration services were held the present year. The present officers (October, 1880) are James W. Benedict, Commander; John W. Houston, Senior Vice-Commander; Norman L. Dill, Junior Vice-Commander; William B. Van Houten, Adjutant; James W. Mallery, Quartermaster; Dr. T. H. Cooper, Surgeon; Rev. D. C. Litchfield, Chaplain; William J. Miles, Sentinel.

THE WARWICK LIBRARY

was founded by an association formed Dec. 12, 1814, at the house of Isaac Dolsen. The trustees named in the certificate were William W. Brooks, Job Noble, Rev. John J. Christie, Benjamin S. Hoyt, John W. Smith, Nathaniel Jones, and Robert Crary. A small library was bought, and the books put in circulation. It shows considerable literary taste at that early period that such an attempt was made. It lasted but a few years. The books were scattered, and the "Warwick Library" passed into history.

THE FRANKLIN LIBRARY

was legally organized March 10, 1814, with John M. Satterly as chairman of the meeting. The trustees named in the certificate were Charles Cummins, James Wood, John M. Satterly, Thomas Allison, Thomas Jackson, Benjamin I. Seward, and John J. Wheeler. The paper was verified by the chairman before Judge John Steward, March 19, 1814. This shows something of the literary enterprise at Florida in an early day.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF WARWICK.

This institution was organized in the winter of 1864. The articles of association were approved by the comptroller of the currency March 14, 1864, and the bank was opened for business April 2d of the same year. The first board of directors consisted of John L. Welling, Samuel C. Welling, F. M. Woodhull, Grinnell Burt, John Cowdrey, Richard Wisner, C. H. Demerest, George W. Sanford, and James A. Thompson. John L. Welling was the first president of the bank. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, C. H. Demerest, Jan. 29, 1878. John Cowdrey was chosen vice-president at the organization, and still holds that office. Mahlon Cooper was the first cashier. He was succeeded by Gabriel S. Holbert, Oct. 22, 1864. The present cashier, C. A. Crisses, followed Mr. Holbert, commencing his services Jan. 1, 1869. The capital of the bank was named at $75,000, but there was so much anxiety to secure the stock (five per cent. premium being offered before going into business) that it was immediately increased to $100,000. Business was done at first in rooms of the Van Duzer Building. The present, handsome and convenient edifice was erected by the bank in 1868, and occupied in March, 1869. The present board of directors (October, 1880) comprises the following names: C. H. Demarest, John L. Welling, Thomas Welling, James C. Sly, P. E. Sanford, G. W. Sanford, Grinnell Burt, John Cowdrey, Richard Wisner.

* Removed from town.

WARWICK SAVINGS-BANK.

This institution was organized pursuant to the general act passed May, 1875. The bank opened for business Jan. 1, 1876, with the following officers and trustees: Thomas Burt, president and treasurer; Thomas G. Pierson, first vice-president; William C. Eager, second vice-president; William J. Sly, William L. Ogden, DeWitt C. Jayne, Samuel Pelton, I. V. Wheeler, Cornelius J. Lazear, C. H. Wilson, James H. Holly, J. E. Waterbury, James Wisner, A. James Burt, John Ackerman, William M. Sanford, Thomas Welling. Thomas Burt was the first president, and was succeeded by James H. Holly, now in office. Thomas Burt has been treasurer from the first, and the general business is transacted by him. The sum on deposit now (October, 1880) is $182,000. This was the first bank organized under the new law of 1875.

THE WARWICK VALLEY FARMERS' MILK ASSOCIATION

executed a certificate of incorporation April 1, 1872. The objects were stated to be the following, viz.: "To work up and dispose of a surplus of milk whenever there shall be a flush of milk, or whenever in the opinion of the trustees it shall be for the interest of the association to do so." The corporate stock was fixed at $12,000. The first trustees named were Jesse Holbert, Nicholas N. Ryerson, Isaac V. Wheeler, George W. Sayer, Richard Wisner, Wm. L. Benedict, James Wisner, Alexander H. Galloway. The shares were to be 240, at $50 each.

Of this board, Mr. Isaac V. Wheeler is deceased, and Mr. Ryerson retired; John Vandevort and James Ball were chosen members, and the rest of the board remain the same as at the time of the organization. Thomas Welling has been president of the association from the first, and C. H. Demarest also secretary and treasurer. The company have a large and convenient building 70 by 40, and thoroughly supplied with the best of modern fixtures and machinery. They ship milk and cream to New York direct, manufacture some butter, but do their largest business in cheese. Their cheese-room, when nearly filled, presents a fine sight. This property was purchased of Thomas Smith, who had been doing business in the same line for a time.

THOMAS SMITH'S CREAMERY.

This is also located at Warwick village, and is an unincorporated private enterprise. It was established soon after the sale of the other property to the above milk association. The shipment of milk and cream and the manufacture of butter and cheese (mostly the latter) constitute Mr. Smith's business here. The shipments are all to his own New York sales-house, where he is himself located.

THE PRODUCERS' MILK COMPANY, WARWICK, was formed April 18, 1870. The objects were stated in the certificate as follows: "To purchase, make, manufacture, produce, or vend milk or cream." The capital stock was stated at $25,000, divided into 250 shares. The trustees named were Pierson E. Sanford, of Warwick; David P. Brockway, of New York City; Charles T. Pegg, of New York City; and L. H. Sanford, of the town of Warwick. This was mostly a New York business for the sale of dairy productions; the supplies, however, coming from the vicinity of Warwick, and for various reasons incorporated in Orange County.

X.—PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR OF SPECIAL NOTE.

There are neither battle-grounds nor encampments of armies to be described in connection with the fair valleys of Warwick. Doubtless the Indians loved these haunts, and had their favorite places; of these little is known save the traditions connected with the Welling farm. There is said to have been an Indian settlement known to the early white men as Mistucky.* There is little romance in the name, but the imagination may invest those now cultivated fields with all the usual tales of aboriginal scenes; love and war, and council fires, and Indian eloquence may all have combined to render the place classic ground in Indian story.

CHOUCKHASS HILL.

In near connection with this we have the following from the article of Grinnell Burt before quoted:

"My great-grandfather, Daniel Burt, purchased some six hundred acres, extending from the Beardsley purchase up to and including Mistucky, then an Indian village. Chouckhass, the ruling chief, was one of the twelve grantors who signed the deed for the Wawayanda Patent, there lived and died and was buried. Years after, when no trace was left of the Indian village, the bones of the old chief were plowed up, and that old patriot, Gen. Hathorn, gave to them a decent sepulture."

That the Tories in the time of the Revolution had hiding-places in this town and routes of travel through it is also probable, yet little or nothing is known concerning them.

When the excavations for the water-works was being made, a skeleton was dug up beside which there were some relics, as kneec-buckles and other articles of dress.

BIRTHPLACE OF WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

The old residence of Judge Samuel Seward, in which William H. Seward was born, stands upon the east side of Main Street but a few doors north of the old village church. It is a low, one-story, gambrel-roofed house, and is a dwelling of considerable age, though in good preservation, having been kept neatly painted. It was sold some years ago. It is now owned by William E. Mapes, of Goshen, and occupied by tenants. It may easily be identified by strangers visiting Florida, as there is standing near it an American sycamore-tree, a tall, handsome specimen, with variegated trunk and well-balanced symmetrical top.

* Mistokutsky.

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The people of Warwick are mostly engaged in agriculture. Some of the finest farms in the county are to be found in this town. The valley of the Warwick Creek and the lower slopes of the adjacent hills are fertile, yielding abundant rewards in return for diligent cultivation. The farmers are evidently enterprising, taking a just pride in their occupation; there is a neatness of cultivation, a general air of thrift and energy displayed in good fences, convenient and spacious farm buildings, and improved stock, all of which is exceedingly commendable, and rarely surpassed in the county or even in the State. In the western portion of the town are the celebrated Drowned Lands, of rich, deep soil, and so productive that it is no wonder immigrants were attracted there long before the Revolutionary war. Great attention has been given to the county fairs by the farmers of Warwick; the recent one of 1880, held at Warwick village, equaling any of its long list of predecessors in the interest shown and in the variety and abundance of the exhibits.

The manufacture of butter, once so celebrated as to have given "Orange County butter" a national reputation, has given way as in other parts of the county to direct shipments of milk. The amounts leaving their various depots every afternoon and evening are simply enormous.

XII.—MILITARY.

The town of Warwick was not organized until after the close of the Revolutionary war. There was, however, quite a thorough settlement of this territory as a part of Goshen Precinct for many years previous. The accounts given and the papers embodied under the head of Early Settlement show a population of such numbers as to have furnished many participants in that great struggle for independence. Their names are found in the military rolls elsewhere given, and in the general chapters upon Revolutionary times. It may be repeated here, however, that Col. Hathorn's regiment, members of which, as well as himself, were conspicuous in the battle of Minisink, had its headquarters in Warwick village. For local movements in the war of 1812 reference is also made to the General History.

WAR OF 1861-65.—OFFICIAL ACTION.

At a special town-meeting held at the house of Thomas S. DeKay, Aug. 8, 1864, resolutions were adopted providing for a tax sufficient to pay $500 bounty to each volunteer for three years, $450 for two years, and $400 for one year. The same sum was voted to any citizen who should furnish a substitute towards filling the quota of the town.

A committee of three was appointed to issue bonds in the name of the town for the purpose of raising the money; to sell said bonds at any price they may be able to negotiate them, not below par, and to pay out the money so obtained to volunteers. The committee were William H. Houston, Grinnell Burt, and William D. Irwin. Further powers were granted to the committee to employ, if necessary, a town agent, and to pay $25 hand-money for each recruit obtained to fill the quota.

Sept. 1, 1864, another special town-meeting was held at the house of E. M. Smith. An appropriation of $100,000 was voted for the purpose of paying bounties. The proceedings of the first meeting were to a certain extent repealed, but the same committee was continued and the same bounties authorized.

Another special town-meeting was held Dec. 22, 1864, at which an appropriation of $100,000 was again voted for the payment of bounties. The committee appointed were William H. Houston, John M. Bradner, William D. Irwin, and they were fully authorized to take all necessary steps to raise the money, pay the bounties, and fill the quota.

The list annexed has been prepared from the printed muster-in rolls of the State, and from the record in the office of the town clerk, supplemented by inquiries of those who were in the service:

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

EZRA SANFORD.

The progenitor of the Sanford family living in Warwick is believed to have been Thomas de Sandford, one of the companions in arms of William the Conqueror in 1066. He obtained, for meritorious conduct, a grant of the lands in Salop County, England. The family are at present represented on English soil by Thomas Heigh Sandford, who inherited the original manor of Sandford, in Shropshire, England. The name is spelled by various branches of the family Sanford, Samford, and Sandford, though the Warwick descendants have retained the former orthography. The escutcheon of the family is a shield divided per chevron, sable and ermine fields, with three boars' heads couped close supra; crest, a boar's head; motto, Nec temere, nec timide. From the year 1066 to 1550 the chain of descent is broken. During the latter year was born Thomas Sanford, of Shropshire, England, who died leaving a son Thomas, born in 1631, who emigrated from England to Dorchester, Mass., and had six children, among whom was a son, Samuel, who removed from Dorchester to Milford, Mass. To him was born a son, Samuel, who made Newtown, Conn., his home, and was the parent of twelve children. Among his sons were Ebenezer and David, the latter of whom was born in 1711, and died in 1767. He was the earliest representative of the family in Warwick, whence he removed from Newtown. David Sanford had sons,—David, John, Ephraim, and Ezra, the latter of whom was born in Warwick in 1747, and died in 1822. He was united in marriage to Ann Hopper, and had children,—Patience, Matthew, Olive, Olive (2d), Ann, Esther, Hannah, Mary, Ezra, and Dorcas. Of this number, Ezra, who is the subject of this biography, was born Nov. 11, 1793, in Warwick, where his life has been spent. His educational advantages were limited to instruction at the public school of the neighborhood, after which his early life was devoted to labor upon the farm of his father, having during this period served in the war of 1812, for which he now draws a pension. He was married, Oct. 29, 1814, to Miss Adeline Terry, who died Aug. 13, 1875, after a married life embracing sixty-one years. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Sanford were Uriah T., Hester Ann, George W., George W. (2d), Mary E., William M., Julia, Pierson E., Abigail, and Emily, nine of whom grew to mature years.

Mr. Sanford has been during his life a man of remarkable energy and activity. To these qualities may be added that of self-reliance and a keen intuition, which has enabled him to improve the opportunities offered during his busy life and acquire a competence for his advancing years. He has been chiefly engaged in agricultural and milling pursuits, and rarely participated in the excitements incident to public life. In a quiet manner, and with promptness and fidelity, he has availed himself of his franchise,—the badge of American citizenship,—and has failed but once to cast his ballot since he attained his majority. Mr. Sanford has been one of the directors of the Chester National Bank since its organization. He assisted in the construction of the Warwick Valley Railroad, and is also a director of that corporation. Both Mr. and Mrs. Sanford were members of the Warwick Baptist Church, the former having contributed largely towards its construction. Mr. Sanford in his declining years is cheered by the presence of both children and grandchildren, who vie with each other in evidences of filial devotion. It is but one among the many manifestations of the harmony which characterizes this happy family circle.

Benjamin Sayer

BENJAMIN SAYER.

The ancestors of Benjamin Sayer, three brothers, came from England to this country during its early settlement. Two of them located in the Eastern States and the other on Long Island. The Sears of Boston, as also the late Robert Sears, the historian, of New York, belonged to the former branch, while those in Orange County were descendants of the Long Island portion of the family. The latter variously spelled their names Sayer, Sayre, and Sayrs.

Daniel Sayer, the father of Benjamin, on removing to Warwick, located on a farm midway between that village and Bellvale. He first occupied a log house near the mountain-brook at that place, but about the time of the Revolution erected the present stone house known as the Sayer homestead. During the struggle for independence his warmest sympathies were with his country's cause, and his services were called for to help rid the neighborhood of Tories and robbers. In April, 1777, he was one of a company of scouts, commanded by Maj. Henry Wisner, who captured a party of thirteen Tories in the passes of the Monroe mountains, while on their way to New York to join the British. On another occasion he went with a company of home-guards, under Lieut. James Burt, and, assisted by a company of Continental troops, they came upon a band of Tory robbers in the Warwick Mountains, shooting six of them. He was also one of those brave volunteers who guarded Ramapo Pass from the incursions of the enemy during the Revolution.

There were three log houses built near by the Sayer homestead, one stronger than the others, where the women of the vicinity assembled for greater safety during the absence of the men, as in those days Indians and marauders were often troublesome. Farther up the mountain-brook were three other families, by name Hump, Bump, and Ketcham. Three lots on one of the Sayer farms still retain these names.

Daniel Sayer married Lydia Burt, daughter of Daniel, and sister of Hon. James Burt. The descendants of Mrs. Daniel Burt at the time of her death, in 1810, at the age of ninety-four years, numbered no less than five hundred and twenty-four persons.

Benjamin Sayer was the youngest of nine children, four girls and five boys, composing the family of his parents, and was born April 29, 1791, in the old stone house in Warwick, where he was reared and where he died. He largely inherited his mother's temperament and character. She was said to have been a remarkable woman, of noble presence, full of energy, and unfaltering in her devotion to her family and in the performance of her varied duties. She died when Benjamin was only five years old, and he seldom mentioned his mother without tears filling his eyes, for he felt that had she lived his youth would have been beset with fewer difficulties.

Benjamin only attended school in his early days long enough to get a knowledge of the common rudiments of an education, yet throughout his life he never failed to familiarize himself with the current events of the day, to the study of which he ever brought a practical common sense. He always took a great interest in public affairs, both local and general, and, owing to an unusually correct judgment, seldom failed to espouse the right side on almost every question.

In the war of 1812, when volunteers were called for, he obeyed the first tap of the drum, and was the foremost man to respond to his country's call. A few others followed his lead, but failing to secure enough to meet the required quota, were disbanded and a draft ordered. He was not among those drafted. During the late Rebellion he frequently said, if it were not for his partial lameness, he felt like shouldering his musket and marching to fight for the support of the Union, despite his years.

He was married Dec. 6, 1817, at the age of twenty-six years, to Rebecca Forshee, whose parents lived on an adjoining farm, and together they reared a family of eight children, whose names, in the order of their birth, are as follows: John L., William E., Mary E. (who married Benjamin C. Burt), Hannah (married Thomas Burt), Lydia (married John W. Hasbrouck), Ann Eliza, Daniel F., and Sarah C. (married Darius Fancher). All but Mary and Daniel are still living. Ann Eliza lived with her father at the homestead until his death, and contributes to his memory this likeness and sketch. Rebecca Forshee was a woman of rare personal beauty, virtue, and piety. She died in 1858, after a married life of over forty years.

Benjamin Sayer was remarkably successful in life, and by industry and economy, added to excellent judgment and foresight, succeeded in acquiring a handsome competency, yet he was charitable and hospitable in an eminent degree. His house was a great resort, where all were alike welcome; and until "tramps" became dangerous and aggressive, no one was ever turned from his door who asked for food or lodging. A bed was always set aside for the poorest, as well as accommodations for the more favored of God's children. He inherited his farm from his father, but had to pay legacies to nearly its full value to his brothers and sisters. For many years he struggled hard to succeed, and said he sometimes came near giving up and hiring out at day's work; but pride, energy, and determination conquered, and at the time of his death he owned not only that but several other farms, together with a liberal property beside.

He never cared for or sought office, though he filled most acceptably several minor positions and trusts in his native town. Benjamin Sayer, indeed, was a man among men,—six feet tall, erect, and finely proportioned. Independent in thought, full of activity and energy, honest and upright in all his dealings, he won, as well as retained, the confidence and esteem of all who knew him.

In a note written by him and found after his death he thus describes how he earned the first money he ever possessed, and which, in fact, was the foundation of his after-fortune:

"When a boy ten or twelve years of age, my brother Joseph and I took a spear and went to my meadow-brook to catch a mess of suckers. It was then a noted stream for these fish. We had two dogs, and soon they left for Mr. Burt's swamp, where we heard them barking, and started to see what caused it. We found they had treed some large animal, and brother sent me up the tree to punch it out with the spear. As I approached it, it looked so savage I told brother I was afraid to go nearer, but he ordered me to keep my spear ahead and go on, which I did, and it jumped out of the tree and the dogs run it up another tree, and brother made me climb and punch it out again. As I climbed towards it its eyes looked like fire-balls. It again jumped out of the tree, and the dogs and brother killed it. We skinned it, and we sold the skin in Warwick for five shillings. They said it was a large wildcat, but the fur was getting poor, it was so late in the season. I got for my share two shillings and sixpence in silver. I have never been so rich since as I felt then. I must look at my money every day to be sure that it was there and all mine. If the chance had offered again at that time, I would have climbed almost any tree in our forest for a like prize."

The first work he ever did for wages was to hew timber for the Old-School Baptist church in Warwick, working from daylight until dark, being allowed fifty cents per day to pay his father's subscription towards the erection of the church. Before he died he said he was the last man living who had labored on the erection of the church. Mr. Sayer died Oct. 6, 1874, aged eighty-three years.

EDWARD L. WELLING.

The Welling family, as already mentioned, are of Welsh lineage, and on their arrival in America repaired to Long Island. Among its early members was Thomas, who during the year 1770, as indicated by old deeds now in possession of the family, became a resident of Orange County, where he was the owner of an extensive and valuable tract of land. His children were Thomas, Richard, and John, and three daughters, who became respectively Mrs. Gen. John Hathorn, Mrs. John Wheeler, and Mrs. Bronson. Of these children, Thomas was born Feb. 9, 1759, and was married Feb. 28, 1782, to Miss Sibble Beardsley, to whom the following children were born: Anna, Charles, Thomas, Edward L., John, Hannah, Lois, Elizabeth, and Lois (2d).

This sketch affords a brief review of the life of Edward L., whose birth occurred April 23, 1788, at the family mansion in Warwick, where his early life was passed. After a period spent at the public school of the neighborhood and a few years devoted to the labors of the farm, he became associated with Dr. Young in commercial pursuits at Edenville. Having soon after, in connection with his brother Thomas, inherited the paternal estate, he became from that date one of the enterprising farmers of Warwick. Though eminently successful in his vocation, the public spirit and ambition of Mr. Welling led him to embark upon the less tranquil waters of official life. He was for successive years chosen as supervisor of the township, was for twenty-six years justice of the peace, and was in 1837 elected sheriff of Orange County, which office he filled at a subsequent date a second term.

Mr. Welling was at the time of his death president of the Chester Bank, and also a director of the Orange County Bank of Goshen. His acknowledged probity of character and excellent judgment rendered his services as arbiter in the adjustment of estates in great demand, and led to his appointment by the Governor as commissioner for the settlement of public claims. He was also active in the military operations of the State, having held a lieutenant's commission in the war of 1812, and at the close of the conflict retained his rank in the standing army then maintained by the State. Though not a member, Mr. Welling was a faithful supporter of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, and a liberal contributor towards the erection of the church edifice and parsonage. The death of Edward L. Welling occurred Jan. 2, 1855, in his sixty-seventh year. His public spirit and liberality caused him to be highly esteemed as a citizen, while his genial qualities of mind and heart rendered the loss a personal one to each member of his family circle.

JEFFREY WISNER.

A comprehensive sketch of the Wisner family and its earlier representatives having been given elsewhere in this work, renders its repetition here unnecessary. Jeffrey Wisner traces his descent from Johannes, the progenitor of the family in America, who was the father of Hendrick, whose son John was the parent of Henry, born in 1742, and married to Susanna, daughter of Richard Goldsmith. He became the father of ten children, among whom was Jeffrey, the subject of this biography. The latter was born April 20, 1779, and after limited advantages at the public school of the neighborhood engaged in farming occupations. He was united in marriage, Oct. 18, 1792, to Miss Hannah Wheeler, who was the mother of the following children: Henry, born Feb. 28, 1799; John W., born Sept. 10, 1801; Harriet (Mrs. Philander Gillett), born April 27, 1804; William H., whose birth occurred Oct. 6, 1806; and Sarah A. (Mrs. Hammond Sly), born Sept. 23, 1814. Mrs. Wisner died in 1814, and Mr. Wisner was a second time married, in 1816, to Miss Elizabeth Armstrong, whose children were Jeffrey A., born March 23, 1817; Gabriel, born Oct. 16, 1818; Rensselaer J., born March 2, 1820; James, born March 17, 1822; Richard, born Feb. 4, 1824; J. Amherst, whose birth occurred Oct. 18, 1827; Mary E. (Mrs. Wm. T. Van Deever), born June 3, 1830; and Vanness, born Aug. 15, 1832. Of these children, J. Amherst resides in Brooklyn, and is engaged in mercantile interests in New York City. Rensselaer J. is a resident of Pittston, Pa., and James and Richard are among the representative citizens of Warwick, their native township. Jeffrey Wisner's death occurred April 11, 1855, while his wife Elizabeth survived until Dec. 23, 1868.

Mr. Wisner was a man of marked influence in the community. Endowed with an excellent understanding, great force of character, and remarkable energy, he exerted a salutary influence both in the home circle and in the larger sphere of public life. He represented the township as supervisor during the years 1812-13, 1819-23, and for successive years served as justice of the peace. Both of these responsible offices were filled by him with signal ability and fidelity. In his religious convictions Mr. Wisner espoused the creed of the Baptist Church, and was for many years, and at the time of his death, a member and deacon of the church, at Warwick. He lived his religion in daily life, following both the letter and spirit of the injunction, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."

JAMES BURT.

The Burts are of English lineage, though the exact period of their emigration to the colonies cannot be determined. Daniel Burt, with his wife Hannah, became permanent residents of Warwick township during the year 1760. Their children were ten in number, among whom was James, who, by his marriage to Abigail Coe, in 1783, became the father of four sons and two daughters. He resided upon the Burt homestead, now in possession of his son James, whose birth occurred March 9, 1798, at the ancestral home, the scene of the employments of his lifetime. His early years were spent in labor upon the farm, after having acquired such advantages of education as were afforded by the district schools of the day. He resided at his father's home, assisted in tilling the soil, and eventually came into possession of the property. Mr. Burt was married, Dec. 25, 1828, to Mrs. Mary Harding, daughter of Charles Gillett. To them five children were born,—Peter, Sarah, Abigail, Thomas, and Lydia, of whom the daughters survive. The death of Mrs. Burt occurred July 16, 1865. Her exemplary life as wife and mother causes her memory to be held in profound veneration by the family. Mr. Burt, though a resident of the country and absorbed in farming pursuits, has found time to devote to public interests. He has cast his ballot with unflinching regularity since his twenty-first birthday, with the exception of the present year. He has filled the offices of supervisor and justice of the peace, having been always a firm Whig or an active Republican. He has been honored for twenty-six years with the presidency of the Chester National Bank, and has been present at all the meetings of the board of directors during that period. His religious affiliations are with the Baptist Church, of which he is a regular supporter. Though debarred by the infirmities of advancing years from active participation in the duties of life, Mr. Burt displays the same lively interest in the busy world which was peculiar to his more vigorous days, still manifesting that untiring energy which is a marked feature of his character.

GABRIEL WISNER.

About the year 1713, Johannes Wisner, with his wife and one son, emigrated from Switzerland, the land of their nativity, to the then undeveloped forests of America, and settled upon Long Island. Their children were five in number,—Hendrick, Adam, Catherine, Ann, and Mary. Hendrick, who survived until the year 1790, was united in marriage to a Miss Shaw, of New England, and became the father of three children,—Henry, John, and a daughter. Henry participated actively in the public affairs of the day, and was honored as one of the representatives in the Continental Congress. John was a commissioned officer during the French war, and also during the war of the Revolution. He was the proprietor of a tract of land embracing 2000 acres, conferred by royal patent, a portion of which is embraced in the present estate of Thomas E. Durland, formerly the Wisner homestead. John Wisner, whose death occurred in 1778, left seven children,—John, Henry, William, Asa, Anna, Charity, and Hannah. Henry, the second son, who was the grandfather of the subject of this biography, was a member of the State Legislature, representing Dutchess, Orange, and Ulster Counties from 1776 to 1782. His birth occurred in 1742, and by his marriage to Miss Susanna, daughter of Richard Goldsmith, he became the parent of the following children: Richard, Susanna, Jeffrey, John, Nancy, Henry, Abigail, Mary, William and Gabriel. Of this number, Jeffrey was born April 20, 1779, and married Hannah Wheeler, Oct. 18, 1792, to whom were born five children,—Henry, John, Harriet, William, and Sarah A. He contracted a second marriage, Jan. 27, 1816, with Elizabeth Armstrong, who was the mother of eight children,—Jeffrey, Gabriel, Rensselaer J., James, Richard, J. Amherst, Vanness, and Mary. The birth of Gabriel, the second son, occurred Oct. 16, 1818, at the homestead in Warwick township. His childhood was spent in attendance upon the public schools of the neighborhood, and a later period was passed at a school in Newton, N. J., which enabled him to acquire a more thorough knowledge of the English rudiments. He early decided to follow the vocation of his father, and in 1843 removed to a farm adjoining his home, his residence until his death, Jan. 13, 1872. On Feb. 2, 1843, Mr. Wisner was married to Miss Susan, daughter of Solomon Carpenter, of Amity, Orange Co., N. Y. Their children are Henry C., Rensselaer J., Albert, Mary E., Susan E., Carrie, Ida, and James H. Mr. Wisner was a firm exponent of the principles of the Whig party, which had been espoused through successive generations of the family, and which later led to his affiliation with the Republican party. Though a man of much public spirit and active in many enterprises which redounded to the welfare of the community, he was not ambitious for public honors, and found little pleasure in the excitement incident to official life. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wisner were members of the Calvary Baptist Church of Warwick, and zealous in the promotion of its interests. In all the relations of life Gabriel Wisner may justly be regarded as an honorable and representative citizen of his native township.

MAJ. JAMES WHEELER.

The branch of the Wheeler family represented by the subject of this biographical sketch came originally from Rhode Island to Orange County, and included three brothers,—John, Joel, and Gilbert. Of this number, John was married, and became the father of two daughters and one son, James, whose birth occurred in 1783, in Warwick township. The early years of his life were uneventful, having been devoted to acquiring such education as the time and occasion afforded, and later to preparation for the more active duties of life. He was, in 1810, united in marriage to Miss Anne, daughter of Martin Ryerson, of New Jersey, to whom were born three children,—Sophronia (Mrs. Bevier, of Grand Rapids, Mich.), Anne, and Sarah Catharine, the latter two being deceased. On Dec. 1, 1829, he was a second time married, to Miss Cornelia V. E. Hunn, daughter of John S. Hunn, late president of the Bank of Newburgh, and became the parent of five children,—Mary Elizabeth, deceased; John J., lieutenant-colonel of the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth New York Volunteers during the war of the Rebellion; DeWitt Clinton, for five years police commissioner of New York City; Franklin, residing in Michigan; and Edward, collector of internal revenue for the State of Arkansas, residing at Little Rock, in that State, and served as captain in the One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers during the late war. In both marriages Mr. Wheeler was exceedingly happy, his companions being ladies of intelligence and many amiable qualities. In all his family associations Maj. Wheeler was conspicuous as displaying the most tender consideration and regard for those around him. In his relations both as husband and parent he inspired the strongest affection, and in no less a degree was this sentiment manifested beyond the sanctity of the home circle. Broad in his views, generous in his instincts, with sympathy for the suffering, and the mantle of charity for the erring and oppressed, Maj. Wheeler, in the sixty-nine years of life that were appointed to him, made the world brighter and better for his presence in it. In business relations he displayed the utmost integrity and honor, and commanded the confidence of all who knew or were associated with him. During the administration of President Jackson, in 1837, he shared in the universal embarrassment it had brought upon the country, and while freely expressing his opinion of the false basis on which the government credit was founded, declared his intention to accept every personal responsibility. In politics Maj. Wheeler was an Old-Line Whig of the most decided stamp. He was a close friend of Governor DeWitt Clinton, a strong supporter of Henry Clay, and held confidential relations with Hon. William H. Seward. He participated actively in the politics of the day, and devoted both influence and means to the interests of his State and country. He was also prominent in the business interests of the township of Warwick and the county, having been active in the organization of the Chester Bank, and its earliest president, which office he held for many years, continuing in it until his death, which occurred Sept. 11, 1852, at the homestead in Warwick, and was the occasion of profound sorrow alike in the home circle and the larger community of friends and life-long associates.

GABRIEL HOUSTON.

His father, Thomas Houston, settled in Middletown, N. Y., in early life, and was an active and zealous member of the Presbyterian Church of that place, in which he officiated as elder. His wife was Sarah Faulkender, who bore him the following children, viz.: Ann, wife of Henry Denton, of Denton, N. Y.; Harriet, wife of Judge John Booth; Catharine, wife of David Corwin; Gabriel; Adeline, wife of Rev. Gabriel Corwin, now of Cape May; Philinda; Jane, wife of Henry O. Bronson, of Jackson, Mich.; James F.; Franklin; and Nelson.

Gabriel Houston was born May 25, 1798, near Middletown. He remained at home until his marriage to Susan Ann Owen, when he settled at Glenwood, N. J., on the homestead of his father-in-law, Isaac Owen, which was formerly the property of Isaac Owen's father, Ebenezer Owen, containing 180 acres of land. On this property he lived the remainder of his life, and died Jan. 22, 1864. He accumulated other property, was a representative farmer, and a good business man. He was a stockholder in the Chester Bank, at Chester, Orange Co., N. Y., and owned the old homestead of his father, originally consisting of some 300 acres, which property is still in the family, and has always been known as an excellent stock-farm. He was well informed on the current topics of his times, and a man whose counsel was often sought by his fellow-citizens.

Although not a member of any church, he was interested in the propagation of morality and religious teachings, and gave the ground upon which the Methodist church was erected. He was friendly and generous with all denominations that applied to him for assistance.

In politics he was a Democrat, but never sought political place. In early life he obtained a practical education, was plain and unassuming in his ways, and was always willing to sacrifice his own for the comfort and happiness of others.

His children are Sally Ann, married Festus Vail, of Warwick, N. Y.; Abigail Jane; Isaac Owen; Thomas Erminada, died young; Gabriel Wisner; Henry Owen; Elizabeth W., died young; James Nelson, Elizabeth and Susan, died young; Susan, wife of Thomas Pickens, of Ulster Co., N. Y.; Philip; and Mary O.

ISAAC V. WHEELER.

The Wheeler family, which originally embraced nine brothers and three sisters, were early residents of Long Island, all of whom at a later period removed to Orange County and made purchases of land. One of these brothers, Joel by name, is the progenitor of the branch of the family from which Isaac V. is descended. He was twice married, and the father of five children, of whom Col. William F. Wheeler, one of the sons, was born in Warwick, Sept. 2, 1791, and, having followed the pursuits of an agriculturist, remained upon the homestead during his lifetime, with the exception of a brief period of service in the war of 1812. He was united in marriage to Miss Juliet, daughter of Isaac Van Duzer, to whom the following children were born: Dinah E., Robert, Ann E., Isaac V., Joel, William W., and Milton V.

Isaac V., whose life is briefly sketched, is a native of Warwick, and was born March 4, 1823, and spent his early life upon the homestead. His education was acquired at the neighboring public school, and later at an academy of some celebrity at Deckertown, N. J. His tastes led him to pursue the calling of his father,—that of a farmer,—to which his time and energies were entirely devoted. Industry combined with sagacity, and a thorough knowledge of his vocation, speedily won for him a marked success in life. Mr. Wheeler advanced with the age. All the modern scientific appliances which are instrumental in subduing the soil, and otherwise aiding the agriculturist, were utilized by him. On the death of his father he became the possessor of the ancestral estate, which is still retained by the family. Mr. Wheeler was married, June 21, 1853, to Miss Phebe, daughter of Jesse Bull, whose portrait appears in another portion of this work. Their children are Juliet V., Carrie B., William F., Jessie C., Anna M., and Alice.

In politics Mr. Wheeler was a Republican, having been descended from Whig ancestry. He was a quiet, unostentatious gentleman, averse to public life, and consequently having no political aspirations. He was one of the original incorporators of the Warwick Valley Farmer's Milk Association, and of the Warwick Savings-Bank, having been a trustee of the latter institution. His religious affiliations were with the Reformed (Dutch) Church, of which he was a cordial supporter. Mr. Wheeler's death occurred April 9, 1876, in his fifty-third year. He was the last survivor of his generation of the family, and justly regarded as among its most worthy representatives.

A. J. BURT.

The Burt family are of English extraction, and early settled in Connecticut, whence Daniel Burt, in 1746, emigrated to the Empire State, and chose a tract of wild land in Warwick, Orange Co. His first efforts in the direction of agriculture were not especially successful, and influences were speedily brought to bear which caused his return to his native State. The year 1760 found him again a dweller in the forests of Warwick, where he purchased the land now covered by the hamlet of Bellvale, and erected a flouring and saw-mill. Mr. Burt and his wife Hannah were the parents of ten children, among whom was James, born Oct. 25, 1760, who attained some distinction in public life. He was a member of the State Legislature from 1797 to 1826, with the exception of a short interval; was also a member of the council of appointment; was an elector for Presidents Jefferson and Harrison; was supervisor for many years of the township of Warwick, and a deacon of the Baptist Church of Warwick for a period of sixty-three years. He was married, Aug. 15, 1783, to Abigail, daughter of Benjamin Coe, and had six children,—Mary, Benjamin, Stephen A., Phebe, James, and Thomas M. Of this number, Stephen A. was born Nov. 28, 1791, and married, May 27, 1818, Paulina, daughter of Jeremiah Fairfield. Their children were Caroline, Edward Fairfield, Augustus J., Abigail Jane, Abigail Jane (2d), Anna Scott, and John. Of this number, Augustus James, now the last adult male member of the family resident at Bellvale, where they were numerous, and contributed largely to the development of the locality, was born Oct. 27, 1826, at the latter spot, and has spent his lifetime at the place of his nativity. He early availed himself of the advantages of the public school of the locality, and later engaged in business pursuits with his father, who established mercantile interests at Bellvale in 1815. Mr. Burt during this time developed methodical business habits which contributed later to a successful career. He also engaged extensively in enterprises independent of his mercantile trade and which still occupy much of his attention. A post-office was established at Bellvale through his influence in 1845, of which, with the exception of a brief interval, he has since been the custodian. Mr. Burt has served two terms as justice of the peace, and, not being ambitious for official preferment, has declined similar honors offered at a subsequent date. He was one of the incorporators of the Warwick Savings-Bank, and is still one of its trusted officers. His known integrity and business capacity have caused him to fill the rôles of administrator and executor on frequent occasions, and these duties have constituted a large proportion of the labor of his later years. His efforts have ever been directed in the interests of the public weal, and have, as a consequence, resulted in benefit to the community in which he has lived. Mr. Burt is descended from a family of Old-Line Whigs, and has never departed from the traditions of the race. He is now an active Republican. Mr. Burt was united in marriage, Oct. 19, 1853, to Miss Ann E. Wilson, of Bellvale. They have had nine children, of whom James W., Augustus, Mary, Gertrude E., and Maud survive.

JOHN WILLCOX.

The Willcox family, of Warwick, are of New England stock, a portion of whom settled at an early date on Long Island. Amos, the grandfather of John, removed from the latter locality to Orange County, and became the owner of property at Gray Court. He was the parent of three daughters and an equal number of sons, among whom was Joseph, who survived until his eighty-eighth year. He married Miss Margaret, daughter of S. Scinsonson, of Vernon, the family having come at an early date from Staten Island, and had children,—John, William, Mary, Susan, Sallie, and Harriet. By a second marriage, to Miss Nancy Stagg, he had children,—Charles, David, and Phebe. His son John, whose name prefixes this sketch, was born at Amity, July 28th, in the year 1800, and at an early age devoted himself to labor upon the land of his father. He was married in 1823 to Miss Hannah, daughter of Roger Howell, resident near Amity, and became the father of the following children: Lewis, Joseph, William H., J. Wickham, Margaret, Mary, Sarah, Harriet, Prudence, and Eunice Amelia, eight of whom survive and are married. In 1836, Mr. Willcox purchased of George D. Wickham the property in Warwick township known as Merritt's Island, embracing 225 acres. To the improvement of this land he has devoted the labor of his life. Mr. Willcox has in his daily pursuits exhibited untiring industry, which, united with excellent judgment, have contributed to his success. He has established a reputation for integrity in his business relations which has placed his name among the representative men of his township. Mr. Willcox has never sought the preferments of office, and will, therefore, not be found among the list of county officials. His political sentiments are in harmony with the platform of the Republican party. He is an active supporter of the Presbyterian Church at Amity, of which Mrs. Willcox is a valued member. Mr. Willcox was appointed commissioner of the Drowned Lands of the Walkill, and has been instrumental in reclaiming much of this marshy territory.

THOMAS WELLING.

The Welling family are of Welsh descent, and were among the original settlers on Long Island, where Thomas, the great-grandfather of the subject of this biography, purchased land in 1704. He at a later period removed to Orange County, and acquired a large tract of land, embracing a portion of the village of Warwick, and also the homestead of the Welling family. His children numbered three sons—Thomas, Richard, and John—and three daughters. Of these sons, Thomas, who retained the family residence, was united in marriage to Miss Sibble Beardsley, of Sussex Co., N. J., and had children,—Thomas, Edward L., John, Hannah, Charles, Anna, Elizabeth, and Lois. John became a resident of Brooklyn, where his death occurred; Charles died in Sussex Co., N. J., and the remaining sons chose homes in Orange County. Thomas, born July 8, 1786, was united in marriage to Miss Anna Coleman, to whom the following children were born and grew to mature years: John L., Samuel C., William R., Thomas, Elizabeth (Mrs. F. B. Brooks), Harriet (Mrs. J. C. Houston), Hannah D. (Mrs. James Wisner), and Euphelia (Mrs. Richard Wisner); Sibble C. and Charles B. having died at an early age. Of these children, Thomas, who represents the fourth generation bearing the name, was born April 27, 1830, in the township of Warwick. His early life was not varied by incidents worthy of special mention. The public schools afforded opportunities for acquiring the rudiments of an education, and subsequent labor upon the farm had so moulded his tastes as to induce him to follow the vocation of an agriculturist. The condition of his estate bears ample evidence that his energies in this direction have not been misapplied. Mr. Welling may in an eminent sense be regarded as a successful farmer. To the energy and practical wisdom which have been brought to bear in his labor have been added those invaluable helps which modern science has contributed to lighten the toil of the husbandman and add to the bounty of his harvests. Mr. Welling was married in December, 1855, to Miss Caroline, daughter of Aaron Van Duzer, Esq., of Goshen. Their family circle numbers eight children,—William R., Thomas, Edward L., Martha, Mary, Elizabeth, Carrie H., and Sarah McC.

Mr. Welling having been descended from a family of strong Whig proclivities, naturally espoused the principles of the party. On the organization of the Republican phalanx he at once joined their ranks, and has never missed an election since he became a voter. Though evincing a reasonable degree of interest in public affairs, he is in no sense a politician, and official life has no attractions for him. He is a director in both the Warwick National and the Warwick Savings-Banks, and generally active in matters pertaining to the interests of the township. The Reformed Dutch Church, of which both Mr. and Mrs.

Welling are members, has offered a congenial field for his activities. He is an elder in the Reformed Dutch Church of Warwick, and a director of the Board of Domestic Missions. In his daily life Mr. Welling may, with propriety, be mentioned as the perfect type of the Christian gentleman.

HON. WILLIAM H. HOUSTON.

It has fallen to the lot of few of the residents of the township of Warwick to fill a career of more distinguished usefulness than did the subject of this biography, William H. Houston. His paternal grandfather, Dr. Joseph Houston, was a resident of Edenville, Warwick township, and was united in marriage to Miss Nancy, daughter of Gen. Henry Wisner, who became the mother of ten children,—Henry W., John H., Richard, George W., Joseph A., Andrew, Samuel, Harriet, Susan, and Jane. Of this number, but two—George W. and Harriet—now survive. John H., the father of William H., was united in marriage, June 19, 1816, to Miss Julia Ann Wheeler, their children being William H., Nathaniel D., James K., and John H., who died in childhood. The birth of their son William H. occurred March 27, 1817, in Eatonville, Warwick township, where his early life was spent. The loss of his father, when the lad was but fourteen years of age, became not only the occasion of profound sorrow, but placed upon him a heavy burden of responsibility as the eldest of the family of children. The same characteristics which in later years commanded influence, and won success, were developed at this early stage of his career. He continued upon the homestead, aiding by his industry and wise counsel in the advancement of the family interests, until Jan. 5, 1842, when he was united in marriage to Miss Ann E. Wheeler, daughter of William F. Wheeler, of Bellvale, Orange Co., and granddaughter of Isaac R. Van Duzer, of Cornwall-on-the-Hudson. This event was celebrated by their removal to his future home, now the residence of his sons Joel W. and James E. Houston. The family circle of Mr. and Mrs. Houston embraced six children,—William W., Julia E., John H., Joel W., Frank, and James E. These sons are all residents of Orange County. John H. occupies the farm of his grandfather; Joel W. and James E. are upon the homestead; Frank has a residence adjoining; and William W. resides in Florida. The daughter is now Mrs. Manson R. Brown, of Washingtonville, N. Y.

The peculiar abilities of Mr. Houston eminently fitted him for public life, and these qualifications were at once recognized by his constituents. He represented Warwick in the board of supervisors during the years 1851–52, 1864–65, was elected sheriff of Orange County for the years 1856–58, and was honored as a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of the State in 1867. Mr. Houston was a staunch supporter of the government during the late war, and was especially active in the recruiting service. His marked integrity of character won for him the confidence of the community, and on frequent occasions entailed heavy responsibilities as trustee or guardian in the settlement of large estates. He was also at his death president of the Goshen and Deckertown Railroad, of which enterprise he was one of the projectors. In his political preferences Mr. Houston was, at an early day, an Old-Line Whig, and at once joined the Republican ranks on the organization of that party. He was a trustee of the Second Presbyterian Church of Florida, and one of its most devout worshippers. In the fullness of years and in the height and brilliancy of a useful career the life of Mr. Houston was terminated. His death occurred on Aug. 30, 1875, Mrs. Houston having survived him but four years.

HON. JAMES E. WATERBURY.

Stamford, Conn., was the abiding-place of the representatives of the Waterbury family, who first left the shores of Great Britain for the inviting fields of industry offered in the New World. The grandfather of James E. was James, who served with credit as a soldier of the Revolution. Col. Henry Weeks, also of Revolutionary fame, was his maternal grandparent. The former was born Nov. 28, 1754, and married Miss Elizabeth Mead, by whom he had eight children,—Betsey, Charles, Catherine, Henry, William, Warren, Rufus, and Ann, the only survivor. Of this number, William was born June 29, 1789, and united in marriage with Miss Nancy Weeks, of Stamford, Conn., Oct. 24, 1811. Their children were three in number,—William H., James E., and Eliphalet Price. James E., whose life is here briefly reviewed, was born at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Sept. 2, 1824, and spent his early years in Orange County, the family having made it their residence in 1828. The boyhood of James E. was passed at school, first at Amity, his present residence, and later at the Chester Academy. These educational advantages, though in no sense superior, with the acquirements and experience of later years, enabled him to fill with intelligence and credit the demands of a more public career. He embarked in agricultural pursuits on arriving at mature years, and located upon the farm which has since been, and is now, his residence. Mr. Waterbury was married, Nov. 29, 1848, to Sarah, daughter of John Wilcox, Esq., of Merritt's Island, Warwick. Their house was brightened by the presence of four children,—Ida, H. Lillie, Nancy, and Edgar,—all of whom are living. Mr. Waterbury early acquired a taste for official life, and was honored by his constituency with important offices, which he filled with ability and marked integrity. He has for a period of twenty years served as justice of the peace of his township, was twice elected justice of sessions, and was chosen supervisor in 1875, but declined a subsequent nomination. He was called in 1879 to fill the responsible position of representative of the Second District of Orange County in the State Legislature, and served upon the committees on State Claims, on Villages, and on State Charitable Institutions. He was one of the incorporators of the Warwick Savings-Bank, and still holds the office of trustee of that institution. Mr. Waterbury associated in early years with the old Whig party, and on the organization of the Republican party found its platform in harmony with his political convictions. He has since been one of its most staunch and able representatives in the county. Squire Waterbury has ever manifested a lively interest in the cause of education, and has been for nearly a quarter of a century trustee of the public schools of the township. His religious sympathies are with the Presbyterian Church, of which he and Mrs. Waterbury are members and his family regular worshippers.

NATHANIEL R. FEAGLES.

The Feagles family are of German extraction, the great-grandfather of Nathan R. having been Jacob, who was born in the fatherland. His son Jacob early emigrated to America, and followed the blacksmith's craft. At a later period he located in Chester, Orange Co., the scene of his future labors. The children of Mr. Feagles were Jacob, William, Nathaniel, and Caroline (Mrs. Robert Stoutenburgh). Of this number, Jacob, whose birth occurred in January, 1792, remained under the paternal roof until his fifteenth year, when, inspired by a spirit of independence and ambition, he began the battle of life. About the year 1815, as nearly as can be determined, he was united in marriage to Miss Susan Roe, of Orange County, and chose a residence at Amity, in the township of Warwick. Their children were David, Charles, Nathaniel R., Henry B., William, Mary, Susan, Robert, and Clarissa. The birth of Nathaniel R., the subject of this biographical sketch, occurred Sept. 25, 1821, in Amity, where his early life was spent in attendance at the school of the district, varied by labor upon the farm. During the year 1850 he moved to the metropolis of the State, where he engaged in business as a butcher. After a residence of five years in the city of New York he returned to his native county, and, in connection with his brother, purchased the homestead. In 1863, Mr. Feagles removed to his present large and highly-cultivated farm. Since that period he has continued to follow agricultural pursuits, and enjoyed a marked degree of success—the reward of industry and sound judgment in his vocation. He has won a deserved reputation as a propagator of blooded stock, horses of the Hambletonian breed having been made a specialty with him. Mr. Feagles is an outspoken Republican in politics, and though an ardent supporter of the party, has never sought office at its hands. He is a Presbyterian in his religious predilections, and a trustee of the Presbyterian Church at Amity. Mr. Feagles was married

Gardner H. Nanny

The father of Gardner K. was Joseph Nanny, who was born Nov. 7, 1785, and was married in 1807 to Miss Sallie Johnson, whose birth occurred April 13, 1789. Their children were Maria, born in 1808; Johnson, born in 1810; and the subject of this biography, whose birth occurred Jan. 12, 1821. The latter was in early years a member of his father's family circle, where his growing years were devoted to attendance at the district school, and subsequently to the employments of the farm.

On the death of his father he inherited the estate. Mr. Nanny was united in marriage, April 16, 1862, to Miss Adeline, daughter of John Arnout, Esq., of Edenville, who was the parent of five children,—William H., Samuel H., John W., Mary A., and Mrs. Nanny.

To Mr. and Mrs. Nanny were born two daughters,—Frances M. and Sadie O. Mr. Nanny, not having a taste for farming pursuits, soon after his marriage removed to Edenville, having acquired the residence now occupied by the family.

The excitement and honors consequent upon official life were not congenial to his taste. He therefore never sought official position, and was content simply to cast his ballot in obedience to the requirement of every American citizen.

In politics he was a Republican, and in his religious profession a Methodist, both he and his wife being members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Edenville. Mr. Nanny's death occurred at Edenville, June 7, 1874, in his fifty-third year.

HEZEKIAH HOYT.

in 1858 to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Peter N. Ryerson, of Vernon, Sussex Co., N. J. They have had nine children, of whom the following survive,—Mary, Susan, Jacob, Anna, Charles, Nathaniel R., Elizabeth, and Henry.

HEZEKIAH HOYT.

The Hoyt family are of English lineage, the great-grandfather of Mr. Hoyt having resided in Stamford, Conn., and served with credit during the war of the Revolution. His children were two sons—Hezekiah and Joseph—and two daughters,—Hannah and Sarah. The former, a soldier in the war of 1812, was united in marriage to Miss Esther Selleck, of Stamford, Conn., to whom the following children were born: Isaac, Hezekiah, William, Caroline, Harriet, Maria, James W., Henry W., and Gilbert F., of whom six survive. Hezekiah, the second son, whose life is here briefly sketched, is a native of Stamford, having been born Feb. 20, 1805. When four years of age his parents made Middletown, Orange Co., their residence, and were accompanied by their son. He spent his early years at school and in labor upon the estate of his father, and having, at a later date, decided upon the importance of a trade, acquired that of a mason. Mercantile pursuits having offered a larger field, he repaired to Bloomingburgh, Sullivan Co., N. Y., and embarked in business, remaining from 1834 to 1836. During the latter year he came to Warwick township, and continued his mercantile ventures at Amity. In 1842 he purchased the farm which is his present residence, and which has been his home since that date. Mr. Hoyt was united in marriage, Oct. 12, 1837, to Miss Mary A., daughter of Joel Wheeler, whose wife, Catharine Finn, was the mother of three children,—John A., Catharine L., and Mrs. Hoyt. His second wife was Miss Dinah Finn, by whom he had children,—William F. and Robert F.

Mr. Hoyt is an uncompromising Republican in his political views, and has ever manifested a lively interest in public affairs, though not an office-holder. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hoyt are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of New Milford, and liberal in the advancement of its aims.

C H E S T E R.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

CHESTER is an interior town of the county, lying southeast of the centre. It is bounded north by Goshen and Blooming-Grove, east by Blooming-Grove and Monroe, south by Warwick, and west by Warwick and Goshen. The area, as determined in the equalization table of the last board of supervisors, is 16,047½ acres. As often explained, the true area must exceed this somewhat in consequence of highways, village lots, and other parcels being excepted by the assessors in making up the average. The general title is derived from the Wawayanda Patent.

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

The town contains several rocky elevations unfit for cultivation, as Goose Pond Mountain, Lazy Hill, and Sugar-Loaf Mountain. The highest summits are from five to six hundred feet above the neighboring valleys. Thompson's Pond, on the line between Chester and Warwick, covers an area of about one hundred acres. It is a tributary of Quaker Creek. The pond is now named upon the maps of the county Glenmere Lake. The largest portion of it is in Warwick. Black Meadow Brook, formed of several tributaries from different directions, drains a large portion of the western part of the town, and empties into the Otterkill near West Chester. Trout Brook, in the south, is an inlet of Bull Pond, and flowing northward from this is Seeley Creek, the outlet. This unites with the Cromeline, eastward in Blooming-Grove. In this town are the Gray Court Meadows, which include about seven hundred acres, now nearly all under cultivation, and are exceedingly fertile.

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The general story of early settlement upon the territory constituting the town will be found to a great extent in the chapters devoted to those towns from which Chester was formed. The fertile country around Chester village attracted the attention of immigrants at an early day, and this was the point of earliest location, though the Sugar-Loaf district is spoken of in very early documents.

The village was settled as early as 1751 by John Yelverton, but at what time it received the name is uncertain.

John Beers owned about 120 acres, and in 1751 sold to James Ensign, who sold to Yelverton.* This land

* There is no doubt that upon the land purchased by Yelverton and associates there was laid out a plat under the name of the township of Chester. The precise date of the laying out of this plat we have not been able to ascertain, but it is entirely clear that such a plat was made. Yelverton was an active man in this mode of opening up the country to settlement, having been associated in the founding of Goshen, Newburgh, and New Windsor, as well as Chester.

descended to his grandson, Abijah Yelverton, the father of Anthony Yelverton, who died a few years since. The present village is on this 120 acres.

The family was originally from Wales. When John Yelverton came he was accompanied by a brother and a sister, and his children were John, Anthony, Thomas, James, and several daughters. One married Mr. Carpenter, of Goshen; one Mr. Howell, of Goshen; one Mr. Marvin, of Oxford; one Mr. Carman.

John (2d) had but one child, Abijah. Abijah's children were John, Anthony, and Abijah. Thomas' children were James, William, and Elizabeth.

The family came from England to Long Island, from there to Orange County, residing at different times at Goshen, Newburgh, Chester, and New Windsor.

John Yelverton, the first settler, was a carpenter. He died in the village of New Windsor, and his grave and monument may now be seen in the Presbyterian cemetery there.

Wm. Yelverton, a son of Abijah, is still living at an advanced age at Gray Court Station.

Capt. Nathaniel Roe located a mile and a half south, on a farm subsequently owned by his grandson, Jesse Roe. Nathaniel had two sons,—Nathaniel and William; and Jesse was the son of Nathaniel (2d).

Peter Townsend also settled here. His sons were William, Peter, and Isaac. His daughter Ann married Solomon Townsend, and Sarah, Dr. Anthony Davis.

John Jackson located north of Yelverton, and Fletcher Woodhull married his only daughter.

Joseph Drake was among the earliest in this vicinity; he owned the farm of 200 acres where Joseph G. afterwards lived.

Colvill Carpenter settled on the lands subsequently owned by his son Jesse. He had two sons,—Daniel and Jesse.

Hector St. John must not be forgotten. He came from France, and lived where Hezekiah Moffat, Esq., lived and died. During the war of the Revolution he returned to France, took one son with him, and after the war returned to this country, and was appointed consul for New York. The other son and daughter were left in the country, sent to the East, and educated. Frances, the daughter, married a Frenchman by the name of Otto and went to France. There he was created Count Otto, and sent as minister to the court of Vienna. During the French Revolution they were reduced to poverty, and Frances suffered every possible privation.

To further show the names of those residing in this section of country at the opening of the Revolution we give the assessment-roll of 1775 for district No. 4 in the old precinct of Goshen. It includes other territory than the town of Chester. The district may be described somewhat in general terms as comprising East Chester, extending to Satterly Town, and including the Gray Court neighborhood; also West Chester, the families along the Somerville road, including the Conklingtown neighborhood in Goshen, and extending to Fort Hill.

The assessor for this district was Capt. Nathaniel Roe. He resided a mile and a half south of Chester village, on the farm owned in later years by his grandson, Jesse Roe. This assessment-roll is the best authority now extant to determine the families of a hundred years ago.

"The within is a list of the assessment of all the inhabitants within my district, taken September, 1775. By me, NATHANIEL ROE."

Through the aid of Mr. George Board, Mr. James Burt, president of the Chester Bank, and others, the following memorandum, with reference to a portion of these names, is given.

John King settled near Bull's Mills, in what is now the town of Chester, some time previous to the Revolutionary war. His homestead was the place now owned by his grandson, John King. He had two sons,—James and Ezra. John King the pioneer had three brothers who also came into Orange County,—

Peter, Joseph, and Charles. The latter went West at an early day. Peter and Joseph settled on farms adjoining that of John King. Joseph afterwards removed to Monroe, near Little Round Pond. His sons were George, John, Gabriel. The sons of Peter were James G. and Abel. A son of James G., Mr. William B. King, resides in Chester village.

In the early settlement of the county there were three brothers by the name of Board,—James, Joseph, and Cornelius. Either they or their ancestors earlier are understood to have come over as book-keepers for the iron-works at Ringwood, N. J. Cornelius came to Sugar-Loaf Valley soon after the Revolution. He had one son, John Board, and several daughters,—Mrs. Gabriel Wisner, Mrs. John Wood, Mrs. Jesse Bull, Mrs. Mills Davis. Mr. Gabriel Wisner's first wife dying, he married another daughter of Cornelius Board.

Of George Board, a son of John, we have obtained several of these notes upon early families. Charles Durland settled where his descendant, James Durland, now lives about the year 1756. His wife was Jane Swartwout. His children were Garret, Joseph, John, Charles, Samuel, Mary, who married John Wood; Elizabeth, who married Vincent Wood; Rosanna, who married Peter Holbert.

Daniel Cromeline settled on the well-known Gray Court farm in 1716, and built the old stone house which stood until 1832. It is not known that he was more than a temporary resident. (See notice of Wm. Bull, Hamptonburgh.)

Phineas Rumsey settled in the East Division of Goshen, where the Widow Murray now lives. The place was owned by several Phineas Rumseys in succession. The original immigrants to this country were four brothers, one of whom settled on Long Island, two in the town of Monroe, and the one mentioned in Goshen. The children of Nathan D. Rumsey, of Monroe, were four sons—Earl, Royal S., Charles, and Nathan D.—and two daughters, one who became Mrs. Lamareux, and after his death Mrs. Hallock, and one who died unmarried. Royal S. Rumsey had fourteen children, who all grew up to mature years except one daughter, who died at the age of seventeen.

Henry McElroy probably lived on Rye Hill, town of Monroe. Thomas Fitzgerald settled near the boundary line of Warwick. John Clark's homestead was in the vicinity of Wickham Pond. George Davis was located in Sugar-Loaf Valley. David Mapes was in the same neighborhood as Nathaniel Roe. John Kinner was probably living on the farm now owned by Wisner Wood. The Howells were at Sugar-Loaf. Edmund Satterly lived near Chester village, on what is now the farm of Thaddeus Durland. An orchard there is still known as Satterly's orchard. There was one daughter, who became the wife of John Board. Joseph Drake lived where the late Joseph G. Drake resided. Oliver Smith's homestead was where Henry W. Wood now lives. The frame of the present house, or a part of it, is very old. Abijah Yelverton kept a tavern for a long series of years at Chester village. Peter Townsend's homestead was at Chester village, where William Wood now owns, near the Yelverton place. Abel Noble lived between Sugar-Loaf and Warwick, in the Bellvale neighborhood. Isaac Cooley's place was on the back road, so called, between Gray Court and Sugar-Loaf. An old Jackson homestead was where James Bull now lives. An early Carpenter homestead was the present Green farm, on the road from Chester to Craigville, formerly the Moffatt place.

An early Horton place was on the road from Goshen to Craigville, now owned by the descendants, two great-grandchildren of the pioneer. Birdseye Young lived on a cross-road, the place still being in the hands of his descendants by the name of Thompson. George Thompson's homestead was probably the present Samuel Houston place. John Chandler, mentioned in the roll, was probably the Dr. Chandler of Blooming-Grove whose grandson, Benjamin C. Sears, now occupies the place. Nathaniel Knapp lived at Sugar-Loaf, on the place now owned by a descendant, John Knapp. The Holley homestead was where John W. Roe now lives. Richard Jennings' place was the present farm of Mr. Wells, formerly a part of the estate of Judge Samuel Seward. The Denton homestead was between Chester and Goshen, where William Lawrence now lives. Daniel Hall probably lived near the Dentons, on the road to Goshen. Matthias Jayne was over towards Florida. John Springsted lived near Conklingtown, in Goshen. He was one of the securities on Peter Townsend's contract with Congress to cast cannon. The Whiteman homestead was near Conklingtown, in Goshen.

Thomas Beach lived on the road to Warwick, his homestead being where the brick house of David R. Seeley now stands. John Feagles lived over the line in what is now Warwick probably. An old Tidd homestead lies between Sugar-Loaf and Florida.

Not far from Gray Court Station the two pioneer brothers, Josiah Seeley and Bezaliel Seeley, settled at an early day. They were descendants of Samuel Seeley, who came to this country about 1600. They built their first dwelling, a log house, northeast of Gray Court, on the flats near the present Newburgh Branch of the Erie Railroad. The wife of Josiah Seeley was Abigail Smith. Their children were Joanna, who married Thaddeus Seeley; Josiah, Jr.; Ebenezer; Jonas (father of Jonas Seeley, formerly of Chester, but now residing with his daughter, Mrs. F. M. Cummins, at Goshen, aged eighty-three); Henry; Susan, who married Robert Townsend; Mercy, who married Joshua Brown, and after his death Abel B. Watkins; Martha, who married James Strong; and Abigail, who married Timothy Little.

Ebenezer, mentioned above, was a very active man in promoting the settlement of the county, and in opening up for settlement the township or village of New Windsor, and the township or village of Chester. (See New Windsor.)

The William Vail homestead was near the academy at Chester. He had four sons,—Asa, William, Absalom, and Benjamin. The latter was the father of John H. Vail, now of Chester.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

Chester is a specimen of "patchwork," in respect to its "make-up," a piece being taken from each of several towns and united to constitute a new town. Once brought together, however, they made a symmetrical town very conveniently arranged for the transaction of public business. The name was, of course, derived from that of its principal village, which had been given to it at its first settlement. In consequence of the destruction of the town books by fire, we are unable to give the minutes of the first town-meeting, the names of the early officers, and many other matters of public interest usually found in such records.

Supervisors.—1845, James Gray; 1846-47, Jesse Wood; 1848, Jesse Holbert; 1849-51, Hezekiah H. Moffat; 1852, S. M. Kniffin; 1853-56, Charles B. Howell; 1857, Daniel D. Hallock; 1858-59, Charles B. Howell; 1860, F. W. Dunning; 1861-66, James B. Stevens; 1867-68, Joseph Durland; 1869-74, John H. Vail; 1875, Samuel H. Hadden; 1876, D. Howell Roe; 1877, Nathaniel Roe; 1878-80, Joseph Board.

Town Clerks from 1875.—1875-77, John G. Kerner; 1878-79, A. J. Martin; 1880, W. H. Wood.

The justices of the peace since 1872 are the following:
1872, Abraham Wright; 1873, Andrew J. King; 1874, Benjamin R. Conklin; 1875, Thomas Bailey; 1876, Abraham Wright; 1877, Charles H. Westervelt; 1878, Andrew J. King; 1879, James Stevens; 1880, Abraham Wright.

V.—VILLAGES, NEIGHBORHOODS.

The group of villages near each other under the general name of Chester require a brief explanation as to location and name.

CHESTER PROPER.

Chester of the old times is the village that grew up on the Yelverton estate, at the corners where is now situated the store of Joseph Durland, about a mile from the Erie depot. The present business of the place includes the following: Charles Dix, hotel; C. H. Westervelt, justice of the peace, branch post-office, insurance agency, etc.; Frederick Miles & Son, bakery; W. H. Wood, undertaker; E. F. Kallinir, boots and shoes; Allison's store, a place of trade for many years, now closed; J. H. Cornelius, stoves and hardware; R. H. Walker, confectionery; George Riley, restaurant; Dr. Carpenter, office; Miss Betsy Edwards, groceries; meat-market, John A. Wells; drug-store, E. T. Jackson; dry-goods, groceries, and general merchandise, Joseph Durland, formerly the old Yelverton place of trade; Fred. Volmer, harness-shop; Mrs. Osman, dress-making; Miss Amelia Bailey, millinery; Jacob Schultz, carpenter; Wm. A. Vail, carpenter.

At this village are located the Presbyterian church, the school building of the Union school district (formerly the academy), and quite a number of dwellings.

CHESTER,

as known by railway men, and by the citizens as "the village at the depot," is a place of considerable business, and has grown up since the building of the Erie Railroad and the establishment of a station at that point. The present business of this place includes the station building and other structures of the railroad; N. S. Thompson, drug-store; Hiram Tuthill, dry-goods, groceries, etc.; M. E. Clark, groceries; J. T. Thompson, hardware; King & Board, feed, lumber, etc.; J. P. Bull, confectionery and tobacco, also postmaster; S. Haddan, carriage manufactory; Masterson Brothers, dry-goods, groceries, etc.; T. H. Bryan, sash, blinds, and coal; the Howland House, built by Daniel Conklin about 1844, and now kept by J. C. Howland; D. H. Rose, groceries, coal, feed; S. Suffern, meat-market; J. G. Kerner, boots and shoes; Masten Brothers, restaurant; Samuels' clothing-store; Misses Snowden, millinery; Mrs. Wilkin, millinery and dress-making; barber-rooms by Fisher, also by Hildebrandt; Charles M. Crissey, chair-factory and dealing in furniture; W. H. Conklin, tailor; Dr. Barcoe, dentist; blacksmith-shops by Samuel Wilkin, Joseph Gavin, and Charles Crist; Payne's jewelry-store; William C. Bodle, Timothy McGrath, Kinner & Wilkin, onion dealers.

The Methodist church, the national bank, the school-house of the primary department of the Union School, Roe's Hall, and the new opera-house constitute the public buildings of the place. These, together with quite a number of fine private residences, form a pleasant as well as a stirring business place.

WEST CHESTER

is situated about a mile from Chester. It is a small hamlet, distinct from the other villages sufficient to have a separate name. There are located at this place the creamery and cheese-factory of W. A. Lawrence, and a tailor-shop, combined with something of a grocery-store, by Charles House. At this place Frank J. Murray resides, who does a large wholesale business in buying veal calves and slaughtering for the New York market. Near by, on the Otterkill, is the Seeley grist-mill. This was formerly known as the Daniel Denton mill. There is also a saw-mill in connection.

EAST CHESTER

is the name given to the station of the Warwick Valley Railway, a half-mile or more from Old Chester. A small station-building, a blacksmith-shop by B. DuBois, and a wagon-shop by Charles Olmstead are about all that can be mentioned at that place.

GRAY COURT STATION.

This is an important railway junction. The Newburgh Branch of the Erie Railway unites with the main line at this point, and the Warwick Valley Railroad also. The railroad business is naturally of considerable extent. A few residences have been erected near. There is a hotel and restaurant by John Proctor, and a store by Thomas Stevenson.

THE SALEM NEIGHBORHOOD

is a pleasant district on the east or southeast part of the town. The Protestant Methodist Church of Chester is located there, and a school-house, but there is no trade or other business there except farming.

SUGAR-LOAF VILLAGE

takes its name from the mountain and the valley, both known by that name in the early settlement. At this place is the Crans' Hotel, and there are stores by J. Vanduzer and W. W. Elmer, and one or two shops or other business places. The Methodist church, a school-house, and a few residences complete the village. The post-office was established about 1825. The first postmaster was Josiah Howell. He was succeeded, 1830 or 1831, by Edgar Wells. His successors have been A. A. Ackley, William Hallock, N. W. Conklin, 1864 to 1873; W. W. Elmer, for about three months; N. W. Conklin, reappointed, and retaining the office at the present time.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

There is little or no information to be obtained in any authentic form about the early schools. Soon after the organization of the town the control of the schools was taken from the towns and given to the district commissioners, so there are no town school officers to be named.

CHESTER ACADEMY.

This was founded in 1845. The old book of records was probably destroyed in one of the fires which have occurred in Chester, and we cannot give the names of the founders nor of the first board of trustees. A building was erected immediately, being the one now occupied by the academic department of the Union School. The school had quite a flourishing existence for some years, being under the care of the regents of the university, and sharing in the distribution of the Literature Fund. William Bross and Stephen Bross were the first teachers, the former of whom afterwards became Lieutenant-Governor of Illinois. Rev. Phineas Robinson was principal from 1849 to 1857. He was succeeded for one year by H. Osburn. Edward Orton taught here from 1859 to 1865, now a professor in the Ohio State University at Columbus. A. Phinney was in charge from 1865 to 1868, and J. H. Cunningham taught for a time just before the change to a union school.

CHESTER UNION FREE SCHOOL, No. 1, the successor of the academy, was organized in the fall of 1869. It was a consolidation of three former districts, including a portion of the town of Goshen.

The first meeting was held, pursuant to legal notice, Nov. 6, 1869. Of this meeting Robert W. Colfax was chairman, and Lewis Masterson secretary. At the next meeting, November 12th, the enterprise was accomplished and the first Board of Education chosen, viz.: David R. Feagles, John B. Tuthill, Joseph Durland, Cornelius B. Wood, Charles P. Smith. The first president of the board was David R. Feagles; Joseph Durland was clerk, and William B. King treasurer. The latter had already served several years as treasurer of the academy, and he has been retained to the present time, making some twenty years' service as the custodian of the school moneys. The present board (October, 1880) consists of C. P. Smith, Alfred B. Roe, D. Howell Roe, Hiram Tuthill, and J. Hudson Board. The president is C. P. Smith, and the clerk Hiram Tuthill. The succession of principals has been H. P. Robinson, F. R. Ferris, N. H. Hart, William Simpson, for many years, and J. S. Eaton, the latter closing with the spring term of 1880.

The academic department is in the old academy at Chester village. The present teachers at that place are B. C. Nevins, Miss R. M. Everts, Miss A. M. Gaunt, and Miss M. B. Seeley. A primary department is maintained in the old school-house at the depot village. This is now taught by Miss C. S. Thompson. This union district includes the entire group of villages,—Chester, West Chester, East Chester, Chester at the Erie depot, and Gray Court Station.

VII.—CHURCHES.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF CHESTER

made a legal organization Dec. 26, 1826. The certificate was signed by Joseph Sherwood and James Holbert as inspectors of the election, and the trustees chosen were David Roe, Henry Seeley, James Holbert, Elnathan Satterly, Joseph Sherwood, and Townsend Seeley. This church has a much older history than the above date shows, which is fully developed in the following paper, furnished by the pastor:

"Previous to the Revolutionary war the families living in the village of Chester and vicinity were in the habit of holding public religious services in the school-room and in private houses. It was in the year previous to the declaration of independence that the first steps were taken towards erecting a meeting-house. Subscriptions were made of money, material, and labor; timber was felled and partly drawn, when the enterprise was suspended by the call to arms.

"Immediately at the close of the war the labor of erecting a house of worship was resumed. A building was raised and inclosed, and, though not completed and rudely furnished, was in use for several years. Its location was on the east side of the main street in the 'old' village of Chester, on or near the ground now occupied by the hotel. The cost of this unfinished building was $1390.

"It was not until 1799 that a settled minister was obtained for the congregation, the services meanwhile of preachers from abroad being secured as often as possible. In that year Rev. Simeon R. Jones was engaged to occupy the pulpit steadily at an annual salary of about $75, but this to be supplemented by a small stipend for services as teacher of the village school. Mr. Jones' ministry was a successful one. The congregation rapidly grew, his salary was soon increased, he was relieved from teaching, and the church building was completed and furnished. The log seats were removed and replaced by square pews. A round box-pulpit was introduced, galleries were erected on three sides of the room, and a steeple was raised. The cost of these additions and improvements was $1692, and therefore of the building entire $3082. By the sale of pews which followed the sum of $3404 was obtained. The edifice was dedicated on Sabbath, Sept. 19, 1802.

"Up to this period there was no church organization. The stated minister was a licentiate under the care of the Morris and Westchester Associate Presbytery, a seceding body from the Presbytery of New York, and it was probably by his influence that the Christian people of Chester were organized into a church by and under the care of this Associate Presbytery, which met at Chester for this purpose on Aug. 30, 1803. The persons constituting the organization were 21 in number, and the church being partly Congregational in order, Gen. Seth Marion and Jonathan Hallock were chosen deacons.

"During the first year that the church was organized 62 persons were added to the membership. Mr. Jones' ministry ended in 1805, and he was succeeded in the pastorate by Rev. Daniel Crane, who served the church but three years at this time, for he was a few years afterwards recalled. About this period the Associate Presbytery of Morris and Westchester dissolving, and the church at Chester being accordingly left without ecclesiastical connection, it was in the year 1810 taken under the care of the Presbytery of Hudson.

"On July 3, 1811, the Presbytery of Hudson met at Chester, and ordained and installed as pastor of the church Mr. Noah Coe. Mr. Coe was succeeded by Rev. James H. Thomas, who was installed Oct. 12, 1814. Mr. Thomas' pastorate continued for nearly thirteen years, and was richly blessed in the growth and prosperity of the church. During the years of 1820-21, 140 were added to the membership, making a total of over 200.

"Mr. Thomas was followed by Rev. Daniel Crane, a former pastor. During his second term of ministry a new church building was erected. Another site was chosen, and was where at present is situated the church cemetery. This second church building was dedicated Dec. 25, 1829. Mr. Crane's health failing, he was compelled to resign his ministry in Chester, and was dismissed by Presbytery in the year 1830. Rev. John B. Fish succeeded him, who remained with the church but three years, and was followed in turn by Rev. Isaac C. Beach, whose pastorate continued for ten years. Mr. Beach's ministry was signally crowned by God, to the edification of the church and the large increase of its membership.

"The Rev. James W. Wood (brother of the late Rev. Daniel Wood, of Middletown) began his ministry in 1845, though he was not installed until Jan. 27, 1846. Mr. Wood was born at Florida, this county, Oct. 25, 1813, graduated from Lafayette College in 1837, and three years later from the Union Theological Seminary at New York, and was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Hudson in September, 1839. His first settlement was at Deckertown, N. J., and from that place he was called to the church of Chester. During his ministry, and mainly by his exertions, the congregation was moved to erect a third church edifice, the building at present in use. Again a new site was chosen, and ground was broken April 9, 1853. The new building was dedicated January 4th of the following year. Dr. Wood's pastorate continued for more than seventeen years. From this place he was called to the Presbyterian Church at Allentown, Pa., where he still labors.

"Rev. Thomas Nichol was ordained and installed in April, 1862. He served the church with ability for about eight years, and was followed by the present pastor, Rev. Theodore A. Leggett. Mr. Leggett is the son of Rev. John H. Leggett, formerly pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church at Middletown, and previously to this, for twenty-two years, of the Hopewell Church, town of Crawford. He was born in Crawford, Dec. 20, 1845, graduated at Princeton College in 1865, and from the Princeton Theological Seminary in 1868. He was called from a settlement in New York to this church in 1871. During his ministry, which still continues, the church of Chester has reached its greatest strength in membership and its highest general prosperity."

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF SALEM

executed a certificate of incorporation Sept. 17, 1868. It was signed by E. Stevens and Walter H. Benjamin. The trustees named therein were Elisha Stevens, Walter H. Benjamin, Abram Stewart, George Stevens, and David Stevens. This organization was not continued. By its date it appears to have been made the same day that the Protestant Methodist Church was incorporated, given below. There was doubtless some discussion as to which form of church order had better be adopted, and two organizations were temporarily made.

THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH OF SALEM executed a certificate of incorporation Sept. 7, 1868. It was signed by E. Miller and Charles Fitzgerald, and the trustees named therein were Edward Mills, Charles Fitzgerald, Chauncey S. Horton, A. E. Conklin, and John H. Green. This church exists at the present time, though services are not held, except occasionally. They have a pleasant rural chapel, which is a matter of considerable convenience to the neighborhood, and a very flourishing Sabbath-school is maintained under the superintendence of Charles B. Roe.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF SUGAR-LOAF, WARWICK, executed a certificate of incorporation Aug. 6, 1809, at the house of Thomas Weadons. The paper was signed by Thomas Woolsey and Jesse Wood, Jr., as inspectors of election, and the trustees chosen were Henry Wisner, Jr., Joseph Beach, Andrew Cunningham, Benjamin Wells, Richard Wisner, Horace Ketchum, Elijah Stevens, John D. Conkling, Benjamin Horton. This is an old point of Methodist work, as shown by the early date above given. No statistics have been sent by the pastor in reply to our invitation. (See general chapter on religious societies.)

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF CHESTER.

The pastor of this church furnishes the following paper with reference to this society:

"The Methodist Episcopal Church of Chester was organized in 1837, and the first service held in the house of Job Hall by the preacher in charge of the Sugar-Loaf Circuit. Among the first members were William L. Foster, Anna Masterson, her daughter Mary, and son William, who remained an active and influential member to the day of his death. The society worshiped for some time in private houses, but finally secured the use of the academy, in which preaching services were held every two weeks. In 1850, under the plea that the renting of the academy for other than educational purposes was contrary to the charter, the small struggling society were refused its further use for religious worship. They then secured the ball-room of the old Yelverton house, in which they worshiped several months. In the mean time the trustees of the academy had revoked their former decision, and the society again occupied it for worship. In 1851 they determined to build a church. The land was purchased, and on Jan. 26, 1852, at a meeting duly called and organized, seven trustees were elected, viz.: C. B. Wood, William L. Foster, Daniel Conklin, S. R. Banker, J. T. Johnson, William Masterson, and B. G. McCabe. The following summer the present church was built, with a seating capacity of 400, and in October dedicated by Bishop E. S. Janes, the building and property costing $4500.

"In 1867 the church was enlarged by the addition of a lecture-room, class-rooms, etc., at an expense of $3000, and in 1872 the main audience-room was remodeled and beautified, costing $3000 more. At the Conference of 1854, Chester, which up to this time had been connected with the Sugar Loaf Circuit, was made a station, and Rev. B. M. Genung appointed pastor. In 1855 a parsonage was bought for $900, in which the preachers lived until 1878, when the present parsonage, the late residence of Dr. Smith, was bought, and the old one sold.

"The following pastors have served the church: 1854-55, B. M. Genung; 1856, R. A. Chalker; 1857-58, C. D. Foss; 1859, J. P. Hermance; 1860-61, E. L. Prentice; 1862-63, William Ostrander; 1864-65, H. G. Browning; 1866-67, P. R. Hawxhurst; 1868-70, William E. Clarke; 1871-73, C. W. Millard; 1874-75, J. P. Hermance; 1876-78, Geo. Clarke; 1879, G. N. Pratt. Mr. Pratt was taken sick soon after Conference, and, after a brief and broken pastorate of seven months, died. The pulpit was supplied during the winter by P. P. Harrower. 1880, J. Rowe.

"The present membership is 161, and the valuation of property, including church and parsonage, $13,500.

"The officers of the church are: Trustees, C. B. Wood, J. T. Johnson, Wm. C. Bodle, D. H. Roe, Lewis Masterson, H. W. Wood, John King, J. R. Pitts, Francis Murray; Stewards, Abram Wright, Wm. A. Lawrence, J. T. Thompson, Henry Masterson, C. Foss Wood, Charles Kerner, Elias Masten, Mortimer Crist, Roswell Chamberlain; Sunday-school Superintendent, J. T. Thompson. C. B. Wood, J. T. Johnson, and H. W. Wood have each served as trustees, through successive re-elections, every year since their first election, the first two in 1852, and the last in 1853, besides filling other important offices.

"The Sunday-school, which was organized when the church was built, is in a prosperous condition, numbering at present 116 scholars and 18 officers and teachers. The church has steadily progressed in numbers and influence since its organization, and hopes for greater prosperity in the future."

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

The remains of an old burial-place may be seen in the village of Chester. The newer grounds in the villages are in very good preservation.

THE GRAY COURT CEMETERY ASSOCIATION

was incorporated Nov. 19, 1856. The meeting was held at the house of William Roe, and William Roe was appointed chairman, Dewitt C. Thompson, secretary. The trustees appointed were William Roe, Cortland S. Marvin, Henry C. Griggs, Dewitt C. Thompson, Wicks Seeley, Seeley C. Roe. This cemetery is not far from the site of the Gray Court house of early times, north or northwest of the "meadows," and is rather handsomely laid out and well cared for.

IX.—SOCIETIES, LIBRARIES, BANKS, Etc.

STANDARD LODGE, No. 711, F. AND A. M., was instituted July 27, 1871. Its first officers were John F. Mackie, W. Master; N. Demerest, S. Warden; T. H. Bryan, Junior Warden. Its charter members were John F. Mackie, of Warwick Lodge; N. Demerest, of Goshen; T. H. Bryan, of Hoffman; G. W. Clark, of Hoffman; Samuel Marvin, of Goshen; George Parsons, of Goshen; C. O. Van Vliet, of Goshen; Nathan Bryan, of Goshen; E. T. Jackson, of Goshen; N. K. Crotty, of Goshen; Joseph S. Young, of Goshen; Dr. H. P. Ferris, of Warwick. The lodge is located in East Chester, one mile from Erie Railroad depot.

THE CHESTER LIBRARY

was incorporated Nov. 17, 1797. The trustees named in the certificate were David Webb, James Bradner, Abijah Yelverton, Peter Townsend, Colville Carpenter, Joseph Wickham, and Nathan Jones. The certificate was verified before Judge Wickham, and recorded Nov. 18, 1797.

This was located at Chester village, and Mr. George Board states that Abijah Yelverton was the librarian. He has heard his mother speak of obtaining books there. The library was probably never very large.

It was discontinued after a few years and the books scattered.

CHESTER NATIONAL BANK.

This institution, originally founded as a State bank, was established by the following gentlemen, who signed articles of association Aug. 23, 1845. The subscription to the stock had been made during a few weeks preceding, beginning with June 30th: Alex. Wright, Wm. H. Houston, Francis Tuthill, Gabriel Seeley, Jesse Bull, Benjamin Sayer, Jr., Peter Townsend, Jr., James Wheeler, James Bradner, Henry W. Owen, Jesse Oldfield, William W. Brook, Alsop V. The association immediately contracted for the erection of the present building, and it was built during that fall and the ensuing winter. James Hazard was the builder. The bank was opened for business about the 21st of May, 1846. The first president of the bank was James Wheeler, who served until June, 1851. His successor was Edward L. Welling, who continued in the office until his death in the winter of 1855. In June of that year James Burt was chosen, and is still the president after a service of over twenty-five years. These three presidents were all from the town of Warwick. The first cashier was Alexander Wright, who served until June, 1851. He was succeeded by Mr. John T. Johnson, who is still cashier, now in his thirtieth year of service. The capital stock was $100,400 at the organization. It was increased to $125,500 at a subsequent date. The institution became a national bank in 1865.

The present board of directors (October, 1880) consists of James Burt (who has been a director from 1845), James B. Wheeler, Ezra Sanford, Bradner

JOHN T. JOHNSON.—His grandfather, James Johnson, was of Welsh descent, and married, in New York City, a Miss Vantilburg, who was born in Holland, who bore him an only child, John, father of our subject. John Johnson was born in Newark, N. J., in 1763, married for his first wife a Miss Townsend, who bore him an only child, Sarah, who became the wife of Edward James, a lawyer in Goshen, where he died.

For his second wife John Johnson married Orpha, widow of Timothy Little, and daughter of Col. John Tuthill, of Blooming-Grove, Orange Co. She was born Nov. 11, 1781, and died June 15, 1855, leaving an only child, the subject of this sketch.

While a young man John Johnson came to Goshen, where he established himself in the saddle and harness business, which he carried on until his death, which occurred June 25, 1821. He was a member of the Episcopal Church at that place, and his second wife a member of the Presbyterian Church.

John T. Johnson was born in Goshen, Feb. 18, 1815, and was therefore only six years of age when his father died. He resided with his maternal grandfather, Col. Tuthill, who was one of the first settlers of Erin, Chemung Co., N. Y., until he was fifteen years old, when he came to Chester, and was a clerk in the store of his uncle, Francis Tuthill, of that place, for the following seven years. For one year following he was a clerk in the store of Townsend & Kinney, at Peru, Ill., and then took up 300 acres of land on Fox River, in that State, where, however, he remained only a short time. For three years following he was the clerk of Harden Bigelow, contractor of the Illinois Central Railroad. He then engaged as clerk for Isaac Abram, of Peru, and in 1843 again entered the service of Mr. Bigelow, and had charge of shipping the railroad iron for him.

The same year he returned to Chester, and was a clerk until 1847 in the store of Tuthill & Seeley, when he became a partner in the business, under the firm-name of Tuthill, Seeley & Johnson, his uncle withdrawing and John B. Tuthill becoming a member of the concern. In this relation he continued until 1851, when he was elected cashier of the Chester Bank, with Edward L. Welling as president. Mr. Welling served as president until 1855, and was superseded by James Burt, who held the office until Jan. 11, 1881, when Mr. Johnson, who had remained cashier from his first election, was chosen president, which position he holds at the present time, thus being for a period of thirty years identified with the history of that bank. Since his connection with the bank his financial ability has been recognized as safe, judicious, and honest. Prior to this he took some interest in local political matters, and for one term served as supervisor of Chester. His life has been devoted to business, and he is known as a man of strict integrity in all the relations of life, well informed upon the current topics of the times, sociable, frank in his manner, and a substantial citizen.

X.—PLACES OF HISTORICAL INTEREST.

GRAY COURT

is the old historic name bestowed by the first settler, Daniel Cromeline, upon his estate, in imitation of English custom, and it was applied to his dwelling,—which subsequently became a famous hostelry of ante-Revolutionary times,—to the hamlet that grew up around him, and to the meadows in this vicinity.

The old Gray Court or Cromeline house stood on the north or northeast side of the meadows, somewhat opposite to the present railroad station of the same name. It was taken down within the memory of many persons now living. Its site was very nearly the same as that of the dwelling now occupied by Widow Wisner. The present house was erected by Francis Woodhull, who owned the place for some years. The site must be considered a place of historic interest.

In 1776, Chester was made a point of rendezvous for the militia of Ulster and Orange, under command of Gen. George Clinton. They were there for some little time, giving rise to the tradition that a portion of the Continental army encamped there, which is not correct. The militia encamped upon the Townsend place, and the officers boarded at the house of Wm. Vail. Some detachments doubtless occupied other points. Mrs. Hoffman, of Goshen, has relics picked up from the camping-ground upon her ancestor's farm, a mile or so distant from the above place.

SUGAR-LOAF MOUNTAIN

risers majestically, in a conical form, several hundred feet above the level of the surrounding lands. The apex of the cone is covered with a woody top-knot or crest, which gives it a pleasant and gay appearance. "Eager's History" gives the following:

"On a farm in this vicinity, owned by Mr. Jonathan Archer,* there was an Indian burying-ground at the early settlement of the country. Our informant, upwards of eighty-six years old, said she saw it frequently before the Revolution, and once afterwards. She thought there were about thirty graves. Around each grave there were pieces of split wood, set in the ground so close as almost to touch each other, and higher than her head. There was no regularity in the position of the graves. These, doubtless, were the honored receptacles of chiefs and warriors; for, from all we have learned upon inquiry through the county, it appears that such were not interred in a common yard with other Indians. While each tribe or settlement had a common receptacle for depositing the dead, several settlements, though many miles apart, buried their chiefs in ground appropriated for the purpose; so that while the latter were few in number, the former were numerous. When a chief was buried the Indians attended from a great distance around."

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

Agriculture is the principal business of the people of Chester. There are many good farms in the town.

* Probably the present Richard Bull farm was the one mentioned by Mr. Eager, as that agrees with the local tradition of the present time.

John T. Johnson

The culture of onions has received special attention upon the Gray Court meadows, and is a leading article of export. These lands are very productive, though farmers use fertilizers, notwithstanding the rich black soil is of great depth. The Gray Court meadows are worth from $400 to $700 per acre. They are owned in small parcels, containing from one or two acres to fifteen. This division is favorable to close cultivation, and enables a large number to avail themselves of these famous lands. A thousand dollars' worth of onions is sometimes taken yearly from a single acre. The business is so extensive that there are no less than three parties engaged in buying and shipping onions at the market season of the year. These lands also yield abundant crops of corn, and vegetables in considerable quantities are raised. There is but little manufacturing in town.

XII.—REBELLION RECORD.

Although the town suffered the loss of its records by fire, fortunately, through the efforts of Mr. James B. Stevens, supervisor in 1864, assisted by Mr. J. G. Clark, a very complete statement of the part taken by the town in the war of the Rebellion was filed in the Bureau of Military Records. From this statement and from other reliable sources the following list has been compiled. Officers of towns who failed to perform a similar duty will perhaps see in Mr. Stevens' work the importance of attention to such matters. The absence of similar records in other towns is a neglect which has no reasonable excuse.

The town of Chester furnished at the outbreak of the war and prior to July, 1862, 34 men, viz.:

Militia.....	2	Ninetieth Regiment	3
Eighteenth Regiment.....	7	Cavalry.....	2
Fifty-sixth Regiment.....	7	First Regiment.....	1
Forty-fourth Regiment.....	3	Engineers.....	1
Forty-eighth Regiment.....	7
Seventieth Regiment.....	1	Total.....	34

The quota assigned to the town under the calls of July and August, 1862, was 57, and the town was credited by the senatorial committee with 65, a surplus of 8. The enlistments were:

One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment.....	36	Corcoran's Brigade.....	2
One Hundred and Sixty-sixth Regiment.....	27	Total.....	65

The quota under the draft of July, 1863, was 34, which number, with fifty per cent. additional, was drawn. One (Edward L. Welling) sent substitute; one (John Amhurst, colored) entered service, 23 commuted, and 26 were discharged. Total credits 25.

The calls for October, 1863, and February and March, 1864, were merged calls, and also included the July draft. The number of men required was:

To supply deficiencies under draft of July.....	34
Under all other calls.....	17
	51

The town received credit for 25 under the July draft, 29 enlistments in 1863, and 11 enlistments in February, 1864; total, 65. Under these calls 44 men were furnished.

Under the call of July, 1864, 26 men were furnished. The quota under the December call was 4, and was filled by 4 substitutes. On settlement with the Paymaster-General the town was allowed an excess of seventy-four years, $14,800, and for substitutes and volunteers, $2400; total, $17,200.

By subscription in 1862, paid for bounties.....	$1,600
By bonds in 1864.....	15,350

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JESSE ROE.

Jonas Roe came from Scotland with two of his brothers, and settled at Florida, Orange Co., N. Y., about the year 1730. A deed of the property owned by him is dated 1737 and written on parchment. He reared a family of seven sons and several daughters, of whom Nathaniel resided in Unionville, and has several descendants there; William and Jonas have descendants also in Orange County. Benjamin and George married and reared families in Sussex Co., N. J., where they settled in 1798.

Jesse Roe

Capt. Nathaniel Roe, grandfather of our subject, and a descendant of one of the original settlers, owned and settled the property in the town of Chester now in possession of the heirs of Jesse Roe, upon which he settled in 1751. In 1762 he built a house on this farm, consisting of 500 acres, which remained the homestead domicile until 1845, when it was torn down and the present residence erected by Jesse Roe. Nathaniel Roe died in 1813, aged eighty-one, and his wife, Susannah, died within forty-eight hours of the time of his death, aged eighty-three years.

Nathaniel, son of Nathaniel Roe, born Aug. 11, 1761, resided upon this homestead his whole life, owning some 300 acres, which comprises its present size. He died May 23, 1833. Both he and his wife, Mary Satterly, whom he married April 4, 1782, were attendants of the Presbyterian Church at Chester, of which she was a member and one of its founders. She was born March 29, 1763, and died Oct. 8, 1840. Their children were Betsy, born April 24, 1787, the wife of Thaddeus Seeley, of Chester; Abigail, born May 12, 1789, the wife of Garret Curry, and died in Chester; Lewis H., born Dec. 2, 1790; Juliana, born Jan. 26, 1793, the wife of John Green, of Chester; Thomas W., born Feb. 18, 1795; Nathaniel S., born Feb. 13, 1799; William, born March 12, 1801; Genest M., born Aug. 16, 1804; and Jesse, born July 2, 1806. All were married and reared families except Nathaniel, who died young.

Jesse Roe succeeded to the homestead, and married, Feb. 15, 1832, Dolly Caroline, daughter of Jesse and Dolly (Watkins) Booth, of Hamptonburgh, who was born June 18, 1812, and survives in 1881. Mr. Roe, like his forefathers, devoted his life to agricultural pursuits. He was a thoroughgoing farmer, and a man of strict integrity and correct habits.

At the age of sixteen he became a member of the Presbyterian Church at Chester, of which his wife was also a member, and which he officially served as elder and trustee for many years. He was a director in the Chester Bank during the latter years of his life, and died Sept. 21, 1876, leaving his property, which he obtained partly by purchase and partly by inheritance, to his children.

The children of Jesse Roe are George, born Nov. 12, 1832, died June 27, 1850; Thomas H., a farmer of Blooming-Grove; Harriet, wife of Chas. R. Bull, of the same town; Alfred B., residing on the old homestead; Virgil, born Nov. 19, 1843, died July 9, 1863; Mary, wife of J. Erskine Mills, a druggist of Middletown, N. Y.; and Matilda, born Oct. 27, 1849, died May 1, 1867.

JAMES DURLAND.

His grandfather, Charles Durland, came from Long Island in 1756, and was engaged on the frontier in the French and Indian war. After its close he married Jane Swartwout and settled on a farm, a part of which is now owned by the subject of this sketch. In 1783 he built the residence now on the place, and which has been the homestead domicile since. He was exempted from service in the struggle of the colonies for independence, and died about 1800, aged sixty-seven. His children were Mary (wife of Mr. Wood, of Minisink), Garret, Joseph, John, Charles, Elizabeth (wife of Vincent Wood, of Goshen), Rosannah (wife of Peter Holbert, of Minisink), and Samuel. All of these children married and reared families in Orange County.

Joseph, son of Charles, born March 31, 1762, was a scout during the close of the Revolutionary struggle. He married Martha Board, of Ringwood, N. J., who bore him children,—Charles, Elizabeth (wife of Jonas King), James, and Thomas, who were both drowned in a pond near the homestead while young. His second wife, Sally, daughter of Samuel Satterly, bore him the following children: Martha (widow of John M. Bull, of Blooming-Grove), Jonas, Samuel, Keziah (died young), Susan (wife of George Mapes, of Goshen), James, Thomas, and Seeley. Joseph Durland, with his brother Samuel, inherited the homestead, the former making for his homestead the place now owned by James Durland, of about 100 acres. Joseph Durland was an honorable and upright citizen, a man of correct habits, a supporter of church interests, and assisted in building the first Presbyterian church edifice erected at Chester, of which his wife was a member. His second wife died in May, 1838, aged sixty years. He died Aug. 28, 1828. Their children who survive in 1881 are Martha, Thomas, and James, subject of this notice.

James Durland was born on the homestead, Sept. 14, 1811. He succeeded to the homestead property by purchase in 1865, upon which he has resided his whole life. In 1833 he engaged in the mercantile business at Chester with his brother Samuel, who died the same year, and continued the business with a younger brother, Thomas, until 1837, when the business was sold to M. C. Denton. In 1843, in company with William Masterson, he bought the store stock again, which the firm carried on until 1847, when Mr. Durland disposed of his interest in the concern. This business he carried on in connection with farming, and since the latter date he has given his attention mostly to dairying. It is a fact worthy of note in connection with the great dairy interests of Orange County that in 1843 Mr. Durland shipped the first milk from Chester for sale in New York, it being sent in a common barrel-churn on the Erie Railway.

Mr. Durland has been identified with nearly all of the varied enterprises in his town during his active business life, and in the many cases in which he has been selected as executor and administrator of estates, running through a term of nearly fifty years, his official relations have never been questioned, nor has his integrity been in any way impaired. In 1842 he was one of the building committee of the Chester Academy, and he was a member of the building committee of the Presbyterian Church at Chester in 1853. He has served as one of the trustees of the church for many years, and has been a member of the same since 1856. In 1835 he married Amelia, daughter of John Vernon, of Long Island. She was born Sept. 23, 1806, was a devoted Christian woman, a member of the church at Chester, and died Dec. 19, 1876. Their children who grew to manhood and womanhood are Jane (wife of John B. Tuthill, of Chester), died in 1867, aged thirty; Samuel S., residing on the homestead with his father; Martha (wife of Alfred B. Roe, a farmer in Chester); and John J., a farmer and merchant of Rushford, Minn.

JAMES J. BOARD.

His grandfather, James Board, with his brothers David and Joseph, came from Wales, and settled in Ringwood, N. J., prior to the Revolutionary war, and were managers of the iron-works at that place. James' house was the welcome and hospitable stopping-place for officers and soldiers of the Continental army during the war. James, son of James Board, and father of our subject, died on the homestead at Ringwood in October, 1801, leaving a wife, Nancy, daughter of Capt. Phineas Heard, of Blooming-Grove, Orange Co., N. Y., and had six children, viz.: Polly, Ann, Hetty, John H., Eliza J., and James J. After her husband's death Mrs. Board married Isaac Kingsland, and resided at Boonton, N. J., where she died, leaving six children by her second marriage.

Prior to his marriage James Board, with his brother Cornelius, came to Chester (then Goshen), Orange Co., N. Y., and purchased some 300 acres of land in Sugar-Loaf Valley, upon which Cornelius resided the remainder of his life and reared a family, whose descendants are scattered, but some of whom are settled now in Orange County. James found his wife here, returned to the homestead at Ringwood, where he died when James J. was yet unborn.

Another brother of James was Philip, who settled in Kentucky.

James J. Board, youngest son of James Board, was born at Ringwood, March 30, 1802, and was reared by his uncle Cornelius, in the town of Chester. At the age of sixteen he went to learn the tanning and currying business at Washingtonville, Orange Co., with Moses Ely, where he remained until he reached his majority, when he purchased 140 acres of land near his uncle's, upon which he resided until 1850. He was a thoroughgoing farmer, and dealt considerably in cattle, and for fifteen years supplied West Point with meat. In 1849 he was selected to take charge of the Yelverton estate at Chester, and in 1850 removed to that village and engaged in mercantile business and freighting produce to New York, in which he continued until about 1874, when he retired from the more active duties of life. Mr. Board was one of the building committee of the Chester Academy in 1842, and was one of the board of trustees as long as the building was used as an academy. He sold the ground for the Presbyterian church at Chester, it being a part of the Yelverton estate. He has been several times selected as administrator and executor of estates, and his integrity remains unimpaired in all his business transactions. Upon the erection of the town of Chester he took an active part, and during its early history was officially connected with it. Mr. Board is a plain, unassuming man, who has preferred the quiet life of a business man and farmer to place in politics.

His wife, Huldah, daughter of Capt. William Hudson and Susan Tuthill, of Blooming-Grove, whom he married in December, 1822, was born July 25, 1801, and died March 30, 1877. Mr. and Mrs. Board were members of the Presbyterian Church at Chester. Their children are Mary, wife of John W. Roe, a farmer in Chester; Jonathan H., a farmer in Chester; Susan, wife of Samuel Gillette, of Le Roy, Genesee Co., N. Y.; Emily, wife of Jesse Owen, of Chemung, N. Y.; and Nancy K., wife of Joseph Durland, a merchant at Chester, who occupies the store where formerly Mr. Board did business.

MINARD SUTTON.

The early representatives of the Sutton family in America were of Scotch extraction. John Sutton, the grandfather of Minard, was an early resident of Orange County, and the father of the following sons: Benjamin, Joseph, John, Abram, and William. Of this number, John, during his early life, was a resident of the paternal home, and married Miss Bitterage Cranse, of Orange County, to whom were born children,—Minard, William, John, Lewis J., Harriet, who became Mrs. S. S. Loud; Sarah Jane, who married Thomas B. Sly; and Elizabeth, who was united to T. J. Hasbrook. The death of John Sutton occurred Dec. 10, 1856, upon the homestead where his life was spent. His son Minard, a brief sketch of whose life is here given, was born in Warwick township, Oct. 17, 1804, and at an early age left his father's home to engage in employments that were self-supporting. He acquired the trade of a saddle- and harness-maker, which vocation he followed for a brief period, after which he purchased a farm and devoted himself to agricultural pursuits. Sugar-Loaf became his residence in 1846, and continued so to be during the remainder of his lifetime, the property he acquired being familiarly known as the Knapp homestead. To Mr. Sutton's enterprise the vicinity is indebted for its extensive creamery interests. He established one at Sugar-Loaf in 1855, and another at Warwick in 1863, these being the first in their respective localities. Mr. Sutton may justly be regarded as one of Chester's most enterprising citizens, and the leading spirit of the hamlet of Sugar-Loaf. He encouraged labor, gave employment to the industrious, and assisted with both means and counsel the needy and deserving. He aided largely in the construction of the Warwick Valley Railroad, and was a promoter of other public enterprises. Mr. Sutton was a Democrat in politics, and was for many years justice of the peace of his township. In religion he was a Baptist, and a consistent member of the Old-School Baptist Church at Warwick, of which he was deacon. He was married in 1831 to Sarah A., daughter of Nathaniel Knapp, of Sugar-Loaf, and had four sons,—Nathaniel K., John W., Cyrus J., and one who died in infancy. His two daughters are Ann M. (Mrs. William B. Knapp) and Sarah E. (Mrs. John M. Knapp). The grandchildren of the family are Nathaniel S., Mary E. (Mrs. Fred. B. La Rue), and Libbie Knapp.

The death of Minard Sutton occurred June 20, 1868, his widow and two daughters having survived him. His life was full of activity and usefulness, and his death was, in a corresponding degree, a loss to the community.

NATHANIEL ROE.*

His grandfather, William Roe, inherited a part of the original purchase of his father, Capt. Nathaniel Roe, where the latter settled in 1751, in the town of Chester, and on which Capt. Roe built a house in 1792, which has been the home of William Roe and his descendants since, and is now the property of John W. Roe.

William Roe married Mary Winans, who bore him children as follows: David, succeeded to the homestead, was born May 14, 1784, and died in 1856; Nathaniel, died a young man; William, father of our subject; Hannah, became the wife of Henry Barney, and died in Warwick; Susan, was the wife of Jacob Feagles, at Amity, where she died; Mary, wife of Gabriel Seeley, resided in Chester, and there died; Elizabeth, died unmarried. William Roe was a captain in the old State militia, and died in 1801.

William, son of William Roe, and father of our subject, was born in 1788, and died in 1841. His wife was Mittie, daughter of John Mapes, of Chester, who died in 1823, leaving the following children: Nathaniel; John, died in 1881, aged sixty-three; David, died in 1878, aged fifty-five, leaving a wife and one son, George M.; and Hannah, died at the age of seventeen. William Roe was a farmer by occupation, and a part of his life resided at the Black Meadows, in Chester.

Nathaniel, his eldest son, was born Nov. 11, 1815, and at the age of eight years went to live with his maternal grandfather, Thaddeus Seeley, and after his death lived with his son, Gabriel Seeley, in Chester, where he remained until his marriage. On April 4, 1843, he married Sarah, daughter of Gen. Charles Board and Joanna Seeley, of Ringwood, N. J., and granddaughter of Joseph Board, who, with his two brothers, James and David, emigrated from Wales and settled at that place, where they had charge of the iron-works and owned some 1500 acres of land in the Pompton Valley. His wife was born Jan. 7, 1815. Their children are Charles B., a farmer in Chester; Gabriel S., a farmer in Kendall Co., Ill.; Thomas Beach, a farmer in Chester; Nathaniel, a farmer in Blooming-Grove; Henry M.; and Hannah E. After his marriage Mr. Roe rented a farm for ten years, and then purchased a farm, upon which he remained a few years. In 1855 he bought his present farm, consisting of 200 acres, upon which he built his present substantial farm residence in 1867. This property has been his homestead since, which shows to the passer-by the handiwork of a careful, thrifty, and intelligent farmer. He started out in life without pecuniary assistance, and by self-reliance, industry, and judicious management may safely be classed among the leading agriculturists of his town. The products of his dairy, in the form of milk, are marketed in New York.

Mr. Roe served as assessor for three years, beginning in 1856, and represented it in the board of supervisors in 1877. He has been a director in the Chester Bank for the past three years. Both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Chester, of which he has been an elder for many years.

IRA BULL.

Ira Bull was one of the great-grandsons of William Bull, the progenitor of the Bull family. A notice of his ancestry in Orange County is given in the sketch of his brother, Jesse Bull, of Blooming-Grove. Richard Bull, therein mentioned, the father of Ira, was born Oct. 25, 1762, on the homestead in Hamptonburgh, in the old stone house. He married Lena, daughter of Benjamin Harlow, of Phillipsburgh, April 12, 1800, and soon after settled on a partly cleared tract of land in Sugar-Loaf Valley, in the town of Chester, which he bought of Mr. Van Houten, now containing 320 acres, it being a part of the Wawandanda Patent, where he made his homestead. Upon this property he erected a frame house, which has been superseded by the present substantial farm residence, erected by his son, and during his life made many improvements on the property. He built a grist-mill and saw-mill on the place, which he carried on during his life, and which have since been operated by his son. He died Jan. 5, 1846. His wife was born June 19, 1772, and died March 2, 1854. She was one of the early members of the Presbyterian Church at Chester. Their children are Hannah, wife of Joseph Roy, of Warwick, born February, 1801; Jesse, whose history is given on another page; James H., born Jan. 15, 1805, of Monroe; Daniel H., whose sketch is given in the history of Hamptonburgh; Ira, born Dec. 27, 1809; and Charles W., who died Oct. 11, 1865, aged fifty-three.

Ira Bull spent his minority on the farm and in assisting his father in the mills, where he in early life became inured to labor and learned the necessity of industry and economy to a successful business life. He married, Dec. 10, 1845, Phebe, daughter of Ira Hawkins, and granddaughter of Moses Hawkins, who came from Long Island and settled in the East Division of the town of Goshen.

Ira Hawkins' family consisted of three sons and three daughters. Her mother was Hannah, daughter of Gen. Abram Vail, also of the East Division. Mrs. Bull was born Nov. 28, 1825, and has the following children: Hannah Lena, wife of Erastus W. Hawkins, of Brooklyn; Mary Adaline; Jesse James, born Aug. 21, 1850, died in infancy; Phebe Ann; Sarah Wells, wife of Thomas W. Houston, of Goshen; Iretta Hawkins, born Dec. 2, 1857, died Oct. 16, 1871; Charles Ira; and Frank M., born Oct. 24, 1864, died Oct. 16, 1871.

Mr. Bull succeeded to the homestead property, partly by purchase and partly by inheritance, upon which he has resided during his life. All the appointments of his well-cultivated farm show the care and management of a thrifty farmer. He has been a director in the Chester Bank for the past three years, and both he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Chester, of which he has served as trustee for many years.

JOHN KING.

The paternal great-grandfather of John King served for six years in the French and Indian war in Canada, and after its close, in 1761, came to Orange County, and resided on the Gray Court meadows. His children were John, Joseph, Peter, and Susan, wife of Samuel Green, of Monroe. John, born Nov. 4, 1757, was four years old when his parents left Canada. He married, Jan. 5, 1784, Margaret Gray, who was born May 10, 1760, and died Jan. 19, 1834. He died Feb. 13, 1844. Soon after his marriage he settled on 200 acres of land, a part of the Wawayanda Patent, in Sugar-Loaf Valley, in the town of Chester (then Goshen). The deed is dated Sept. 12, 1790. The land, then a wilderness tract, he began clearing of its original forest and preparing its virgin soil for crops from year to year, and during his life he added another parcel of 100 acres. This property has been the homestead since, and is now owned and occupied by the subject of this sketch, his grandson.

John King, the original settler of this land, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war in defense of the colonies. He was one of the early members of the Presbyterian Church at Chester. His children were James; Abel; Elizabeth, wife of John Woodruff, died at Bethlehem, Orange Co.; Sarah, wife of Lewis H. Roe; Jonas, father of our subject; Ezra; and Juliana, wife of Anselm H. Denniston,—all married and settled in Orange County except James, Abel, and Ezra.

Jonas King was born Sept. 13, 1793, and succeeded, partly by purchase and partly by inheritance, to the homestead property, upon which he resided all his life, except some two years spent in the town of Monroe after his marriage. He was a man of correct habits, and gave his active business life to agricultural pursuits. He served as town clerk for one year. He died Aug. 26, 1873. His wife, whom he married April 6, 1815, was Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Durland and Martha Board, and granddaughter of Charles Durland, who came from Long Island in 1756 and settled at Chester, on the farm now owned by James Durland. She was born in 1796, was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Chester, and died October, 1843. Their children are Martha; John; Lewis and Charles, of Illinois; Elizabeth, wife of William Masterson; Sarah, wife of James W. Mapes, of Cayuga County; Edmund; Mary; Phoebe; Louisa, wife of Curtis Z. Winters; and Susan,—all living.

John King, son of Jonas, was born while his parents lived in Monroe, Aug. 9, 1817, and succeeded to the homestead property, where he has spent his life in the occupation of his farm. He has made some additions to the house which his grandfather John built, which has been the homestead domicile for nearly one hundred years. Like his forefathers, Mr. King has not sought political place, and has never held office, except to act as assessor of his town for two terms and commissioner of highways for three years, and, like them, he is a plain, unassuming, and judicious farmer. His wife, whom he married Sept. 25, 1861, is Hannah M., daughter of Nicholas H. Caywood and Susan Mapes, of Weedsport, Cayuga Co., and granddaughter of John Caywood, who owned a tannery and made shoes for the army of the Revolution, in which war he served for a time as a soldier, and after its close settled at Ovid, Seneca Co., where he died. Her father died at her residence, Feb. 18, 1881, aged seventy-six, and her mother died July 11, 1872, aged fifty-eight. Mrs. King was born Sept. 17, 1832, and, with her husband, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Chester, of which Mr. King officiates as steward and has served as trustee. Mrs. King has one brother, Chauncey C. Her sister, Elizabeth, died in 1860, at the age of twenty-three.

ROBERT W. COLFAX.

His grandfather, Robert Colfax, resided at Pompton, Passaic Co., N. J., and, with his brother, Gen. William Colfax, who was one of Gen. Washington's body-guard, was engaged in the manufacture of iron there and in farming. He was judge of the county, and a prominent and influential citizen. He died at Pompton, leaving a large family of children, of whom William R. was the father of Robert W. Colfax, a sister of whom, Harriet, married Jacob M. Ryerson, son of Judge Martin Ryerson, of New Jersey. A grandson of William Colfax, ex-Vice-President Colfax, is a cousin of the subject of this sketch. William R. Colfax, born in 1791, at Pompton, married Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Hogan. She died at about the age of sixty-six, some five years prior to the death of her husband, which occurred in 1873. William R. Colfax resided at West Milford, N. J., where he was engaged in milling and farming. His children are Mary Jane, deceased; Sarah, became the wife of Isaac Scofield, of Parsippany, N. J.; Harriet R., wife of Edmund S. Miller, of West Milford; Deborah H., wife of Albert Baldwin, of Newark; Eliza, wife of A. H. Lawrence, a farmer in the town of Blooming-Grove; Robert W.; Ellen F., wife of George W. Colwell, of New York; Saphronia, wife of G. Van Emburgh, of Newark; Joseph H., a merchant of Keokuk, Iowa; Hannah, wife of Henry Hanfield, a commission merchant in New York; Richard and William (twins), both merchants, the latter at Bloomfield, N. J., and the former at Ridgewood, N. J.; and Maria L., who was the wife of James N. Cooley, of West Milford.

Robert W. Colfax was born at West Milford, Dec. 25, 1825. He started out in life with no pecuniary assistance, save what he earned himself, and with only a limited education from books. At the age of seventeen he came to Chester, and was apprenticed to J. H. & G. W. Colwell, cabinet-makers, where he remained four years and became fully conversant with the business. Here he saved a little money, and at the end of his apprenticeship took a tour through some of the Western States, with a view to settlement in business. Returning in a few months, he became a partner with the Colwells, under the firm-name of Colwells & Colfax, and after five years bought out the business, which he successfully carried on until 1855. In 1856 he established a stove and tinware store at Chester, and continued this business until 1874, when he retired from the more active duties of life.

In business and as a private citizen, Mr. Colfax has always been esteemed for his integrity and honesty of purpose. As executor, administrator, and committee, positions which he has frequently filled, his qualifications have never been questioned. He served for many years as one of the trustees of the Chester Academy, and he has been a contributor to church and kindred interests in the vicinity where he resides, and a promoter of morality and religion in the community. Both himself and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Chester, of which he has been elder for some twenty-five years. He married, Jan. 3, 1849, Almira, daughter of Maj. James and Susan (Drake) Holbert, of Chester. Mrs. Colfax was born March 6, 1819. They have only one child, Emily H., wife of James S. Roe, a farmer in Chester.

CHARLES B. SEELY.

Thaddeus Seely, grandfather of Charles B. Seely, was one of the early settlers of the present town of Chester, and had his homestead about one mile south of the village, the farm being occupied in 1881 by Thaddeus Durland. By his first wife, who was a Miss Seely, he had three children,—Joanna, wife of Charles Board, of Ringwood, N. J.; Thaddeus; and Peter, who died young. His second wife bore him one son, Gabriel, who resided on the homestead and there died. By his third marriage he had no issue. Mr. Seely was a large farmer for his time, and among the early members of the Presbyterian Church of Chester. His son Thaddeus, father of Charles B. Seely, was born on the homestead, Aug. 15, 1782, and died Nov. 12, 1841. His wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Nathaniel, and granddaughter of Nathaniel Roe, the first settler of the Roe family in the town of Chester in 1751, whom he married Dec. 15, 1805. She was born April 24, 1787, and died Sept. 20, 1874. Their children are Joanna, died young; Edward, of Illinois; Mary, wife of George S. Conkling, of Goshen; George, died at the age of ten years; Charles B., Gabriel, and Thaddeus, farmers, occupying the homestead of their father; Elizabeth, died young. After his marriage Thaddeus Seely purchased 100 acres of land where his son Thaddeus now resides, and afterwards added to it some 300 acres. He was a thoroughgoing business man and a progressive farmer. He never sought the public places in his town, but led a quiet and unostentatious life.

Charles B. Seely, son of Thaddeus, was born June 19, 1817, and married, Oct. 19, 1842, Hannah Jane, daughter of Benjamin C. Coleman and Eleanor Vail, of Goshen. She was born Nov. 1, 1817. Her mother was a daughter of Gen. Abram Vail, of Goshen, and her paternal grandfather was Benjamin Coleman. The children of Mr. Seely are Ella; Fred B., who carries on the Chester flouring-mill; Hannah C., died, at the age of fourteen, June 2, 1863; Mary Frank, died at the age of twenty, April 25, 1872; and Charles A. In 1845, Mr. Seely purchased a farm of 125 acres near the Otterkill depot, to which he added other land, making 216 acres. This he carried on until 1864, when he sold it, and purchased a small place on the road from Goshen to Chester, where he remained for ten years. In 1874 he purchased a farm in the town of Chester, containing then 160 acres, including a part of the valuable Black Meadows, a part of which he has sold, retaining 127 acres, his present homestead.

Mr. Seely, like his forefathers, has led an uneventful life, unbroken by the bickerings of office-seeking or public place. He may well be ranked with the representative agriculturists of his town; is a promoter of all worthy local objects, and a man of practical ideas. His wife is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

JOHN B. TUTHILL.

The ancestry of the Tuthill family will be found in connection with a sketch of Oliver B. Tuthill, of Goshen, in this work. John Tuthill, therein mentioned, son of Nathaniel, was the grandfather of our subject. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and was a farmer in the town of Blooming-Grove. His wife was a Miss Seeley, who bore him the following children: Orpha, wife of Timothy Little, and after his death the wife of Mr. Johnson; E. Brewster, died in Chemung County; John lived and died in Chemung County; Milecent, wife of Dr. Townsend Seeley, of Kendall, Ill.; Green M., lived in Chemung County, and died in Ottawa, Ill.,—was county clerk of Chemung for three terms; Elizabeth, wife of John L. Smith, of Elmira; Hiram; Francis, a merchant of Chester for many years, and one of the founders of the village, and who died in Chemung County in 1850.

In 1819, John Tuthill removed from Blooming-Grove and settled in the town of Erin, Chemung Co., where he purchased 900 acres of land, then a wilderness tract, and where he spent the remainder of his life. He died about 1845, aged eighty-four years. Of his children, Hiram, the father of our subject, was born on the homestead in Orange County, Nov. 30, 1799, and married Azubah Seeley, who was born in May, 1804, and is now living where the family settled in Erin. Their children are Charles S., of Green Point, N. Y., a merchant; John B.; Francis G., a farmer of Elmira; William M., died at the age of twenty-eight in 1862; Hiram, a merchant at Chester; Sarah Milecent, died young; and Stella Azubah, died at the age of seventeen in 1862,—all of whom were born in Chemung County.

Hiram Tuthill removed with his parents to Erin, inherited 100 acres of the homestead there, and added 200 acres more to it, upon which he resided the remainder of his life. He died Sept. 18, 1876. He was a well-preserved representative of the true men, distinguished for the old-fashioned honesty and stern integrity of the past generation, and bore in his looks and tall, erect figure the impress of an honorable life,—one of integrity and true nobility.

John B., son of Hiram Tuthill, was born Nov. 4, 1828, and remained at home until he reached his majority, when he came to Chester, and for two and one-half years was a clerk in the store of Tuthill, Seeley & Johnson. In 1852 he bought Mr. Johnson's interest, and Mr. Seeley sold his interest to William C. Eager, and the new firm of Tuthills & Eager carried on a successful mercantile and forwarding business until 1864, when Mr. Eager sold out and settled in Warwick. The Tuthills continued the business until 1867, when John B. sold his interest in the concern to E. T. Jackson. He then purchased the Gregory farm, near Chester, and after two years sold it, and purchased his present farm of 133 acres, which, by additions, is now (1881) 145 acres, and one of the most desirable locations anywhere to be found in the town, and the land highly productive. In 1874 he built his present brick residence, commanding a view of the valley and the Erie Railway. All the appointments of his well-arranged premises bespeak the work of a thrifty and intelligent farmer. The products of his dairy are marketed daily in New York in the form of milk.

Mr. Tuthill has been interested in all that pertains to the locality where he resides, and is known as a thoroughgoing business man. For six years he was a member of the Board of Education at Chester, and is a promoter of church and kindred interests. His first wife, whom he married Dec. 10, 1856, was Martha S., daughter of Francis and Elizabeth (Seeley) Tuthill. She was born Oct. 30, 1835, and died Sept. 25, 1857. For his second wife he married, Jan. 26, 1859, Jane, daughter of James Durland, of Chester, who was born May 6, 1837, and died Sept. 23, 1867, leaving no children. His present wife, whom he married Feb. 4, 1869, was Susan, the daughter of John and Mary Ann (Pilgrim) Fowler, of Monroe, and granddaughter of John Fowler, who settled in Monroe from Scotland. She was born Nov. 10, 1835. The children born of this union are Stella A. and Hiram B. Tuthill.

J. B. Tinsell

Mr. M. Rysdyk

In early life he was thrown upon his own resources, and by necessity learned self-reliance, economy, and prudence. During his boyhood and early manhood he was esteemed for his correct habits, sociable and frank manners, and a kind and generous heart. His first wife was Mahala Hall, a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church, who died in 1840, aged thirty-six years, leaving the following children: William T., was a farmer in Goshen, and died in January, 1879, aged forty-five years; Elizabeth, became the wife of David H. Roe, who was born in Warwick, was a merchant in Chester for many years, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at that place, and died Nov. 29, 1880, aged fifty-two years. For his second wife, Mr. Rysdyk married Elvira, daughter of Col. Sproull, of Warwick, who bore him several children, all of whom are dead.

For many years after his marriage Mr. Rysdyk was a farmer in the town of Warwick, near Florida. He subsequently settled in the town of Chester, where he purchased a farm and erected fine buildings thereon, which he made his pleasant home the remainder of his life. The property is now owned by Dr. C. T. Smith.

Few men were better known in Orange County and throughout the State than he, on account of his fondness for horses and his ownership of the celebrated horse "Hamble," which horse became the origin of all the stock by that name at present in this country. He gave little attention to horses outside of their common use until 1851, when he successfully had an interest in "Long Island Black Hawk," and afterwards in the "New York Black Hawk," and finally became the sole owner of the original "Orange County Hambletonian," which he raised from a colt. Mr. Rysdyk died April 26, 1870, aged sixty-one years.

Abram Demerest

The Demerests are of Huguenot extraction, and James, grandfather of Abram, settled in the town of Warwick, from New Jersey, where he purchased some five hundred acres of land on the road from Sugar Loaf to Warwick. This property he made his homestead the remainder of his life, and reared twelve children, of whom Nicholas, father of our subject, was born Feb. 26, 1762. He married Mary Bontan, who was born Jan. 3, 1770, and died Aug. 15, 1836. He died June 10, 1845, leaving the following children: Catharine, born Sept. 16, 1788, died May 13, 1811; Elizabeth, born Feb. 4, 1790, was the wife of Jesse Maybee, of Goshen; James S., born March 1, 1792; Samuel, born Feb. 11, 1794; Nicholas, born Nov. 17, 1796; Margaret, born Sept. 27, 1798; Abram, born Sept. 14, 1800; Mary, born Dec. 29, 1802, became the wife of John Lawrence, of Warwick; Hannah, born Sept. 17, 1804; Jane, born April 8, 1807, wife of Ezra Holbert, of Warwick; Caroline, born Feb. 3, 1809, wife of E. M. Bradner, of Warwick; Catharine, born July 13, 1811, became the wife of William S. Benedict, of Warwick.

Nicholas Demerest settled on a part of the homestead property, where he resided during his life, and reared this very large family of children, his farm consisting of some two hundred acres, besides owning other real estate. He was a well-to-do farmer of his day, and devoted his life to agricultural pursuits.

Abram, son of Nicholas Demerest, spent his boyhood at home. He married, Oct. 27, 1842, Eliza Jane, daughter of Isaac and Mehetabel (Wells) Smith, of Chester, who was born April 17, 1808. Her father came from Long Island in the year 1767, when twelve years of age, with his parents, and settled in the town of Chester, where he resided until his death; was born at Jamaica, L. I., March 8, 1755, and died Oct. 14, 1836. Her mother was a daughter of Joshua Wells, a descendant of Hon. William Wells, who was born near Norwich, England, in 1608, came to America in 1635 on the ship "Free Love," was an educated lawyer in England, and became high sheriff of New Yorkshire, on Long Island.

After his marriage Abram Demerest resided on a part of the homestead in Warwick, consisting of one hundred and twenty-five acres, for some seven years. In 1850 he removed to West Chester, where he only remained one year, and for some three years he resided on the "Black Meadows." In 1854 he purchased two hundred and sixteen acres adjoining the village of Chester, which has been his homestead since.

Born with the century, he still enjoys to a remarkable degree the active faculties of both body and mind. His life has been devoted to farming, and he has always been esteemed for his honesty of purpose and his integrity in all the relations of life.

His children were Nicholas, married Isabella B., daughter of Daniel McNeal, of Montgomery, and carries on the home farm; William, born Oct. 17, 1846, died May 18, 1856.

BLOOMING-GROVE.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

BLOOMING-GROVE is one of the interior towns of the county, lying east of the centre. It is bounded north by Hamptonburgh and New Windsor, east by Cornwall and Monroe, south by Monroe and Chester, and west by Chester and Goshen. The area of this town may be stated, in the same way as that of other towns, from the supervisors' equalization table of 1879. The acreage is there stated at 21,826½ acres, but the real area is greater than this in consequence of the exceptions made by the assessors of the several towns. The total valuation, as shown by the same table, was $1,481,740, and the tax levied upon that basis was $11,715.86.

The following memorandum of the various patents conveying title to the territory now in the town of Blooming-Grove will be found of much value. It shows not only the basis from which every man's deed rests at the present time, but also furnishes many hints as to the names of those who made the first settlement and the dates when it took place. In the northeast corner of the town may first be named the patent to Richard Van Dam, dated June 30, 1720, and comprising 1000 acres. The northeast corner of this patent is the northeast corner of the town, and that point is also located on the old county line, making a permanent place of beginning for all modern surveys in that vicinity. This patent is not bounded by the north line of the town, but lies somewhat diagonal to that line, and a portion of the tract is in New Windsor. Immediately on the south of this patent lies what is generally known as the Rip Van Dam Patent. The proprietors, in all, were Rip Van Dam, Adolph Phillips, David Provost, Jr., Lancaster Symes, Thomas Jones, each to have one-fifth of a tract of 3000 acres. This patent is described as beginning at a station bearing west twenty-four degrees north and eighty-five chains from the wigwam of the Indian Maringamus. Salisbury Mills village is on the east end of this patent, so far as the village lies in Blooming-Grove, the eastern boundary of the patent being described in the original statute organizing the town as the eastern boundary of the town. This patent included 3000 acres, and was dated March 23, 1709. Southwest of the Rip Van Dam Patent, and adjoining it, and westward of the Schunemunk Mountains, is the patent to Edward Blagg and Johannes Hey for 2000 acres, granted March 28, 1726. This tract lies between Woodcock Hill and the Schunemunk range, and the valley has been known as Blagg's Clove from the earliest settlement to the present time. West of the Blagg Patent there was granted a tract of 2440 acres, Jan. 11, 1727, to Nathaniel Hazard, a very irregular tract lying in the interior of the town south and southwest of Washingtonville. West of the Hazard Patent there was granted, July 7, 1736, a tract of 2000 acres to Joseph Sackett, Sr., and Joseph Sackett, Jr. Adjoining this last-named patent on the south is one of 222 acres to the same grantees, Sackett and Son, and of the same date. This adjoins the territory upon which Oxford village is located.

Further west was a patent to Joseph Sackett of 149 acres, granted Sept. 1, 1737. A little further to the southwest is a patent to Edward Blagg and Johannes Hey of 2000 acres, being a second grant, bearing the same date as the first, March 28, 1726. This was a very irregular tract. Adjoining this patent on the southeast, and lying between it and the 2000 acres granted to the two Sacketts, was a patent of 2000 acres granted to Ann Hoagland, May 24, 1723. In her petition she claimed it as having been cut off from the Wawayanda Patent. West of the second patent to Edward Blagg and Johannes Hey is a tract of 2600 acres, granted Aug. 10, 1723, to Richard Gerard and Wm. Bull. In the extreme northwest angle of the town (now in Hamptonburgh) is a patent granted Dec. 18, 1734, to Elizabeth Denne, of 1140 acres. In her petition she had also claimed the grant as having been cut off from the Wawayanda Patent. Returning along the north boundary (the old county line), we have in the centre the patent to Roger Mompesson, and this is described as beginning at a certain station on the southwest side of Murderer's Creek, bearing west twenty degrees north, and distant from the wigwam of Maringamus seventy-five chains, "being near eight miles from Hudson's River." The Mompesson Patent was granted March 4, 1709, and confirmed May 31, 1712. It embraced 1000 acres.

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

The surface of this town is mountainous in the south and east, rolling and moderately hilly in the north and west. The Schunemunk Mountains, upon the line of Monroe, are a broken, rugged range, rising to the height of 1500 feet above tide-water.

There are a number of elevations in town having special names, as Woodcock Hill, Pound Hill, Musket Hill, Rainer Hill, Bull Mountain, Limestone Hills, Lazy Hill, Tom's Rocks, Peddler's Hill, Round Hill, Mosquito Hill, etc. Like many other sections of Orange County, a large portion of the slopes are capable of tillage, thus constituting a fine farming section. The Otterkill is the most important stream. This flows from Hamptonburgh through the northwest part of Blooming-Grove into the town of Cornwall. A large portion of the west part of the town is drained by the Cromeline Creek, which unites with the Otterkill near the line of Hamptonburgh. From that point the Otterkill becomes known as Murderer's Creek through the rest of its course to the Hudson.

Schunemunk Creek rises in the mountains of that name, drains a large portion of the centre of the town, receives some tributary rivulets, and joins the Otterkill near Washingtonville. Another tributary farther east, also rising in the Schunemunk Mountains, joins the main stream below Washingtonville. This is sometimes called Satterly's Creek.

The town has much fine scenery. The mountains upon the southeast are rugged. In the interior are pleasant valleys, and the uplands are diversified with hills and dales. In the vicinity of Craigville the Cromeline winds its way through a valley of considerable depth.

At Salisbury, on the eastern border, there is a waterfall, attracting attention at an early day as a mill-privilege of considerable value, and one which has been improved from the first settlement to the present time. The alluvial lands along the streams are fertile. An especially fine section lies around Washingtonville, along the bend of the Otterkill.

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

Vincent Matthews purchased the Rip Van Dam Patent, Aug. 22, 1721. He made an immediate settlement, it is supposed, and erected a grist-mill at the place now known as Salisbury. He was probably the first settler of Blooming-Grove. The names of his immediate associates are not given. He gave to his estate the name of Matthewsfield.

The patent to Edward Blagg and Johannes Hey, south of Matthewsfield, soon became entirely the property of Edward Blagg, and he settled upon it. Blagg's Clove has been in use as a name for that neighborhood ever since.

The Mompesson Patent was bought in 1731 by Thomas Goldsmith. He located there, building his house on the west bank of the Otterkill. The village of Washingtonville is partly upon this patent and partly upon the Van Dam Patent.

The Richard Van Dam Patent in the northeast corner was bought by Jesse Woodhull, who settled in Blagg's Clove in 1753. It is not known that he occupied the Richard Van Dam Patent. The Moffatts were early settlers upon this tract.

Vincent Matthews was active in promoting settlement. His name appears upon the roll of attorneys as early as 1741. He sold of his tract 1500 acres to Lewis DuBois, of New Paltz. On this property DuBois erected a tavern, and it was kept by Zacharias DuBois before the Revolution and during that struggle. The mill which Matthews built he subsequently sold to John J. Carpenter. In 1776, Mr. Carpenter, associated with Hon. Henry Wisner, made powder there under a contract with the State. Henry Wisner, Jr., with the Phillipses, had another powder-mill at Phillipsburgh, Wallkill.

As Blooming-Grove was a part of Cornwall from 1764 to 1799, we obtain the names of settlers prior to the Revolution mostly from the records of Cornwall, and from the list of signers to the Revolutionary Articles of Association. Prior to 1764 the territory of Blooming-Grove was a part of Goshen Precinct, the records of which are lost. It is believed the following memorandum includes the name of nearly every permanent settler before the Revolution. Others may, however, be found in the general list given in the chapter upon Cornwall, to which we refer.

John Brewster, Sr., was the first town clerk in Cornwall, chosen in 1765. His son succeeded him four years later. It was at his house and that of his son (same place, we suppose) that Cornwall town-meetings were held for more than thirty years. The names of Edward, Jesse, Francis, Isaac, and Nathan Brewster also appear in the early records. John Brewster, Jr., was chosen town clerk of Cornwall in 1769, and the records were kept by him until 1794, when he was succeeded by Daniel Brewster.

George Duryea. One of this name was chosen path-master at the first town-meeting, of 1799, in Blooming-Grove. Probably the same man, as the difference of time, twenty-four years, is not too much.

Richard Goldsmith, Sr. and Jr. One of them was chosen overseer of the highways in 1765, "from John Brewster's to Gilbert's"; and path-master of District 8, in 1775. Richard Goldsmith, probably the younger, was security for a constable at the first town-meeting of Blooming-Grove, 1799.

Benjamin Gregory was chosen overseer of the highways in 1765 from his house to Oxford. He had a son, Benjamin Gregory, Jr. Probably their neighborhood was near the line of Monroe.

John Hudson was chosen collector for Cornwall in 1765. He lived at Blooming-Grove, and was also a constable. Henry Hudson, probably a son, was the first collector of Blooming-Grove, 1799. William Hudson is also mentioned in these early records.

Archibald Little, Sr. and Jr. One of them was chosen in 1765 a fence-viewer for Oxford, showing his residence to have been in that neighborhood. He was soon after appointed justice of the peace, and was a member of the Committee of Safety in 1775. There are also mentioned in the early records Timothy James and Solomon Little.

James Mapes lived near Peddler's Hill, in Blooming-Grove. His sons were Wines, Jesse, Robert, James, Barney, David, William; daughters, Mrs. Terry and Mrs. Turner. Thomas Mapes is also mentioned in the old records. He lived near Peddler's Hill.

Elihu Marvin, Sr. and Jr. One of them was chosen an overseer of the poor in Cornwall in 1765, and also a fence-viewer for Oxford. Elihu Marvin was a member of the Committee of Safety in 1775; one of the judges of the county in 1778; Seth Marvin, assessor, 1775; Nathan Marvin, path-master of District 16, 1775; James Marvin, justice of the peace, 1777. John and Jesse Marvin are also named in the early records.

Samuel Moffatt, Sr. and Jr. The father was chosen an overseer of the poor in Cornwall, 1765, and the son a path-master in Blooming-Grove, 1799.

Col. Vincent Matthews was a well-known military officer of the Revolution, and a leading citizen of the county. He was county clerk from 1726 to 1763. James Matthews, highway commissioner in 1775, and Fletcher Matthews are mentioned also prior to 1775.

Thomas Moffatt was an early magistrate, a member of the Committee of Safety, and county clerk from 1778 to 1794.

Joseph Mapes lived on what has been known in later years as the Nathaniel Clark place. A daughter married Thomas Galloway, and there were sons,—John, Nathan, David.

Josiah Reeder was chosen overseer of the highway in 1765, for a district from the "Otterkill to Col. Matthews'." There are also mentioned in the early records Samuel, Jacob, Stephen, and Peter Reeder.

Israel Seeley was a delegate to the first Provincial Convention, May 20, 1775. There are also found in the old records the names of Thaddeus Seeley, John Seeley, Samuel and Jesse Seeley.

Josiah Seeley was path-master in Cornwall for District 15 in 1775. Josiah, Jr., was chosen an overseer of the poor, Blooming-Grove, 1799. (See Chester.)

Bezaliel Seeley, Sr. and Jr. One of them was "chosen for Oxford," in 1765, overseer of the road "from Israel Seeley's to Gregory's." In the Chester account of the Seeley family it is stated that Bezaliel Seeley, the pioneer, was a bachelor. These were doubtless of a later generation, or a different branch. Senior and junior are, however, occasionally used to distinguish two of the same name, whether they are father and son or of no relation.

Selah Strong was a justice of the peace in 1765. Thirty-four years later Selah Strong was the first supervisor of Blooming-Grove. There are also mentioned Samuel Strong, justice of the peace in 1777, and Nathan Strong, overseer of District 21, in 1775.

Nathaniel Satterly was path-master for District No. 42 in 1775, and justice of the peace in 1778. Satterly's mill was a very early affair, being mentioned in 1765. Satterly was a member of the Committee of Safety in 1775. There are also named in the early records John Satterly and Selah Satterly.

James Sayre, Sr. and Jr. James Sayre was an attorney in 1770. James Sayre, probably the younger, was mentioned at the first town-meeting, 1799, in Blooming-Grove. Nathaniel Sayre, Sr. and Jr., are also named before the Revolution, and John Sayre.

Nathaniel Strong was supervisor of Cornwall in 1775; a justice of the peace soon after; a member of the Committee of Safety in 1775; and was shot dead by Tories at the door of his own house Oct. 6, 1778.

Capt. Jesse Woodhull settled at Blagg's Clove, about 1753, upon a tract of 500 acres. He was a delegate to the first Provincial Convention, April 20, 1775, and a member of the State Convention that ratified the Federal Constitution June 17, 1788. Ebenezer Woodhull is mentioned as a town officer in 1775.

George Whitaker. The name of Benjamin Whitaker appears as path-master of District 17 in Blooming-Grove, 1799.

Silas Young, Sr. and Jr.; one was chosen in 1765 overseer of the highways from the end of Oxford Road to R. Youngs'. Reuben Young was assessor for District No. 6, of Cornwall, in 1775. Birdseye Young was at Oxford, first lieutenant Oxford Company, 1775.

Stephen Gilbert was chosen in 1765 overseer of the highways for a district extending "from the precinct line to the Otterkill." He was a member of the Committee of Safety in 1775. Matthias Gilbert's name also appears.

Zachariah DuBois was chosen commissioner of highways for Cornwall, 1765; in 1775 was one of the Committee of Safety. John DuBois died at Fishkill Landing in 1869, aged ninety-nine years. Zachariah, above named, kept the tavern at Salisbury. He was taken prisoner at Fort Montgomery in 1777.

Hezekiah Howell, Sr. and Jr. The father was the first supervisor of Cornwall, 1765; and one was overseer of highways the same year "for Blagg's Clove." Hezekiah Howell was one of the Committee of Safety in 1775. Isaiah, Stephen, Isaac, Paul, Zephaniah, Charles, Aaron, Silas, and Jeremiah are also named prior to 1775.

Daniel Mapes may have been the same man who was path-master of District 19, Blooming-Grove, in 1799.

Benjamin Goldsmith and Thomas Goldsmith are both mentioned before the Revolution.

David Coleman was chosen a fence-viewer for Blooming-Grove in 1765. Others before the Revolution were Caleb, Joab, Asahel, Micah, Silas, Richard. Jeremiah Coleman was an assessor in 1765. Daniel Coleman was a justice of the peace in 1777. Thomas Coleman and John Coleman are also mentioned in the old records. Thomas Coleman, Jr., was path-master of No. 43 in 1775.

Francis Drake was named as an overseer of highways in Cornwall, 1765, for a district extending from "Henry Mapes' to Thomas Mapes'." This description may identify his location. Richard Drake is also named.

Nathaniel Curtis settled in Blooming-Grove in 1760. He had a mill as early as 1765. Coleman Curtis and Daniel Curtis are also mentioned before the Revolution.

Henry Davenport. He was an early blacksmith, and is said to have had a son in the battle of Bunker Hill. He probably lived in what is now Chester. Oliver Davenport is also mentioned in the early records.

John Carpenter was doubtless the man to whom Col. Vincent Matthews sold the early mill at Salisbury. Benjamin, Timothy, Elijah, Noah, John, Jr., and William are also mentioned before the Revolution.

Wm. Moffatt was an assessor in 1775. John Moffatt and Isaac Moffatt are also mentioned.

Timothy Owens and Wm. Owens are also mentioned before the Revolution.

Capt. Silas Pierson was chosen assessor for District No. 3, of Old Cornwall, in 1775. Silas Pierson, Jr., is also mentioned.

Nathaniel Satterly. He was path-master of District No. 42 in 1775, and justice of the peace in 1778. One of the name had a mill as early as 1765. Nathaniel Satterly was a member of the Cornwall Committee of Safety in 1775.

Benjamin Strong was chosen in 1765 an overseer of the highway "from the meeting-house to Adam Collins' and to the new school-house." As the Blooming-Grove meeting-house was built in 1759, Benjamin Strong lived in that vicinity.

Joel Tuthill was chosen in 1765 overseer of the highway "from Curtis Coleman's to Nathaniel Curtis' mill, and so along to the Round Hill." Jonathan Tuthill was path-master of District 20, of Cornwall, in 1775. He, or one of the same name, was also named as path-master in Blooming-Grove in 1799. John W. Tuthill and Samuel Tuthill are also mentioned, and Francis Daniel Benjamin; also Capt. James Tuthill.

John Woolley. He was chosen path-master in 1765 for the road from "the new meeting-house to Martin Remelies." The Blooming-Grove meeting-house was built in 1759, and might properly be termed new.

William Gregg, Hugh Gregg, and Robert Gregg are mentioned in the records prior to the Revolution.

For additional names of families preceding the Revolution we refer to a list in the chapter upon Cornwall. Additional light is also thrown upon this subject by the very complete military rolls and other memoranda given in the general chapter upon military matters. The names of the different companies there given indicate to quite an extent the residence of the men enrolled. We add from a former writer the following notes upon several families of this town:

"William S. Woodhull was a descendant of Richard Woodhull, who appears to have first settled at Jamaica, on Long Island, about the year 1648, and removed to Setauket, then called Cromwell Bay, in 1656. The name was originally written Wodhull, and pronounced Odel or Odhull, and even to the present time (1847) several branches of the family are so called, which was owing, it is believed, to giving the W a Welsh pronunciation, which is equivalent to OO. It is said that the family from which he descended is very ancient, and may be traced to an individual who came to England from Normandy with William the Conqueror, in 1066.

"He was born at Thenford, Northamptonshire, England, on Sept. 13, 1620. His zeal in the cause of English liberty during the Protectorate is supposed to have been the cause of his emigrating, as his situation in England would have been an unhappy one on the restoration of the monarchy.

"The name of his wife was Deborah. He died in October, 1690, leaving issue,—Richard, Nathaniel, and Deborah. Nathaniel died without issue, and Deborah married John Lawrence, of Newtown.

"Richard, the eldest son of the emigrant, was born Oct. 9, 1649, and married Temperance, daughter of Rev. Jonah Fordham, of Southampton. He died Oct. 18, 1699, leaving issue,—Richard, Nathaniel, John, Josiah, Dorothy, and Temperance. Richard, the eldest, inherited the paternal estate at Setauket, and Nathaniel, from whom the family in this county descended, settled upon lands devised to him at Mastic. He married Sarah, daughter of Richard Smith (2), of Smithtown, by whom he had issue,—Hannah, Temperance, Nathaniel, Dorothy, Sarah, Richard, Ruth, Jesse, Juliana, Deborah, and Ebenezer. He died March 9, 1760. Hannah married Mr. Strong, of Blooming-Grove, and her descendants are numerous. Nathaniel, born Dec. 30, 1722, inherited the paternal estate at Mastic. He was known as Gen. Nathaniel Woodhull, took an active part in the early efforts to resist British oppression, but was violently assaulted by a British officer near Jamaica, L. I., and died on Sept. 20, 1776. Richard received a liberal education, settled, and died at New Haven, Conn. His family has become extinct. Ruth married Judge William Smith, of Mastic. Jesse, well known in Orange County as Col. Jesse Woodhull, was born at Mastic, Suffolk Co., L. I., on Feb. 10, 1735. He settled at Blagg's Clove, Orange Co., about 1753, being about eighteen years of age. He had about 500 acres, a part of which was subsequently owned by Wm. Woodhull, the residue by Wm. S. Woodhull. He married Hester, daughter of Capt. Lewis Dubois, of Orange County, by whom he had issue,—Nathaniel, Richard, Sarah, Renelibe, Hannah, Jesse, and Ebenezer. He died Feb. 4, 1795, aged about sixty years. His widow died Nov. 29, 1808, aged seventy-four years and twenty-nine days. Col. Woodhull's son Nathaniel was born Nov. 1, 1758. Married Elizabeth, daughter of Leonard Nicoll, of New Windsor, and died, leaving no issue, April 12, 1799.

"Richard, second son of Col. Woodhull, married Hannah, daughter of Judge William Smith and Ruth Woodhull, before mentioned, of Mastic, by whom he had issue,—Jesse, William Smith, Nathaniel Dubois, and Ruth Hester. His widow, born Oct. 4, 1764, died Jan. 6, 1809, aged forty-four years, three months, and twelve days.

"Jesse, eldest son of Richard and Hannah Woodhull, died Oct. 12, 1800, aged five years, six months, and twelve days. William Smith, the subject of remark, was born Aug. 9, 1796, and now resides on a part of Col. Woodhull's estate in Blagg's Clove. He married Fanny H., eldest daughter of Abraham Schultz, Esq., of New Windsor, Nov. 10, 1825, by whom he had issue,—Abraham Schultz, born Nov. 21, 1826; William Henry, Nov. 4, 1828; Sarah Jane, May 9, 1831; and Jesse, July 17, 1833. Sarah Jane died June 28, 1843.

"Nathaniel DuBois was born Nov. 30, 1797, married Frances Mandevill; left issue,—Richard William, Francis M., and Jacob. Ruth Hester was born Nov. 30, 1800, and died unmarried Oct. 8, 1839.

"Sarah, eldest daughter of Col. Woodhull, married Col. John Floyd, of Smithtown, Suffolk Co. Renelibe married Nathaniel Smith, of Smithtown, and Hannah, Oliver Smith, of Moriches. Jesse received an education, read medicine, made several voyages to the East Indies, and died at Pine Grove, Amite Co., Miss.

"Ebenezer settled near Utica, Oneida Co., N. Y., and married there.

"Juliana, daughter of Nathaniel Woodhull, of Mastic, married Hezekiah Howell, of Blooming-Grove; was the mother of the present Hezekiah Howell, of Blooming-Grove, and Judge Nathaniel W. Howell, of Canandaigua. Her descendants are numerous. Deborah married Isaac Nicoll, of Hackensack, N. J. Ebenezer settled in Blooming-Grove, married Abigail Howell, and was father to Fletcher Woodhull and several other sons and daughters."

On the maternal side they are descendants of Col. William Smith, whose descendants on Long Island are denominated the Tangier Smiths in contradistinction to Richard Smith's family, called Bull Smiths. He was born in England at Higham-Ferrers, Northamptonshire, Feb. 2, 1655. In 1675 he was appointed governor of Tangier by Charles II., which place, with Bombay, was given to him as a marriage portion by the king of Portugal. But the project of erecting an establishment upon that coast did not succeed. Col. Smith therefore returned to England in 1683. He married Martha, daughter of Henry Tunstall, Esq., of Putney, in the county of Surrey, Nov. 26, 1675. He arrived at New York on the 6th of August, 1686, purchased a large tract of land in Brookhaven, which was erected into a manor called St. George's Manor. He was appointed a justice of the Supreme Court by Governor Slaughter in 1691, and chief justice by Col. Fletcher in 1692. He took an active part in the transpiring events of the colony, and died Feb. 18, 1705. His surviving children were Henry, William Henry, Patty, Gloriana, and Charles Jeffrey. Henry was born at Tangier, Jan. 19, 1679, and died 1767, aged eighty-eight years.

William Henry Smith, second son of Chief Justice Smith, was born March 13, 1690. He settled upon a part of his father's purchase at Mastic on the south side of the island. His first wife was a Miss Merritt, of Boston, by whom he had a son, Merritt. His second wife was Hannah Cooper, by whom he had issue,—William, Caleb, Elizabeth, Sarah, Martha, Jane, and Hannah.

William Smith, eldest son of William Henry, was born in 1720. He was absent from his family and estate during the whole of the Revolutionary war, and spent his time with his friends in Orange County. He was a judge of the county court and a member of the Provincial Congress. In 1777 he was elected a senator under the State constitution, which office he held till 1783. He died March 17, 1799. His first wife was Mary, daughter of Daniel Smith, of Smithtown, by whom he had John (afterwards Senator John Smith, of Suffolk County) and Mary.

His second wife was Ruth, sister of Gen. Woodhull, of Suffolk, and Col. Woodhull, of Orange County, by whom he had issue,—William, Caleb, Mary, Hannah, Elizabeth, and Sarah. Hannah married Richard Woodhull, of Blooming-Grove, son of Col. Woodhull, and had issue,—Jesse, William Smith, Nathaniel DuBois, and Ruth Hester, as before noticed in the genealogy of the Woodhull family.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

Blooming-Grove was organized as a town March 23, 1799, and its territory was taken from that of Cornwall. April 5, 1830, a part of Blooming-Grove was taken off in the formation of Hamptonburgh, being so much of Hamptonburgh as now lies south of the old county line, and east of the former line between Goshen and Cornwall, of which the present east line of Goshen is believed to be a part. Fifteen years later, March 22, 1845, a portion of Blooming-Grove was set off towards the formation of the town of Chester. This was that small part of Chester which lies southeast of the division line of the old precincts of Cornwall and Goshen, and northwest of the southeast line of Blooming-Grove, extended until it intersects the said precinct line. The name of Blooming-Grove had long been in use for a part of Cornwall, and appropriately became the name of the new civil division. The name, Blooming-Grove, was that of the old village, and was adopted to distinguish it from Hunting-Grove, a well-known locality then in New Windsor.

The first town-meeting of Blooming-Grove was held as shown in the following record:

"A Journal of the proceedings of the freeholders and inhabitants of the town of Blooming-Grove at their first annual town-meeting, held at the house of John Chandler, in said town, on the first Tuesday in April, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine, agreeable to an act to divide the town of Cornwall into three towns, passed the twenty-third of March, 1799.

"Present, Anslem Helm, John McDowell, Justices of the Peace.

"It was voted that the act to divide the town of Cornwall into three towns should be read.

It was agreed to raise money for the payment of Richard Goldsmith and Josiah Seeley, late commissioners. John Tuthill, Hezekiah Howell, John Chandler, Phineas Heard, Selah Strong, and Josiah Seeley were appointed fence-viewers.

The meeting then adjourned to the first Tuesday in April, 1800, at the meeting-house in Blooming-Grove.

GENERAL NOTES FROM THE RECORDS.

The first road-survey recorded after the formation of Blooming-Grove appears to be the following:

"Beginning between John B. Horton's house and barn and running a slant westward down the hill, and then making a small bend eastward, then straight to the north corner of James Thompson's land, and so on Garret Duryea's land, so as to intercept the Goshen road west of Garret Duryea's house, said road to be two rods wide. Surveyed June 5, 1800; recorded Feb. 4, 1803."

1800.—At the second annual town-meeting the following additional names appear of those elected to office who were not chosen in the first year. Samuel Strong, Jr., Russell Bugbee, Benjamin Mapes, Joseph King, Joseph McLaughlin, David Wiley, Asa Steward, John Miller, Silas Pierson, Richard S. Hubbard, John I. Brooks, George Thompson, James Smith, Ebenezer Seeley, Joel Coleman.

April 3, 1800.—Jonas Seeley records the birth of a slave child named Charles, born July 8, 1799. Under the same date John Marvin records the birth of a slave child named Dorcas, born Aug. 9, 1799.

Sept. 26, 1800.—Anselm Helm certifies that a slave child, Chloe, was born June 21, 1800.

Quite a number of similar notices appear in the books from 1800 to 1820, by Seth Marvin, Elihu Marvin, Charles Howell, John Marvin, Hezekiah Howell, Capt. Phincas Heard, James Denniston, Selah Strong, and many others.

The manumission of a slave woman named Peg by John Chandler, with the consent of the overseers of the poor, is recorded under date of March 29, 1804.

July 15, 1819.—The highway commissioners certify that they have "viewed the bridge over the outlet of Gray Court meadows, on the road from Hezekiah Moffatt's to Oxford, and do agree that it is no longer a public benefit, and do annul the same and declare it to be no longer a town charge."

1821.—A bounty of $25 was offered for each wolf killed in the town. It was also voted that year to petition the Legislature to confirm the survey made by Samuel McCown and David W. Brewster between the towns of Blooming-Grove and New Windsor.

1822.—It was voted that no man in possession of fifty acres of land should suffer his cattle to run on the commons; if taken up to pay a fine of fifty cents.

1826.—It was voted to raise $700 for the support of the poor; also to raise $10 to pay Howell for killing a wolf.

Dec. 27, 1827.—At a special town-meeting Joseph McLaughlin was chosen supervisor in place of Hezekiah Moffatt, deceased.

V.—VILLAGES, NEIGHBORHOOD NAMES.

is the principal village of the town, situated upon the old public road from Newburgh to Goshen, eleven miles from the former and nine miles from the latter. It is now a station upon the Newburgh Branch of the Erie Railroad. It is said to have been named in honor of Gen. Washington, and is situated in an open, pleasant country upon the Otterkill, or Murderer's Creek. The railroad crosses the stream twice, the station buildings being located between the crossings and the main portion of the village, lying upon the opposite side. It is a stirring business place, with shop, stores, manufactures, schools, and churches. It has already been mentioned that Thomas Goldsmith bought and probably settled here in 1731. It was undoubtedly the second point of settlement in town, Salisbury being the first. The rich, fertile lands attracted immigration, and many, no doubt, soon after joined Mr. Goldsmith in this location. Long before the opening of any modern lines of travel this place was upon one of the oldest roads in the county. Its distance from Goshen and Newburgh was favorable to the growth of a village. Its modern development dates from the opening of the Erie Railroad. A post-office was established here at an early day. The present incumbent of the office is Selah Strong, and the office is kept at the store of W. S. Howell, who is deputy postmaster in charge. Mr. Strong was appointed in July of the present year. His predecessor was Alexander Moore, who held the office about six years. Nathan H. McLaughlin was postmaster for about thirteen years from 1861-62. Before him John C. Warner had the office for four years. Mr. Breed was postmaster, and after his death Mrs. Breed held the position for one year.

The present business indicates a thriving country village. Near the station is the grist-mill of Thomas Fulton, using both steam- and water-power as may be necessary. It is both a custom- and flouring-mill. Mr. Fulton took possession about five years ago. The mill was built by David Wright twenty-five years ago. It was located on the same site as a mill of earlier years. There is also the manufacturing establishment of Taylor & Belknap, making cheese-boxes, wagon-felloes, spokes, hubs, etc.

At Washingtonville there is also located the creamery belonging to the Farmers' Association. This has been in successful operation for some years. Other business in Washingtonville at the present time may be summed up as follows: A hotel by James Angus; store by John C. Warner, general merchandise; also by S. H. Johnson, general merchandise, and by W. S. Howell, general merchandise, and also coal; hardware-store and tin-shop, C. W. Hull; also a tin-shop by Charles McKinney; groceries, boots and shoes by M. R. Denniston; groceries, Edward McLaughlin; furniture and undertaking, A. Moore & Co.; feed, flour, lumber, coal, Charles G. Cooper; same line of business, Hector Moffatt; harness-shop and horse-goods, Brooks & Parsons; wagon-shop, Daniel Giles; wagon- and paint-shop, Murphy & Ploughman; blacksmithing, Henry Dusingberry; blacksmithing, Charles Green; millinery, Mrs. Bull; meat-markets, one by I. J. Bull, and one by George Clark; drug-store by Bond Bros.; also one by M. B. Shafer; shoe-shop and store by Charles Boyle; insurance agencies, one by W. J. Tuthill, and another by Wm. Westervelt, the latter of whom is also an auctioneer; Dr. J. Moffatt and Dr. S. D. DuBois, physicians.

The station buildings of the Erie Railway are conveniently situated. Hallock's Hall supplies a place for lectures and public entertainments. A degree of literary taste exists here superior to that usually found in small rural villages. A course of lectures for the current season, 1880-81, J. Owen Moore, manager, comprises some of the best platform speakers in the country.

Washingtonville is delightfully situated on the alluvial lands bordering the winding channel of the Otterkill. In choosing it as a point of settlement the white people imitated the ruder sons of the forest, who had probably dwelt for centuries in this vicinity, the wigwam of the chief Maringamus having been but a short distance east of the village. From Washingtonville the long, rugged Schunemunk range meets the eye, while nearer are the cultivated farms, the rich and well-tilled fields indicating homes of comfort, abundance, and wealth.

SALISBURY MILLS VILLAGE

is a hamlet on the public road leading southwest from Newburgh, distant from that place about eight miles, and from Washingtonville three miles. The growth of the place is due to the water-power supplied by the Otterkill, or, as known at this point, Murderer's Creek, or, in local parlance, Big Creek. The name was bestowed by early settlers, perhaps in consequence of certain associations with the places from which they may have emigrated. The place is a station upon the Erie Railroad (Newburgh Branch). Among the men especially active in building up this place and developing all of its varied interests may be named Andrew J. Caldwell, Isaac K. Oakley, and Peter Van Alen.

Mr. Caldwell was for a long series of years an extensive manufacturer of leather. A former writer said of him,— "To skill and large experience in conducting this business he brings a mind cultivated with a varied literature, and well stored with agricultural knowledge and its kindred subjects. Modest in temper and unobtrusive as a child, he pursues the silent and even tenor of his way, at peace with himself and the world around him. With his aged father and brothers, John, Richard, and William, compatriots of the lamented Emmet, after the outbreak in Ireland in 1798, he came to this country and cast his lot in with the citizens of this county. Doubtless it is hard and trying to the best feelings of our nature to abandon the land of our birth, the playground of our boyhood, the associations of youth and ripening manhood. Around them linger and cling the tenderest and strongest recollections; but to be compelled to flee from them by force of circumstances which we have neither made nor can control is akin to hopeless despair and like unto death."

The erection of the first mill about one hundred and sixty years ago by Gen. Vincent Matthews has been mentioned. In subsequent years the property passed to Mr. Oakley, father of Isaac K. Oakley, who remodeled the building into a paper-mill. Still later, it was taken down, either wholly or in part, and the grist-mill now run by Clark & Ketchum erected. It is said that a part of the foundation walls are the same as those of the early Matthews mill. Another important enterprise at Salisbury is the present paper-mill, situated a little below and near the line of Cornwall. Henry P. Ramsdell is the proprietor. The buildings are of brick, large and commodious. A full complement of hands are employed, and the business is conducted with vigor and success. Printing-paper and wrapping-paper constitute the principal line of work.

Other business at Salisbury may be stated as follows: Post-office, kept by Richard Caldwell; store, general merchandise, C. H. Stevenson; store, general merchandise, Samuel M. Clemens; wagon- and carriage-shop, Thomas B. Giles; blacksmithing by John Ewen, and also by William Hogan. Salisbury has railroad facilities by means of the Newburgh Branch of the Erie, there being several trains each way daily, rendering communication with Newburgh easy, or with New York by way of Gray Court.

The Methodist Church have a comfortable house of worship. (See notice elsewhere.) The Presbyterian Church of Bethlehem have also built at this place Hope Chapel, in which Sunday evening services are maintained. The chapel is a neat and convenient edifice, standing on high ground, and is not the least among the attractive features of the village. The cost was about $3000.

Besides the business establishments and public buildings mentioned, there are many pleasantly-situated private dwellings.

BLOOMING-GROVE

is a hamlet nearly central east and west, situated in the valley of a southern branch of the Otterkill, a branch usually known as the Schunemunk. The growth of Washingtonville, two miles away, and the laying of the Erie Railroad so as to have stations at Craigville and Washingtonville and none at Blooming-Grove, stopped the tendency of business to centralize at this point, and so the real Blooming-Grove of a hundred years ago, Blooming-Grove "proper," is now only a rural neighborhood with neither hotel nor stores. The regular successors of the church of the fathers are, however, here, and their children's children are leading the younger generations to the same sacred spot cherished in the early days of settlement. The building of the meeting-house of 1759 at this point indicates that it was then central for at least the congregation that designed to worship there. The ancient name of the village was extended to the town on its organization.

CRAIGVILLE

was founded as a manufacturing village, and is somewhat romantically situated on Gray Court Creek, better known as the Cromeline. It takes its name from the Craig family. At this place there was a forge, and, it is even said, a powder-mill during the Revolution. Soon after that the property passed into the hands of Mr. James Craig, and about 1790 he commenced the manufacture of paper, and this business was continued for many years after his death by his son, Hon. Hector Craig, to whose enterprise the growth of the village is mostly due. Mr. Craig also erected a cotton-mill that stood down to within a few years.

In later years Craigville is a station on the railroad, though the station buildings are half a mile or more from the village. At the station W. Wesley Thorn is station-agent, merchant, and postmaster. The firm of Marvin & Thorn are also dealing in flour, feed, and coal. Mr. Thorn has been postmaster about thirteen years. Previously the office was at the village, and was kept by Mr. E. Duryea for several years, and W. B. Hunter had been his predecessor. At the village, distinct from the station, there is now the store of Henry Ward, general merchandise; the store of Edwin Duryea, general merchandise; blacksmithery, by G. W. Parker; wagon-shop, by W. C. Smith. At this place is also located the modern and successful business of Alexander Hornby, manufacturing "steam-cooked cereals," supplying for market oatens, grits, oat-meal, also various similar forms of other grains. The buildings used were formerly a grist-mill, run by T. J. Murphy, a part of the old Craig property. The cotton-factory of Hector Craig passed to subsequent proprietors. It was destroyed by fire a few years since and has not been rebuilt. It was then in operation and under the proprietorship of Joseph Greaves. There had also been a hub-factory at Craigville, established by Frank Woodhull. It was also burned, Augustus Thompson being the proprietor, and the enterprise has not been renewed. The Methodist house of worship is still standing, but the society is virtually united to that of Chester, and services are not maintained here. The building is, however, a convenience for neighborhood meetings, funerals, etc. A school-house completes what may be called the village of Craigville. The water-power here is valuable, and capable of being utilized largely as it has been in the past.

SATTERLY'S MILLS

are about six miles south of Washingtonville. The creek upon which they are situated is the Schunemunk,* and the mills are so called from their founder—the pioneer Satterly.

This neighborhood is a place of very early settlement. Nathaniel Satterly's mill is mentioned in the town-meeting of 1765. Uriah Crossman is the present proprietor. There is no other special business at this point. A Methodist society existed here for a time, and a house of worship was erected. It is evident from the frequency with which some of these names in the interior of Blooming-Grove appear in the Cornwall records that there was quite a population in this section—perhaps nearly as many as there are now living in these rural neighborhoods; the military rolls given elsewhere for 1776 indicate this fact clearly.

OXFORD DEPOT

is on the line of the Erie Railroad, in the southwest part of the town. It furnishes railroad facilities for freight and passengers to a section of this and neighboring towns. It has also a post-office which was established in 1842. The first postmaster was John H. Tuthill, 1842-48; the second, Peter B. Taylor, 1848-59; the third, Gilbert H. Clark, 1859-61; the fourth, S. C. Van Vliet, 1861-80. The Oxford neighborhood of early times must have been of wider extent than the present village. It evidently embraced quite a district in the extreme southern or southwestern part

* The name of the creek seems to be somewhat uncertain on modern maps and among the people, the name Satterly's appearing to be given at times to both this stream and the one farther east. The explanation may be that the Satterly mills were on this stream, and a Satterly homestead on the other.

of Blooming-Grove. Since the opening of the railroad the station is the point known as Oxford. The business of the present time consists of the freighting and passenger traffic of the Erie road; a store of general merchandise, by S. C. Van Vliet, who is also postmaster, station-agent, and dealer in coal, flour, and feed; blacksmithery and a wagon-shop, by W. J. Gaunt. The Friends' meeting-house is a mile or more south of the station, and there was once a Methodist church in that neighborhood, but the enterprise was abandoned. (See Churches.)

Henry F. Moffatt, Seeley Roe, William A. Halsey, John Bell, John S. Bull, Isaac K. Oakley, Joseph C. Platt, William H. Arnold, Milton Hulse, Michael Walsh, Jesse Bull, Stephen Reed, James Dean, Charles Pitts, Charles E. Brown, Anselm Helm, James M. Young, J. W. N. Bull.

After the method of supervision by town superintendents was adopted, the following persons were elected to that office in this town:

Chosen annually: 1844-46, Andrew J. Caldwell; 1847, Philander Mix. Chosen once in two years: 1848, Samuel H. Moffatt; 1850, Charles S. Pitts; 1852-56, Philander Mix.

Occasional mention of early school-houses appears in describing road districts. At the present time good schools are maintained in the several districts of the town.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

In 1800, Seth Marvin, Daniel Brewster, and Phineas Heard were chosen school commissioners. This was under the early school law, which was repealed about that time or allowed to become inoperative.

Under the new school act of 1812 the general school system of this town was organized in 1813. During the period 1813 to 1843 the following persons served one or more years each as commissioners of common schools, viz.: Jeremiah Horton, Daniel Brewster, Nathan H. White, Edward W. Brewster, Hezekiah Moffatt, Andrew J. Caldwell, Wm. W. Brooks, Wm. S. Woodhull, George W. Tuthill, Henry F. Moffatt, Jesse Bull, Hector M. Craig, Seeley C. Roe, J. W. T. Howell.

As there were three commissioners chosen annually in this period of thirty years, the few names above shows how continually the people trusted their school interests to nearly the same men. Mr. White was commissioner for nearly the whole period. During this same length of time the following school inspectors served one or more years each: Selah Strong, Joseph McLaughlin, Zephaniah Halsey, Hezekiah Howell, Hezekiah Moffatt, John B. Horton, Samuel Warner, David Brewster, Nathaniel W. Helm, Samuel Strong, Andrew J. Caldwell, Robert C. Hunter, William Horton, Jr., Edward W. Brewster, Robert Deniston, Walter Halsey, Wm. W. Brooks, A. M. Brewster, Moses Ostrander, R. Bell, Moses Ely.

VII.—CHURCHES.

For a long period after its settlement there was but one church in the township. Some eight or nine buildings for worship have within sixty years been erected within the bounds of the original Blooming-Grove parish. This town is to a marked degree both moral and religious. The strong character of its early settlers, their reverence for Christian institutions, their practical piety, their belief in faith and works, have left an abiding influence for good upon their children and successors.

"The first house for worship in Blooming-Grove was built in 1759 by immigrants chiefly from Suffolk Co., L. I.," who, on their arrival here, organized themselves into a religious congregation, calling the Rev. Enos Ayres to be their pastor. He ministered to the people in holy things until his death in 1762.

In 1764 the parish called as his successor the Rev. Abner Reeve, father of the celebrated Judge Reeve who founded the law school at Litchfield, Conn. Mr. Reeve served the people some four years, when resigning, the Rev. Amariah Lewis supplied the pulpit for twelve months. Then, as supplies, we find that the Rev. Mr. Case, Mr. Greene, and Rev. Silas Constant occupied the pulpit for several years.

In 1768 the Rev. Samuel Parkhurst came to preach for the people, sickened and died, and was buried by the side of the first pastor, their graves being to this day underneath the church edifice, as is also the mortal remains of Rev. Benoni Bradner, who became pastor in June, 1786, and died 1804, in the seventy-first year of his age.

The Rev. Joel T. Benedict preached a short time, and was succeeded by Rev. Noah Crane, who was pastor until 1811. In November of this year Rev. William Rafferty was called to occupy the pulpit. Mr. Rafferty was pastor until 1815, when he resigned, having been elected president of St. John's College, Annapolis, Md. In 1830, being on a visit to Blooming-Grove, he suddenly died, and was buried near the church, in the family cemetery now the property of Mr. B. C. Sears.

The Rev. Luther Halsey, Jr., was called to the pastorate of the church in 1815, and remained until 1824. During his ministry there occurred in the parish great revivals of religion. As the fruits of one of these spiritual awakenings, more than a hundred members were added to the church. Dr. Halsey left Blooming-Grove to accept a professorship in Nassau Hall. Subsequently he became professor of theology at Allegheny Seminary, and also during his long life he was a teacher in Auburn and in Union Theological Seminaries. He died at Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 2, 1880, being nearly eighty-seven years of age. In 1823, during Mr. Halsey's pastorate, the church edifice that had served the congregation for more than sixty years was replaced by the present large, plain, substantial building.

The Rev. James Arbuckle, pastor of the Eighth

Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, was called to the vacant pulpit, and entered upon his labors here in October, 1824. By his rare ability as a preacher, his sterling qualities as a man, and his fearless search after truth, Mr. Arbuckle soon took a strong hold upon the community. He wielded a wide influence, serving the people as a most popular and acceptable religious teacher until his sudden death in July, 1847. During the ministry of Mr. Arbuckle the society purchased about six acres of land adjoining the church lot, upon which, in 1838, suitable buildings were erected, thus furnishing a convenient and pleasant home for the pastor. It was also during the ministry of Mr. Arbuckle that the church which had been nominally Presbyterian became Independent. Indeed, there is little room to doubt, from its records and traditions, that this society, notwithstanding its corporate name, had always been strictly Congregational in all its religious and temporal affairs; "never having formally connected itself with any Presbytery, or with any other ecclesiastical body." But from various causes the church now ceased to be even nominally Presbyterian; and openly, boldly assumed a position of independence, that, though now quite common, being held by some of our most widely-known churches and ministers, was then almost without precedent.

It should be added that when the society became incorporated in 1806, under the law of 1801, the corporate name was "The First Presbyterian Congregation of Blooming-Grove." Under this title its records were kept, and its property was held until November, 1870, when the congregation unanimously voted to change this, so that name and polity might correspond; and also voted that the name should be hereafter "The Congregational Church of Blooming-Grove."

In 1847 the church called Rev. Ebenezer Mason, youngest son of the celebrated John Mitchell Mason, D.D., of New York. Mr. Mason, after editing his father's works, had been preaching in Paris, and he hesitated for a time between this rural, quiet field of labor, and returning to mission work in that great social metropolis. He decided in favor of the country parish. But his labors soon ended—all too soon as it would seem to us, for after serving the people for one year he died and was gathered to his fathers.

For some time after the death of Mr. Mason the church depended upon supplies. But in April, 1851, the congregation called Rev. Austin Craig, of Peapack, N. J. Mr. Craig was a young man of rare gifts and powers, of studious habits, and most loving and reverent spirit. He served the parish with its entire approbation for fourteen years, when he resigned to accept the presidency of Antioch College, Ohio. It is a little remarkable that so many of the pastors of Blooming-Grove have been called from its pulpit to occupy important positions in institutions of learning, and have filled these stations so usefully and honorably. Dr. Craig is now president of a theological or Biblical school in Stanfordville, Dutchess Co., N. Y.

In April, 1866, the Rev. Warren Hathaway entered upon his labors, which have been continued until the present time.

This old church is one of the moral landmarks of the county. Its complete history is to a great extent the history of this town; and in some respects it is a representative parish, showing the changes and the progress that mark American life and development during the last one hundred and fifty years.

The Blooming-Grove congregation is independent, yet evangelical, and in cordial sympathy with all neighboring churches; and is still, as for a hundred years, earnestly laboring for the practical and the vital in the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The congregation have neither church debt nor church fund. All expenses for maintaining public worship are met by contributions freely and generously made by the people, who are strongly attached to the church of their fathers, and who feel that the parent church of Blooming-Grove is still their religious home.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF BLOOMING-GROVE made a legal organization at the meeting-house, April 19, 1806. The trustees chosen were Job Sayre, John Tuthill, John B. Horton, Richard Goldsmith, Nathan H. White, Samuel Strong, Phineas Tuthill, Anselm Helm, and Hezekiah Howell, Jr.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF WASHINGTON-VILLE,

at a meeting held in the academy Aug. 21, 1851, executed a certificate of incorporation. The proceedings were signed by Henry Belden, moderator, and the trustees chosen were Asahel Coleman, James Curtis, Charles Gregg, DeWitt C. Thompson, and Samuel C. Marvin. By this organization a house of worship was erected at Washingtonville, and afterwards sold to the Methodists.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF WASHINGTON-VILLE effected a legal organization April 5, 1848. The proceedings were signed by John Jaques, Charles A. Hulse. The trustees chosen were David H. Moffatt, Sr., John Jaques, Charles A. Hulse, Walter Halsey, Edmund S. Howell, James Thorp, Charles S. Pitts. This church was constituted earlier than the above date of incorporation, as shown in the following account, furnished by Orrin C. Jaques, one of the elders of the church:

The First Presbyterian Church of Washingtonville was organized Aug. 10, 1841, by a committee of the Hudson Presbytery (New School), consisting of Revs. William Timlow, chairman, Isaac C. Beach, minister, and Elders Samuel T. Scott and Moses Sawyer. At the organization 21 persons became members by letter and one by profession of faith, viz.: David

H. Moffatt, Sr., Charles Gregg, James White, Charles A. Hulse, Sarah F. Hulse, Warren Halsey, William H. Rumsey, Obadiah Rumsey, Mrs. Julia Ann Parker, Mrs. Esther Reeve, Miss Ann Reeve, Miss Almira L. Many, Mrs. Huldah C. Satterly, Mrs. Lydia Breed, Mrs. Elizabeth Halsey, Miss Abigail Curtis, Mrs. Chloe Howser, Mrs. Rachel Rumsey, Mrs. Louisa Moffatt, Solon Halsey, James Curtis, and William H. Forbes. David H. Moffatt, Sr., Charles Gregg, Charles A. Hulse, and Warren Halsey were elected elders. The last three were ordained by the chairman, D. H. Moffatt having been a ruling elder at the church at Bethlehem, N. Y. All were regularly installed. The Rev. William Timlow preached the sermon of the occasion, and Rev. William Beach gave the charge to the church and elders. The Rev. Henry Belden having been engaged in ministerial labor since May 1st last, preparatory to an organization, was continued as stated supply. In October, assisted by Rev. William Hull, a protracted meeting was held, resulting in an addition of 18 members. At the following communion season, November 14th, and during the next year to Nov. 13, 1842, 18 more members were added. At the communion season, Feb. 12, 1843, as the result of a second revival effort, assisted by the Rev. Almon Underwood and his elder, Mr. Gregory, 61 persons united by profession and 2 by letter. The fruit of this revival subsequently furnished four elders from one family. The membership at this time numbered 121. June 25, 1843, Nathan Strong and John Jaques, Sr., were elected and installed ruling elders. In April, 1844, after a service of three years, the Rev. Henry Belden closed his labors with the church by his request.

The following November, 1844, supplies having been furnished by the Presbytery of Hudson, the Rev. Phineas Robinson, of the same Presbytery, was called as stated supply. In January, 1847, the membership was 124. At this time 36 members were dismissed to organize a Congregational Church in Washingtonville, under the ministry of Rev. Henry Belden, the house of which was afterwards burned and the society disbanded. The ministerial labors of Rev. P. Robinson were closed, after a period of three years, in November, 1847, by his retirement. Up to this time the congregation had steadily worshipped in the district academy. In 1847 the present church edifice, size 36 by 60 feet, having a tower and bell, was erected at a cost of about $5250, under a board of seven trustees, viz.: David H. Moffatt, Sr., John Jaques, Sr., Charles A. Hulse, Walter Halsey, Edmund S. Howell, James Thorp, and Charles S. Pitts. The first three named were also the three ruling elders. A building committee of seven was also constituted,—David H. Moffatt, Sr., John Jaques, Sr., Charles A. Hulse, James Thorp, John Nicoll, Frederick H. Brewster, and Charles E. Brooks, to which John I. Brooks was afterwards added. The first three named were made a sub-committee. The carpenter and builder was John Mo-bray, and the mason James White. The building lot, containing one-half an acre, was presented by Charles E. and F. B. Brooks. The dedication service was held by a committee of the Hudson Presbytery (New School) August, 1848, Rev. Daniel T. Wood giving the sermon.

In January, 1848, Rev. Luther Halsey, D.D., of the Presbytery of Elizabeth (O.S.), and then Professor of Biblical History in Union Theological Seminary, New York, became stated supply. June 20, 1854, the trustees and congregation purchased a parsonage, with seven acres of land attached, costing $2000, five acres of which were appropriated for cemetery purposes. Oct. 5, 1865, Dr. Halsey declared the pulpit vacant, and retired from his ministerial charge of nearly eight years. The second division of the congregation, now numbering about 85 communicants, occurred on the question of New and Old School relationship. From this division resulted the organization and building of the present Second Presbyterian church at Washingtonville, for Rev. Dr. Halsey. Church supplies were again furnished by the Hudson Presbytery for the following six months. Feb. 7, 1857, three ruling elders were elected,—Robert Denniston, a former elder of the church at Bethlehem, N. Y., and James Thorp and John Jaques, Jr., from the membership,—and were duly installed. On July 27, 1858, the Rev. Daniel Higbie, of the Rockaway Presbytery, New Jersey, having for a time supplied the pulpit, was called to the pastorate, and was duly installed on August 24th following, sermon by Rev. James Wood, charge to the pastor by Rev. E. R. Fairchild, D.D., to the people by Rev. O. M. Johnson, all of the Presbytery of Hudson. During this pastorate, in November, 1864, the trustees and congregation purchased about seven acres of land adjoining and additional to the former cemetery, costing $2293, the whole now containing about 12 acres, and numbering about 334 plots. Oct. 20, 1867, the pastoral relation of Rev. D. Higbie, extending over a period of nine years, closed by his decease. The number of communicants was about 60.

March 13, 1868, the Rev. John V. Griswold, from Union Theological Seminary of New York, was called to the vacant pastorate, and duly ordained and installed July 16th following by a committee from Hudson Presbytery; sermon by Rev. Thomas Nicolls, charge to the pastor by Rev. George Pierson, to the people by Rev. Augustus Seward, D.D., all of Presbytery of Hudson. September 23d following three additional ruling elders were elected from the membership and duly installed,—John C. Warner, Owen C. Jaques, and Augustus Denniston. The third revival took place in the winter of 1868-69,—the pastor was aided by the evangelist, Rev. O. Parker,—resulting in an addition of 37 members. This pastorate continued about three years, and was dissolved in May, 1871, by mutual consent. The whole number of communicants was about 86.

July 1, 1871, the Rev. James B. Beaumont, of the Presbytery of Chemung, having been invited to supply the pulpit, was called July 27th to the pastoral office, and November 9th following was duly installed pastor by a committee of the United Presbytery of Hudson. The sermon of installation was given by Rev. William D. Snodgrass, D.D., charge to the pastor by Rev. Augustus Seward, D.D., to the people by Rev. George Pierson. In the summer of 1872 the congregation, through their committee, built a new and neat parsonage dwelling—size of main building 30 by 30 feet, with extension 24 by 16 feet—at a cost of about $3600, adjoining the former one owned by them, and afterwards sold.

Aug. 30, 1878, three additional ruling elders were elected from the membership, viz.: Hector Moffatt, Charles Jaques, and Charles G. Cooper, and duly ordained and installed.

At this writing, Nov. 1, 1880, the church is united and prosperous, under the pastorate of the past nine years. The present number of communicants is 119. A flourishing Sabbath-school, with 125 enrolled members under the care of the Session, with an elder for superintendent, is held through the whole year; gives monthly collections for missions. The stated weekly prayer-meeting is well sustained, also the annual week of prayer service is observed, as recommended by the Evangelical Alliance.

The eldership consists of five members,—Oren C. Jaques, Augustus Denniston, Hector Moffatt, Charles Jaques, and Charles G. Cooper. The board of nine trustees, divided in three classes, are elected for three years,—Augustus Denniston, Hector Moffatt, Charles G. Cooper, Morris G. Conklin, David Belknap, Franklin Mulliner, William R. Brooks, James B. Howell, and Charles M. Hulse. The congregation owns a good church edifice and parsonage property combined, worth $10,000 free from indebtedness; it also owns the Washingtonville Cemetery, incorporated, and under control of the board of trustees. A collection for missions is taken on the first Sabbath of each month, aggregating the last year $353, and divided pro rata among the eight mission boards, as recommended by the General Assembly. The ladies of the congregation have sustained a missionary society for the last eleven years.

Of the original members there are three living,—Charles A. Hulse, Sarah F. Hulse, and Almira L. (Many) Reed; of the board of trustees two,—C. A. Hulse and E. S. Howell; of the building committee one.

THE WASHINGTONVILLE OLD-SCHOOL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, now known as "The Second Presbyterian Church," was incorporated Feb. 15, 1858. The certificate was signed by John Wise and Alexander McCann. The trustees named therein were John Nicoll, Charles H. Thompson, Elliot Strong, Edmund S. Howell, Joshua R. Smith, Henry L. Genung, Albert Denniston. The church had been constituted during the previous year, 1857, Rev. Luther Halsey acting as pastor. The house of worship was built in 1858. Its dimensions are 50 by 36. It has a vestibule, a tower, and a bell, the whole costing about $3500.

A parsonage was built in 1871 at a cost of $5000. Ministers: Rev. Luther Halsey, 1857-63; Rev. Arthur Harlow, 1863-71; Rev. B. G. Benedict, 1872-75; Rev. N. W. Sherwood, 1875 to the present time. The elders at the organization were John Wise, Dr. Marcus Sears, Alexander McCann, Elliot Strong, John Smith, Edmund S. Howell. The Sunday-school numbers 98; communicants, 118. The present elders are Edmund S. Howell, Benjamin C. Sears, Henry L. Genung, J. Wilson Brown.

THE OXFORD METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH effected a legal organization April 8, 1835. The proceedings were signed by Hiram Tuthill and Benjamin T. Tuthill. The trustees chosen were David Bull, Hiram Tuthill, Benjamin T. Tuthill, David Smith, and William Sikerly. A house of worship was built about that time a mile south of what is now Oxford Station. Meetings were held for some years, but the enterprise was abandoned.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH AT GRANVILLE

made a legal organization at their regular place of worship Feb. 26, 1838. The proceedings were signed by Rev. Seymour Landon, pastor, and the trustees chosen were Nathaniel Clark, Townsend Mapes, Wines Mapes, Samuel Cooley, James Hawley. We have no account of this organization. If it is correctly placed in this chapter, it relates to some one of the numerous neighborhood organizations made by the Methodist Church, and whose work in later years was concentrated at the larger villages.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF CRAIGVILLE executed a certificate of incorporation Nov. 14, 1849. The proceedings were signed by A. C. Fields and Hiram Tuthill. The trustees chosen were James P. Howell, James W. Wyatt, Hiram Tuthill, Samuel Cooley, Peter B. Taylor, Wm. Montgomery, Nathan H. Strong. This society built a house of worship. Considerable Methodist work was done in this neighborhood in early times. In the abandonment of the factories and the scattering of the population which was once gathered there the society diminished in numbers. No regular society exists there at the present time. The effort was continued some years, and it appears that the society executed another certificate Dec. 7, 1857. It was signed by Valentine Seaman and William H. Hughes. The trustees chosen were Valentine Seaman, William H. Hughes, Lucas L. Shaffer, James P. Howell, Wm. Oldfield. The society was virtually united with Chester in 1879. Valentine Seaman was the last class-leader at this point. Methodist work thus ceased at a point where they had kindled their altar-fires sixty years ago. (See Methodist Church of Goshen.)

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF SALISBURY MILLS

executed a certificate of incorporation Feb. 24, 1854. The proceedings were signed by Isaac K. Oakley and Andrew C. Fields. The trustees chosen were James S. Shapter, Isaac K. Oakley, Richard Caldwell, Peter D. Calyer, and Wm. H. Taylor. This is connected with the Washingtonville Methodist Church under the same pastor, Rev. Pascal P. Harrower. The following article is furnished by the pastor:

"It was long felt by the inhabitants of the village of Salisbury Mills that a more convenient place of worship should be provided than the one that had been used, and at different times it was proposed to build a more suitable place of worship, and some action was taken to carry it into effect at different periods, but the responsibility of the undertaking was declined when it was offered. After eighteen years or more after the first drawings and subscriptions were presented by one of the oldest inhabitants of the village, John Caldwell, Esq., the Rev. Andrus Field, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the New Windsor Circuit, called a meeting to form a society in the village, Jan. 26, 1854, when a church was organized by the following members: Isaac K. Oakley, Christina Oakley, Peter D. Calyer, Jane Calyer, Wm. H. Taylor, and Sarah Taylor, when steps were taken to organize and incorporate the Methodist Episcopal Church of Salisbury Mills, after which the present edifice was erected and dedicated, March 20, 1855 to the worship of Almighty God by the Rev. Dr. Wakeley, of the Newburgh district. Since then services have been regularly held. The charge has sometimes been in connection with that of Vail's Gate, sometimes with that of Mountainville, and at present with the charge at Washingtonville.

"The present officers are: Pastor, Rev. Pascal P. Harrower; Trustees, Isaac K. Oakley, W. Taylor, A. W. Taylor, John F. Clauser, and Eugene Smith; Stewards, A. W. Taylor, John F. Clauser, and Eugene Smith; Sunday-school Superintendent, A. W. Taylor; communicants, —; Sunday-school attendance, 48.

"There is a fair library for the use of the school."

THE BLOOMING-GROVE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

executed a certificate of incorporation Dec. 3, 1855. The proceedings were signed by Jeremiah Millard and Jesse T. Hotchkiss. The trustees chosen were Henry Still, Lemuel Pembleton, Thomas Cloyd, Henry F. Breed, and Dr. Jesse T. Hotchkiss. This is the Washingtonville Church. Rev. Pascal Harrower is the present pastor, preaching for both this church and the one at Salisbury Mills. The following article is furnished by the pastor:

"The church edifice was built originally by a Congregational society, under the pastorate of Wm. Belden. He had a great revival, from which there went to the Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal societies a large number of converts. Owing to the anti-slavery excitement and other causes Mr. Belden left, and was succeeded for a short time by Mr. Hemming, a Wesleyan Methodist of England. He was lost by shipwreck on a visit to England. After his death the church was closed until purchased, in January, 1855, by the Methodists, who had worshiped for years in the school-house.

"The first pastor was Jeremiah Millard, who superintended the purchase of the property. He was followed by D. B. Turner, under whom, in the winter of 1856-57, a large revival occurred. The circuit included Monroe, Oxford, Craigville, Highland Mills, and Washingtonville.

"Among the first members of the society in the new church were Esther B. Howell, Henry Still, William L. Miller, Lucy Miller, Daniel Giles, Hannah Giles, Lemuel Pembleton, Mary Pembleton, Thomas Cloyd, William Cloyd, Benj. Stevens, Peter Bernier, Louisa Mix.

"The Rev. Nathan Rice, a retired clergyman, with his wife and family, moved into Washingtonville the year before the purchase of the church, and after his death the daughter established a school, which was successful for many years.

"The original trustees were Henry Still, Lemuel Pembleton, Thomas Cloyd, Henry F. Breed, Jesse T. Hotchkiss.

"In 1867, under Mr. Hand, Washingtonville and Craigville were united in a separate circuit. Before the expiration of the Conference year Mr. Hand died, and B. N. Lewis followed him as pastor in charge.

"After this Washingtonville was a separate charge with resident pastors, among whom were D. B. Turner, David Heroy, R. L. Shurter, Joel Craft, J. T. Hargrave. In 1878, under Wm. Colden, Salisbury Mills was taken from the old New Windsor Circuit and united with Washingtonville. He was succeeded in 1880 by Pascal P. Harrower.

"The present officers are: Trustees, Springsted Owen, Robert Wright,* W. B. Westervelt, Wm. Smith, John Brooks; Stewards, R. L. Talbot, H. Nelson Green, Marvin Denniston. Number of communicants, 70; Sunday-school, 75; Sunday-school Superintendent, R. L. Talbot."

THE SATTERLY-TOWN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

effected a legal organization Dec. 4, 1855. The proceedings were signed by Nathan Strong and Jeremiah Millard. The trustees chosen were Nathan Strong, Nathaniel Clark, John Campbell, Isaac Still, Franklin Bull. This society built a house of worship, and services were held for some years, but the appointment was afterwards discontinued.

FRIENDS' MEETING-HOUSE.

This is situated in the extreme south corner of the town, near the Monroe line, and in school district No. 7. For interesting items of Friends' meetings in this county see General History, also chapters upon Cornwall.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

Gray Court Cemetery not only has an old name, but is an old burial-place. It is mentioned in the article upon Chester, but it is within the limits of Blooming-Grove. Northeast of Craigville is a cemetery near the Mrs. Heard place. North from the old Blooming-Grove church, in the Stewart neighborhood, is a burial-place. At Washingtonville is a large modern cemetery, placed under good management. There are also various other burial-places in the town. Little historical data can, however, be gleaned from them, as burials in the early years were so seldom designated by stones with inscriptions.

IX.—TOWN SOCIETIES, LIBRARIES, INCORPORATIONS, Etc.

THE FARMERS' CREAMERY ASSOCIATION OF BLOOMING-GROVE

was organized about five years since. The present board of trustees, January, 1881, consists of Hon. Augustus Denniston, president and treasurer; Morris C. Tuthill, secretary; Daniel R. Hudson, general superintendent; W. H. Hallock, S. L. Moffatt, R. A. Goldsmith, Thomas W. Brooks.

Those who are either Masons or Odd-Fellows in Blooming-Grove belong to lodges at Chester or Newburgh. Several temperance organizations have from time to time contributed their efforts to develop a healthy public sentiment on this question. In connection with the churches are also the usual missionary or charitable associations.*

THE LIBRARY SOCIETY OF BLOOMING-GROVE effected a legal organization Jan. 16, 1806. The trustees named in the certificate were Noah Crane, Hezekiah Howell, Jr., Nathan H. White, Daniel Brewster, Job Sayre, Samuel Strong, Jr., and Phineas Tuthill. The paper was verified by Daniel Steward before Judge John Leonard, January 25th. This is one of those early efforts made in different parts of the county to provide good reading. The books selected for those early libraries were usually works of a solid historical character, instead of the innumerable "stories" which in these modern times are so popular.

THE SALISBURY MILLS MANUFACTURING COMPANY of Blooming-Grove executed a certificate of incorporation April 12, 1867. The object stated was to manufacture and sell writing-paper and other materials connected therewith. The capital invested was $250,000, divided into 500 shares. The trustees named in the certificate were Francis B. O'Connor, Edward C. Brooks, Charles A. Coe, Charles H. O'Connor, Charles W. Bangs. This certificate, from the records in the office of the county clerk, shows the names and the date connected with the founding of the paper-mill, mentioned elsewhere.

X.—PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR OF SPECIAL NOTE.

TOWN-MEETINGS OF THE PERIOD 1765 TO 1797 were at the house of John Brewster, Sr., and John Brewster, Jr., and the records were kept by them during that long period. The site of John Brewster's house may therefore with great propriety be considered a place of considerable interest. At that place there must have been earnest discussions in those town-meetings of the Revolution. If there were not long speeches there were many "talks," short, sharp, and decisive.

Committees of Safety were appointed there. The machinery of local government was steadily kept in running order at John Brewster's, despite the fact that national allegiance was becoming an uncertain affair. Constables elected at John Brewster's, executed writs with but little authority for a time save the voice of the people of Cornwall assembled in annual town-meeting at John Brewster's. So strong and steady is the American system of local government by towns that the records of the Cornwall meetings show no trace of passing under three different forms of national government,—the colonial, the Confederation, the Constitution.

WIGWAM OF MARINGAMUS.

Of the location of this important landmark Mr. George W. Tuthill, of Blooming-Grove, wrote, June 29, 1858, as follows:

"The Otterkill stream, after passing the eastern line of Mompesson's Patent at the village of Washingtonville, assumes the name of or is called Murderer's Creek. On the northwesterly bank of said creek, about half a mile below Washingtonville, stands the dwelling-house of Henry Page (a colored man), said to be the site of Maringamus' wigwam. The southwesterly corner of the Rip Van Dam Patent is in a southwesterly direction from said Page's house, and the beginning of said patent is described as being on a certain course and at a certain distance from Maringamus' wigwam. The corner of the Van Dam Patent has never been in dispute, and I have never had occasion to ascertain whether the reputed location of Maringamus' wigwam will correspond with the description, but suppose it to be true. Henry Page bought of John I. Brooks, and the whole was formerly owned by Vincent Matthews. No patent ever cornered at the Maringamus wigwam. It was on the patent of 3000 acres granted to Rip Van Dam."

The writer of the above was for a long time a practical surveyor in the town of Blooming-Grove, and his conclusions may be regarded as of unquestioned authority. At the present time (January, 1881) Henry Page still resides at the same point, and the matter is susceptible of easy investigation by means of Mr. Tuthill's letter and the statements already made respecting the patents of Blooming-Grove.

There is but little account of this Indian chief. He was, however, one of the original grantors of this territory to the whites. He lived, it appears, on the rich alluvial plain around the bend of the Otterkill. Maringamus Castle is to be distinguished from his wigwam. His castle was on the northern extremity of the Schunemunk Mountains, and near the present boundary line between Cornwall and Blooming-Grove. From that elevated position he could overlook the valley where his wigwam was built, the Cloves south and southwest, the Highlands near the river, and all the surrounding country. In times of peace he lived beside the winding stream; in times of war he could gather with his braves on the fortified mountain-height and bid defiance to his enemies.†

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

This town having valuable water-power within its limits, several manufacturing establishments have existed from time to time, and several are yet in operation, as already mentioned in connection with the villages. Two or three not in the villages may still be added. Nathaniel Woodhull had a creamery for many years, and it is still carried on by his widow. He was a noted milk-dealer, and transacted a large business. William Jackson has a mill on the creek sometimes called Satterly's. The latter name arises not from the Satterly mills, which are on another stream, but from an early Satterly homestead near the Jackson mill. The mill was originally the Coleman property, and the neighborhood was known as Colemantown. L. M. Wilcox has a saw-mill and a grist-mill half a mile below Craigville. Blooming-

Grove has many excellent farms. The direct shipment of milk has changed the style of farming very much in late years. Farmers have the opportunity of shipment at Salisbury, Washingtonville, Craigville, and at the milk-station between the last two.

XII.—MILITARY.

The chapters of the General History will be found very complete upon early military matters in this section, and reference is made to them for the names of officers and men serving in the war of the Revolution from this town, and for interesting incidents relating to that struggle.

OFFICIAL ACTION, WAR OF 1861-65.

At a special meeting duly called to consider the question of paying bounties to soldiers, and held Aug. 6, 1864, it was presided over by two justices of the peace, and in the absence of the town clerk, Henry S. Brewster was chosen clerk pro tem. The Committee on Resolutions consisted of Robert Denniston, Dr. Marcus Sears, Jesse Bull, F. W. Stewart, Jesse Woodhull. The resolutions reported were adopted unanimously. They provided for raising the sum of $30,500. The bounty to each volunteer was fixed at $500 for three years' men, the sum of $50 in addition to be paid to any person securing a recruit. The town board was appointed a committee and placed in full charge, with ample authority to carry out the objects of the meeting. At another special meeting held September 2d of the same year an additional sum of $10,000 was authorized to be raised, and the bounty was increased to $850, and allowed to men enlisting for one year.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

ISAAC K. OAKLEY.

John Oakley, the paternal ancestor of Isaac K. Oakley, came from England, settled as a farmer in Suffolk Co., L. I., when it was under the Dutch rule, and continued his residence there until his death. His name is recorded in the "History of Long Island" as acting, with others, on March 24, 1702, in defending the Quakers from persecution, and later, in opposing the same persecution, in defiance of the threats of the ruling officers of the government. He married into a Knickerbocker family of Brooklyn, and became the father of a numerous family. Some of his children settled in Huntington, L. I., others in New York, Richmond, Dutchess, and Orange Cos., N. Y. Many of the present families of Suffolk County can trace their ancestry back to John Oakley.

Among his grandchildren was Samuel, of whom it is recorded that during the Revolutionary war he was pressed into the British service, with his team and cattle, and robbed of the products of his farm, leaving his family in extreme poverty and want. He married Sally Wood, of Huntington, by whom he had four sons,—Richard, Timothy, Jacob, and Solomon—and four daughters.

Timothy, the second son, and the father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Huntington, Jan. 28, 1772. He first married Polly Brush, daughter of Zophar Brush, of Huntington. After her death he married Sally, daughter of Isaac Ketcham, also of Huntington. She died at Salisbury Mills, N. Y., April 10, 1833. Later, he again married, selecting for the third time a wife in Huntington,—Prudence Mather. Her decease occurred in 1864. His children were Zophar B., merchant, of Huntington; Samuel, merchant, of New York; Lewis, physician, of Owego, N. Y.; Isaac K.; Timothy, merchant, of St. Louis, Mo.; Jesse, manufacturer, of New York; Mary, who married Reuben Van Alen, of Chatham, Columbia Co., N. Y.; and Sally W., who married Dr. John Vanderpoel, of Kinderhook, N. Y.

Timothy Oakley moved to New Windsor, Orange Co., in 1795, and engaged in mercantile pursuits. While there he purchased a farm, mill, and store at New Vernon, on the Shawangunk Kill. In 1801 he disposed of his business interests in Orange County, and in 1802 removed to Chatham, Columbia County, N. Y., where he purchased a farm and established a mercantile business. In 1813, in company with a young man from England, he erected at Kinderhook one of the earliest cotton-mills built in the State. As anticipated, they met with and had to overcome the usual difficulties connected with a new enterprise. As a business undertaking it succeeded, and demonstrated the utility of American cotton-cloth manufactures. This success influenced others to build more extensive mills throughout the county, and helped to educate the American people in that practical knowledge so essential to national prosperity. He continued the business of manufacturing for some years, and then, disposing of it, gave his whole attention to agriculture, both theoretical and practical. In 1823 he purchased the mills at Salisbury Mills, and formed a partnership with his two sons, Samuel and Isaac K., and carried on a mercantile and milling business.

After some years Samuel returned to New York City, where he became a partner in an extensive business; Isaac K. engaged in the tanning business at Highland Mills, but later purchased the Salisbury Mills property; and Timothy, the father, retired from active business, making his residence at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, where he died Dec. 26, 1844.

Timothy Oakley was supervisor of the town in which he lived for thirteen consecutive years; a member of the Assembly at the beginning of the war of 1812; a firm friend of internal improvements, and the warm friend of the Erie Canal in the early discussions of that measure; a man of recognized integrity and good executive ability; notably persistent in working out the success of his plans; and by profession and practice a Christian. Prudence and fitness were leading traits in his character. His own experience and knowledge of political life led him to regard it with disfavor, and to express a wish to his sons that they would not enter it.

Isaac K. Oakley was born in Chatham, Columbia Co., N. Y., May 27, 1802. He attended school at Chatham, Kinderhook, and Farmers' Hall Academy, at Goshen, this county. At the age of seventeen years, having a desire for a business rather than an agricultural life, he went to Nassau, Rensselaer Co., where he learned the leather and tanning trade. He was afterwards associated with his father and brother, as heretofore stated, in mercantile and milling business. He remained there two years, and then built a tannery at Highland Mills, which he carried on successfully. After the death of his mother, in 1833, he purchased the Salisbury Mills property of his father, and continued the business at that place. In 1834 he built a flouring- and plaster-mill at Salisbury Mills, and soon after a paper-mill. In 1835 he disposed of the tannery at Highland Mills to Joshua T. Cromwell. In 1853, to extend his paper business, he built the paper-mill on the Quassaick Creek, operated it until 1866, and then sold it to Prince & Adams. He also sold the Salisbury Mills property the same year, excepting the farming lands or homestead portion, which he retained for his future residence. In 1872 he became a special partner with his brother Jesse in the Oakley Soap-Works at Newburgh. He was chosen a director of the Quassaick Bank, of Newburgh, in 1854, has ever since been officially connected with that institution, and since 1876 has been its president.

He married Christina, daughter of Lucas I. and Maria (Pruyn) Van Alen, of Kinderhook, on Feb. 1, 1827, and their children are Lucas, died in infancy; Timothy, died young; Lucas and John, both of whom are now connected with the Oakley Soap-Works at Newburgh; and Sarah Maria, who died young. His wife Christina died at Salisbury Mills, Feb. 15, 1866, beloved by all who knew her. On the 9th of September, 1873, he married Sarah E., daughter of Thomas and Catherine (Jones) Oakley, of Minisink. The present Mrs. Oakley is a granddaughter of John Oakley, who was connected with the American army under Washington at the time of its encampment near Newburgh, and who, after the army was disbanded, married and settled at Minisink.

Mr. Oakley has been an active business man for more than half a century,—a period reaching back to a time when the country was more thinly settled, business modes different, communication slow and often difficult. During this period the nation has passed through two wars and several financial panics of serious character and disastrous results. Through it all his business ventures have been uniformly successful, showing that his ability is of the best order, justifying the confidence so generally reposed in him in that respect.

As a citizen his voice and influence are always found on the right side of virtue and good government. Practicing industry, he commends it to others, regarding it an important source of health and happiness, a safeguard from vice, and in its providence for the future elevating men to a higher conception of their duty to themselves, their families, and fellow-men. His abilities, combined with a long and eventful life, make him a good judge of men. He respects sincere convictions, especially those relating to religion, and esteems those whose lives run parallel thereto. Few men in the county are better known or more respected.

CAPT. THOMAS N. HULSE.

His paternal grandfather, Gilbert, was born on Long Island, and settled in Wallkill, Orange Co., N. Y., about the year 1800. James W. and Sarah, who married Hugh Scofield, were his children.

James W., the father of Capt. Hulse, was born on Long Island, Aug. 17, 1770. When a young man he came to Orange County, and settled in Blooming-Grove, on the farm which has since been the Hulse homestead. By trade he was a tanner and currier, and owned a tannery on the homestead, and for his day did a large business in his line. He married Rachel Nicholson, of Orange County, whose father was an officer in the Revolutionary war, and was under Arnold at Quebec and at the battle of Saratoga.

Their children were William, deceased; Maria, deceased; Gilbert W., who was a surgeon in the Indian war under Gen. Scott, and after the war settled in practice at the Grand Gulf, Miss. He subsequently purchased the Lake Land plantation, formerly owned by Col. Taylor, in Louisiana, upon which he remained until the late civil war, when he came North; Thomas N.; and Elizabeth, who married Benjamin Moffat and resides in Illinois. James W. Hulse died in Blooming-Grove, Feb. 18, 1813.

Capt. Thomas N. Hulse was born on the homestead in Blooming-Grove, Oct. 31, 1810. His father dying when he was but a mere boy, he was early thrown upon his own resources. At the age of eight he commenced work, and his "school of experience" was severe and varied from his youth upward. In 1835, having a taste for navigation, he commenced life on the Hudson River as a clerk on the steamboat "Telegraph," running from Sing Sing to New York. This was the commencement of an active and successful business life on the Hudson which continued for twenty-five successive years. In 1840 he went on the "People's Line" between Albany and New York, and soon afterwards became captain of such well-known boats as the "South America," "Hendrick Hudson," "Francis Skiddy," and "North America." The passengers on the Hudson River boats in those days well remember the face and figure of Capt. Thomas N. Hulse. From 1849 until 1860, Capt. Hulse had charge of the entire floating property of the Erie Railroad, consisting of steamboats, barges, etc. He was also interested in and managed the boat "Thomas Powell" for a time. The last line boat of which he acted as captain was the "Francis Skiddy." There are but few men living in Orange County who so successfully represent the business life of a Hudson River steamboat as Capt. Thomas N. Hulse. During this period his home was in New York City, but in 1862, having resigned his position, he removed to the homestead in Blooming-Grove, where he has since resided. He has paid some attention to farming, but of late years has led a retired life. Capt. Hulse has never courted or wished for public favor, and with the exception of being the candidate of his party for member of Assembly, a few years since, his name has never been placed before the people for their suffrages. He married Emeline Houton, of Vermont, in 1849. She died in 1876. Afterwards Capt. Hulse married Ann Eliza, widow of Edwin Hulse, and sister of Alden Goldsmith, Esq., of Blooming-Grove.

NATHANIEL D. WOODHULL.

Nathaniel D. Woodhull is a lineal descendant of Col. Jesse Woodhull, who was born at Mastic, Suffolk Co., L. I., Feb. 10, 1735, and settled at Blagg's Clove, Orange Co., about 1753, upon 500 acres of land. He married Hester, daughter of Capt. Lewis DuBois, of Orange County, by whom he had issue,—Nathaniel, Richard, Sarah, Renelihe, Hannah, Jesse, and Ebenezer. He died Feb. 4, 1795. Richard, second son of Col. Jesse Woodhull, married Hannah, daughter of Judge William Smith, and their children were Jesse, William Smith, Nathaniel DuBois, and Ruth Hester Woodhull.

Nathaniel DuBois, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born Nov. 30, 1797. He married Frances Mandevill, and their children were Richard William, Francis M., and Jacob, who died a young man. He lived and died on the Woodhull homestead in Blooming-Grove. Richard William was born Aug. 4, 1815. He married Ruth A. Strong, Dec. 14, 1837, and their children are Nathaniel D.; Adis E., a commission merchant of Chicago; Joseph Y., deceased; Jacob M.; Richard S., deceased; Ruth E., married Robert Beattie, of Little Falls, N. J.; Isabel L., died young; and Laura F., who died in infancy. Richard W., a farmer of Blooming-Grove for many years, was afterwards engaged in the milk business in New York, and resides now in Iowa.

Nathaniel D. Woodhull was born on the homestead, Sept. 27, 1838. At the age of fifteen he went to New York City with his father, who established a general milk business there about 1848. In 1860 he, with Mr. George Gouge, of Campbell Hall, Orange Co., as partner, bought out the milk business of his father, which had become established at the corner of White and Church Streets. This partnership continued until 1870, Mr. Woodhull supervising the city trade, when they dissolved partnership, Mr. Gouge retiring from the firm. In 1872 he associated with him as partner Mr. J. W. Taintor, of New York, and from this date the firm-name has been N. D. Woodhull & Co. In 1865 he bought property on North Moore Street, and established his business name there, where it has since continued. Afterwards he opened a retail milk business on Thirty-second Street, with Pierson Sanford, of Warwick, and continued this until his death, in addition to his wholesale trade. In 1864 he bought the Woodhull homestead of 423 acres, and made it his summer residence. Mr. Woodhull was an eminently successful business man. He was known as the New York City "Milk-King," and was president of the Milk Dealers' Union of New York for many years. The Goshen Republican said at his death,—

"It is with feelings of regret that we are compelled to chronicle the death of Mr. N. D. Woodhull, late of Blooming-Grove, who died in New York City, April 19, 1879. He was widely and favorably known among the farming community of this and the adjoining counties. Few men there are who possess the business shrewdness and sagacity displayed by him, by means of which he was in early life enabled to accumulate a large property."

He married Martha V., daughter of John and Betsy Andrews, of Saratoga Co., N. Y., April 16, 1862, and the fruit of this union was Edward D., George G., Jennie V., Mary L., died young; Nathaniel D., Jr., died young; Walter A., Kate C., and Charles R.

HON. NATHAN HERRICK WHITE.

His great-grandfather Ebenezer was among the earliest settlers of Long Island. Sylvanus, his son, who married Phœbe Howell and lived and died on Long Island, was a well-known Presbyterian divine of his time. He was the father of Sylvanus, Jr., who was born at Southampton, L. I., July 19, 1730, married Eunice Herrick, Oct. 10, 1754, and soon afterwards settled upon 300 acres of land at Blagg's Clove, in Orange County. This property has since been the White homestead. The children by this marriage were Phœbe, married Anselm Helme; Euphemia, died in infancy; Sylvanus, died, unmarried, at the age of thirty-three; Eunice, married Daniel Popolino; and Nathan H., the subject of this sketch. Sylvanus White, Jr., was a farmer by occupation. He died March 2, 1881, in the eighty-eighth year of his age. His wife died Feb. 24, 1818, in her eighty-fifth year. They had lived together sixty-four years.

Hon. Nathan Herrick White was born on the homestead at Blagg's Clove, June 14, 1770. His preparatory course of education was obtained at the schools in Goshen. At the age of eighteen he entered Columbia College, from which institution he was graduated in the same class with John Randolph, in the year 1791. Soon afterwards he took charge of a classical school at Montgomery, N. Y., for six years, there being then but five in the whole State. Following this he was principal of the Newburgh Academy for two years. During his teaching he cultivated his literary taste and perfected his knowledge of the ancient languages, which continued so remarkable to the close of his life. He then returned to his paternal home, but was soon called by the public voice to a seat on the bench, and for twenty years from 1802 was first judge of Orange County, the friend and associate of Kent, Van Ness, Platt, and others. In 1806 he received a commission from Governor Morgan Lewis as captain of an Orange County regiment of militia. For many years he was school commissioner of his town and a justice of the peace.

Judge White was eminently a representative man. During the recess of court his kindness of heart and knowledge of the law made him a public benefactor, and he was always ready to assist his neighbors in settling their disputes amicably. Though retiring, his conversation was singularly cheerful and brilliant. His sight was much impaired in his later years, but he retained his mental faculties perfectly until his death.

Judge White was an industrious man, and ever enjoyed himself in agricultural pursuits. He added 200 acres of land to the homestead, and there died April 10, 1855. On Dec. 8, 1802, Judge White married Frances, daughter of Hezekiah and Juliana (Woodhull) Howell, and their children are Albert S., born Oct. 24, 1803, on the homestead, and went to Indiana about 1825. He married a Miss Randolph, of Virginia. Hon. Albert Smith White was a member of Congress from Indiana for two terms, and was also United States senator for Indiana, cotemporary with Clay, Calhoun, and Webster. In 1863 he was appointed district judge of Indiana by President Lincoln, which position he held at his death, which occurred in August, 1864. The second child was Nathaniel, who died in infancy; then Morgan L., born March 17, 1806, who until within a few years has resided on the homestead owned by him; Elizabeth Howell, born Jan. 8, 1808, married Harvey Denniston, and of this marriage was born H. A. Denniston, who lives in Blooming-Grove; afterwards married John Nicoll, of New York, and died Dec.

EDMUND S. HOWELL.

His grandfather, Hezekiah Howell, came from Long Island, and settled in Orange County, at Blagg's Clove, in 1727. He there married Susanna, daughter of Job Sayre, and their children were Phebe, Jane, Hezekiah, and Charles. He died in 1785. Charles, father of Edmund S. Howell, was born at Blagg's Clove, Nov. 20, 1752. He was a farmer by occupation, and an active man. He assisted in the building of Fort Putnam, at West Point, as a member of the independent corps under Gen. George Clinton, and was also stationed with his corps on guard after the burning of Kingston. In 1785 he married a daughter of Maj. Strong, who was murdered by Claudius Smith, and the same year settled upon 150 acres of land, which is the Howell homestead in Blooming-Grove. By this marriage were Selah Strong, born March 6, 1788; and Clarissa, born July 28, 1791, who married William Strong, of Blooming-Grove. After the death of his first wife Charles Howell married, in 1802, Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Board, and their children were Charles Board, born Sept. 7, 1803, a successful practicing physician of Chester, who died April 3, 1865; Edmund Sayre, the subject of this sketch; and Joseph Henry, born Dec. 3, 1805, died Dec. 13, 1878. Charles Howell died in January, 1843, at the old homestead.

Edmund S. Howell was born in Blooming-Grove, Sept. 5, 1804, and, with the exception of fourteen years spent in New Jersey, has always lived on the homestead. His educational advantages were limited to the common schools, and his father's farm gave him employment in his youth.

On Feb. 16, 1836, he married Nancy C., daughter of James Bell, of Warwick, and their children are Mary E., married Edward Fitzgerald, and resides in Binghamton; Clarissa A., married Rev. Arthur Harlow, of Orange County; Phebe E., wife of Benjamin C. Sears; Charles H., a farmer, on the homestead; James B.; Caroline A., married Dr. George H. Sears; Harriet A.; Joseph E.; Susan E.; and Effie, deceased.

Mr. Howell is a member and elder of the Second Presbyterian Church at Washingtonville, and was one of the original movers and contributors in the building of the same. He is also one of the managers of the Orange County Bible Society for the town of Blooming-Grove. Mr. Howell is naturally of a retiring disposition, and, although interested in all that pertains to the welfare of his town and county, has never sought publicity in any way. He retains his faculties to a remarkable degree for his age, and belongs to that class of men that not only think but act. He is the last connecting-link between his generation and the one preceding him of his line of the Howell family, and is greatly respected by all who know him.

HEZEKIAH HOWELL (3).

Hezekiah Howell (3) is a lineal descendant of Edward Howell, who came from England to Massachusetts, and was made a freeman at Boston, March 4, 1639. He was one of the eight "original undertakers" who settled at Southampton in 1640, and the progenitor of the Howell family in that locality. Lieut. Hezekiah Howell was a descendant in the direct line. He married Phebe, daughter of Thomas Halsey, Sept. 10, 1702, and their children were Hezekiah, Phebe, Experience, and Jedediah.

Hezekiah (1), the grandfather of our subject, was born May 6, 1709, came to Orange County about 1734, and settled at Blagg's Clove, where, with Sylvanus White and others, he took up 2000 acres of land, a portion of which has since been the Howell homestead. He married Susanna, daughter of Job Sayre, of Orange County, in 1735, and had children, —Phebe, Jane, Hezekiah, Stephen, and Charles.

Hezekiah (2) was born on the homestead, Sept. 3, 1741. He married Juliana, daughter of Nathaniel and Sarah (Smith) Woodhull, of Mastic, L. I., and their children were Hezekiah (3), the subject of this sketch; Nathaniel W., who resided at Canandaigua, N. Y., and was a prominent lawyer and circuit judge; Susan, married Benjamin Strong, of Goshen, N. Y.; Sarah, married Abraham Shultz, of New Windsor, N. Y.; Fanny, married Judge Nathan H. White; Jane, married Judge Augustus Porter, of Niagara, who was a member of Congress in 1812, and a financial sufferer during the war of that date; and Elizabeth, married Rev. Andrew Thompson, of Rockland County, and a preacher at Nyack. Hezekiah Howell (2) was a prominent man of his time, was the first supervisor of the precinct of Cornwall, and was sheriff of Orange Co. during the Revolutionary war.

Hezekiah (3) was born on the homestead in Blooming-Grove, Aug. 21, 1768. His boyhood was spent on the farm, and he attended school at the old brick school-house in Goshen. Noah Webster, the lexicographer, chose him, while a pupil there, on account of his good voice, to give him the sound of the different vowels while compiling his dictionary. Mr. Howell was a farmer by occupation, paid some attention to stock-raising, and was an active business man. He interested himself in whatever pertained to the public good, and was one of the main men in contributing towards and building the Blooming-Grove church. In disposition he was genial, enjoyed society, and, although dignified in his bearing, was courteous to all whom he met. On Dec. 6, 1796, he married Frances, daughter of Maj. Tuthill, of Orange County, and their children were Juliana Woodhull, married Judge Robert Denniston, and died in 1825; Hezekiah,
